VOLUME XVII, PART V.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS. FIRST SESSION.

in the community is responsible and that the responsibility of this Government arises only where the case becomes too great, first for the municipality and then for the State, so that it reaches the National Government finally; so believing, I shall vote against this amendment consistently, because I have ever so voted in this body and I have ever so spoken in this body. I shall vote against this amendment, not because I am not in favor of the principle it enunciates, but because it ought not to be adopted in national legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am not very much prepossessed in favor of the proposition that Congress has the constitutional power to pass this bill, because I think that the bill presents a serious question touching the civil rights of individuals that have been heretofore left by the common law and by the spirit of our institutions to be controlled by the agreements of the men who are concerned. The power of making a contract is one of the rights of every individual in this land, which I think is about as sacred as any other that can be mentioned.

But whatever may be the power of Congress under the Constitution in regard to the control of the matters included in this bill, there can be no doubt at all of the right of Congress, and I think there can be no doubt either as to its duty, to lend its hand for the purpose of repressing crime in the United States when that crime relates to matters with which the Federal Government has a just and proper constitutional connection. To illustrate, we issue all the money in this country, we coin money, and issue bills of credit of every kind that circulate as money among the people. There can not be any doubt that for the counterfeiting of any bond, or bill, or coin that we put out as money or as a national obligation the Government of the United States has the right to punish for such counterfeiting. There is no doubt either that the government of each State in the American Union——

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. There is an express grant in the Constitution of the power to Congress to punish the counterfeiting of the coin of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no question of that. There is an expressed grant, not an implied grant at all; still there are other things that we do, which are not included in express grants, which are quite as important as that.

But I was about to state that, notwithstanding the Government of the United States has the right and duty resting upon it by express grant in the Constitution to punish counterfeiting, still it is the right and the duty of every State in the American Union to punish counterfeiting of the United States coin; and I do not believe there is a statute-book of any State or Territory that has not got upon it highly penal acts for the purpose of punishing that same offense when committed within a State. A man may be convicted by the United States courts of counterfeiting a silver dollar and be punished, and you can take him to a State court and convict him and punish him for the identical same act, one offense being against the State law and the other against the United States law, and yet the State has no right to coin money.

Now, take the subject of selling whisky without a license. We authorize under the laws of the United States the selling of whisky under license, whether by retail or by wholesale, and we punish with severe penalties men who violate the laws of the United States anywhere in this country, State, Territory, or District, in selling whisky without a license, and yet after the man is indicted, tried, and convicted for that offense, you can go into the States, and if you find there laws against the selling of whisky by wholesale or retail without a license you can convict him under the State laws for the same act. After convicting a man for selling whisky contrary to law in a United States court, you can carry him into a State court and convict him of selling the same bottle or the same quart of whisky, because it is a violation of the State law.

The States in this and a number of other cases I might refer to, such as cases of larceny from the post-office, can take jurisdiction. For instance, in the robbery of the mail. A mail-rider is going through the country unprotected, and a robber seizes the boy, it may be, and his mail-sacks and cuts them open and robs money from them. That man is liable to indictment and punishment and in some of the States to capital execution for having violated the State law in committing that robbery upon the person of that individual. Clearly he is liable also for robbery of the United States mail under the United States law; and, as I was about to observe, there are many instances where the States have found it to be their duty to maintain and support the Federal authority within their borders by enacting strong penal laws for the punishment of men who violate the United States laws there.

Now, suppose the States have laws that punish the tearing up of a railroad-track; that punish a conspiracy to stop a train from running, or any other of the great number of statutes that really exist upon the statute-books of the different States for the protection of State commerce. That is all well enough. That has its effect and its purpose—to protect commerce within the State. The United States would have no right to interfere in case of that kind, because the railroad was also employed in interstate commerce, to prevent the State from punishing such offenses. But, could it not, as in the cases I have referred to, punish the same person for the same criminal act?

This amendment certainly is predicated upon the idea that the commerce or the mails to be transported must be interstate commerce or foreign commerce, or must be United States mails. And having the power in this bill, as you say, to regulate commerce, certainly having the power, whether it is expressed in this bill or not, to prevent any obstruction of commerce, we assert our right and our duty of preventing conspiracies which have for their purpose the stoppage of the transportation of mails, troops, munitions of war, and the like, and the transportation of commerce between the States.

The honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] thought that no lawyer in the United States would dare to assert in the presence of what he said was his opinion that the Government of the United States might punish this offense.

Why, Mr. President, a plainer proposition was never stated on the floor of the American Senate than that if we have the right to control foreign commerce we are the only power perhaps that has the right to punish crimes against it, crimes committed by men who obstruct its passage inward or out from the country. Congress has that power, and so it must be in respect to the interstate commerce. But suppose that the States also choose to do in the case of the obstruction of commerce what they have done for the protection of the national currency, for the protection of postal service, and for the protection of various other matters that I could refer to, can not the States, notwithstanding we have the power and jurisdiction to punish it ourselves, come in with their criminal laws and punish it also? Surely they can do this for the protection of commerce within the States. It is one of the cases where the exertion of the power by one government does not exclude its exertion by the other, because the offense is different against each government. It is the same act, but a distinct and different offense.

Now, sir, I would not have thought about wasting one moment upon an argument of this kind in the presence of the body of lawyers here assembled but for the rashness of the Senator from Missouri in making the assertion he did a moment ago, for it can not be anything else, that the Congress of the United States has no right to punish offenses against the postal service, because larceny and robbery and obstruction of the public highways and the like are punishable by the States, and that in the teeth of the history of our legislative experience since the Government of the United States was founded. That is my answer to that proposition.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] thinks that the States ought to control this matter themselves, because he doubts very much the constitutional power of the Government of the United States to protect interstate commerce against raids and conspiracies by persons who are assembled within the States for that object. Well, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado is supporting this bill. It would be indeed a solecism to assert, as he must, that the Congress of the United States has the power to make and control and fashion the contracts between the shipper and his bailee, to regulate the terms and conditions upon which freight shall be delivered, shall be hauled from State to State, and the price at which it shall be done; to prohibit a private agreement between a railroad company and a shipper in California for a certain rate for the transportation of material to the Atlantic seaboard; to interfere in all the numerous ways and by all the numerous devices which are presented in this bill with the civil rights of private individuals, and yet that Congress has not the power to punish men who obstruct commerce. This would be equivalent to the assertion that Congress can control the personal rights of the people, but can not preserve their public rights, or the public peace, the public welfare, or the freedom of interstate commerce.

It appears to me that Congress must either protect the general public in the transmission of commerce between the States and foreign countries or admit that they are afraid to do it. It is not for me to say whom they are afraid of; but, Mr. President, if there was a combination between railroad companies to prevent commerce from going freely between the States, you would see in a minute where the ax would fall and how heavily it would come down upon the necks of the offenders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Quorum pars magnus.

Mr. MORGAN. I have only one appeal to make to the Senate about this matter, and that is, when you are exercising the power to regulate commerce, as I am afraid you are doing it contrary to the Constitution of the United States so far as it interferes with the rights of private citizens, while you are engaged in this work ostensibly to make commerce free and so protect it, do not stop until you have removed those difficulties which have risen up in all the different parts of our country to shame the power and majesty of the law upon occasions so frequent that they lead to alarm, and where the conduct has been so gross that I could scarcely desire to have these stories repeated on the floor of the Senate. We know what these occasions have been. We have been confronted with them in almost every State and Territory of this Union. But, sir, we know also the power of the men concerned in it; and whether we stop or whether we go on will depend, I think, not upon our respect for the peace and welfare of this country, but upon our respect for the power of the votes that are supposed to be under the control of men thus combined to obstruct commerce.

I will not hesitate, timid as I may be, about such matters, desirous as I am to escape criticism, objection, and dissent from any of my friends in the Senate of the United States; I cannot forbear to press this amendment without doing injustice, as I think, to myself. Other Senators can act for themselves, but so far as I am concerned I feel it to be my duty to bring forward this amendment and to insist on its adoption.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I will submit a few observations in regard to the general character of this bill as it impresses me, in order to explain why it is that I insist that we have the constitutional power to adopt the amendment I offer. It may be very doubtful whether we have the constitutional power to do all that we have been attempting to do in the bill that is before the Senate. I do not propose to attempt an analysis or general discussion of the bill, but only to state a few difficulties that have occurred to my mind in connection with this subject, and to show that our power to protect commerce by criminal laws is clear, whatever may be our power to regulate it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I only desire to say in regard to the Senator's allusion to me, that I did not state that there was no constitutional power in the Government to do perhaps what is suggested. I said or intended to say that the whole subject was one of the doubtful exercise of power, but that if the national Legislature had the right to pass such a bill, it would seem to follow that they might have some means of protecting and executing the bill, but that I denied the general policy, the propriety of putting this on such a bill, because it was taking from the States what I think is their first duty, that is, the maintenance of peace within their borders.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the fact that fifty men were killed the other night in Chicago, fifty killed and wounded perhaps in Saint Louis, fifty killed elsewhere, and that then all was quiet does not prove that the States are maintaining the peace in regard to this matter. It proves merely that men are exposed to slaughter, and after they have satiated themselves with blood that they become peaceful from reaction.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he believes the condition of affairs would have been otherwise in Chicago if the power to punish had rested exclusively with the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe that the power of prevention is worth a great deal more than the power of punishment. What I think we ought to do in respect to all these matters, if we can, is to prevent the commission of crime, prevent the combination of men to commit crime, and punish those who unlawfully conspire and unite with each other for this purpose. When they find that the conspiracy is punishable with some severity they will abstain from entering into these combinations, and we shall thus be saved the effusion of blood. I do not care to appeal to "the bloody assize" of the policeman armed with the sword and the pistol when I can go to a court, have a man arrested for a conspiracy or a criminal combination, and have him tried and punished if he is guilty of it. It is so much a better remedy, it is so much more in accordance with the spirit of humanity to check men who are about to commit crime than it is to thunder down upon them volleys from Gatling guns after they have been wrought up to a pitch of fury from drunkenness, or by licentious speeches, or in any other way; it is so much more in accordance with my ideas of proper government to resort to the preventive powers of the law, that I can not abstain from asking the Congress of the United States to confer this power upon the Federal courts. It can do no harm. If it does no harm in the States to enact laws to prevent such combinations and conspiracies, it can do no harm to add also the power and strength of the Federal Government in the same direction. The act that I propose is an innocent act in itself. It looks to peace; it looks to the public welfare; it looks to the security of private property and of life.

Now, sir, why should we discard it? Why is it that we are here legislating to control these railroads unless we are acting upon the admitted proposition that the State powers are insufficient for the control of the very corporations that they have created? There is scarcely one corporation that will come within the purview of this bill that is not the creature of State power, born of State authority, endowed with all its corporate faculties and powers from the State Legislatures. But the States in their slack manner of dealing with these corporations have permitted them to ride down State authority and State laws and to make combinations which reach from the great seaports on the Atlantic coast to those of the Pacific coast, so that railroads chartered in many States are united under one control and one government and become virtually one railroad from ocean to ocean. From that permission given by the different States to the usurpation of authority and power by these different railroads has grown up the evil we are trying now to check, and wiser men than I am say it is absolutely necessary in order to check it to invoke the powers of the Federal Government.

We are here legislating to-day upon this bill and in reference to this subject upon the sole reason that the States either have not got the power to control it or that they refuse to do it. No other reason is to be assigned why Congress is engaged in this new field of legislation. If that is necessary in respect to the protection of the civil rights of parties concerned in railroad transportation, why is it not equally so in reference to the prevention of the crimes which the States have dealt with so ineffectually and will deal with so ineffectually as that they can not repress the commission of grave crimes against the freedom of commerce and the peace of the people of the country.

Suppose a combination exists in Baltimore, in Harrisburg, in Washington city between a thousand men, or two or three thousand men, to prevent by threats or intimidation or by the mildest form of opposition that can be offered, not including absolute violence to persons, the transmission of commerce between these cities. These men do not want any commerce; they do not want any trains to run; they have reasons of their own for this. They may be working in the interest of some rival city that wants to build itself up at their expense. They may be working in the interest of some secret organization or order that does not intend that certain men shall work railroads unless they permit them to do it. They may be working in the interest of some combination of men who usurp to themselves the authority to control all commerce, all power political and judicial in the country, until they give their own consent that matters may be conducted according to their own wishes. Now, here is the combination. How are you going to prevent it in the State of Maryland? A thousand of these men reside in Pennsylvania, a thousand of them in Maryland, and a thousand of them in the District of Columbia.

When you come to the District of Columbia to punish conspiracy, perhaps you find no law at all upon your statute-books punishing any conspiracy of the kind, so that the man who is here and conspires with these men by letter or telegraph in these other places, though guilty of conspiracy under the laws of some of these States, is not guilty here. How is the State of Maryland going to punish a man in the District of Columbia or in the State of Pennsylvania? How are you going to get hold of him? How are you going to bring him within the Maryland jurisdiction? Is that not a clear case of an inefficient remedy growing out of the fact that a separate organization with separate judicial power is found in these different localities? In this District the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, and the other two States are also separate jurisdictions.

Will any lawyer say that, for the purpose of protecting the general commerce of the United States between the States and with foreign countries, such a state of law is adequate to prevent obstructions to the transmission of passengers or freight back and forth from the seaboard to the interior? No, sir; the law is sadly, painfully defective, and I must confess that it surprises me no little when the occasion is presented so prominently in the mass of testimony that surrounds us and in all the arguments which have been made in support of this bill, that Senators should not recognize that there is an immediate necessity for adding a clause like this and perhaps another one to this bill.

I wish now to say a few words in regard to one other feature of this bill. The power that Congress is seeking to exert in the passage of this bill can only be made effectual through the judgment of some Federal court. No provision of the bill is self-executing, and none of them call to the assistance of Congress the executive power of the United States for their enforcement. The rights that are affected and the duties imposed by this act upon the railroad companies are all of that class which for their enforcement come within the authority and protecting care of the judicial power of the United States.

If the legislative power can create or modify these rights, or can assert and impose the duties mentioned in the bill so as to make them obligatory on the railroad companies, it still can not enforce them in the least degree except through the assistance of the courts, so that in considering the several provisions of this bill we must endeavor to understand, in advance, what we can compel the courts to do in their dealings with the rights and duties that we are attempting to prescribe and to regulate. Whatever Congress may declare the right or duty to be, if the courts shall adjudge that it is not what Congress declares, but is otherwise, and that it is beyond the power of Congress to create or change the right or to impose the duty, there the matter ends, and there it will rest, just as if Congress had never attempted its vain task.

No American legislature has the power to divest or change a vested right, as between two private persons; nor can any Legislature impose a duty on one man for the benefit of another and compel its performance against his objection until the courts have determined that it has been rightfully imposed. In cases involving the personal rights of any citizen no Legislature can impose a duty upon him, to the destruction of such rights, when that duty is not to be performed toward the State or the general public, but only toward certain individuals. The courts can and will always protect the right so assailed against the act of the Legislature; so that Congress has no absolute power in such cases to create rights by declaring them, or to destroy rights that are vested in one man by creating rights in another.

The courts will protect the actual vested rights of all men against any usurpation of power by Congress. There is not a right assailed by this bill that the courts will be unwilling or unable to protect. There is nothing in this bill which will compel the courts to accept the mandate of Congress that they shall act in accordance with its will. There is not a duty imposed by the bill that the courts can not release any man from, if the performance of that duty involves the destruction of any right vested in him by law.

The questions that will at once arise under this act must all be decided by the courts. None of them can be withdrawn from their power. The convenient and timid excuse sometimes resorted to by the courts to avoid disagreeable conflicts with Congress, that the questions presented are political and not judicial in their character, will not avail under this act. Not a question will arise that will not directly involve the decision of some right of a private and personal nature in dispute as a controversy between private persons. No question in this bill can be so covered up with considerations of a political nature as to escape full investigation by the courts. But to the extent that the courts have no jurisdiction of any matter arising under this bill the measure will be powerless for good or evil, for it can only be made effectual through the aid of the judgments of the courts.

The doings of the commissioners to be appointed under this act, so far as they fall short of being the decrees of courts of inferior jurisdiction, will be nugatory.

They may persuade or intimidate the railroad companies, but they will work no change in their material rights.

The frame of the bill shows that they are not intended to decide anything finally, but only to make a case and present it in a certain form for the adjudication of the courts.

The real question therefore to be considered on this bill is to what extent can Congress increase and enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts so as to enable them to consider and adjudge questions arising between the bailor and the bailee, where the subject of the bailment is to be transported as commerce between the States.

There is one limitation upon the power of Congress as to extending the judicial power of the United States that seems to have escaped attention in this debate.

It is a limitation which, if it is respected, must cut down the powers of the commissioners as judicial officers and the rights of persons aggrieved by the extortions and discriminations of the railroad companies, to very narrow limits as compared with the broad sweep given to the intended operations of this measure as disclosed on the face of the bill. I refer to the provisions of section 2, Article III, of the Constitution of the United States, which is that—

> The judicial power shall extend * * * to controversies * * * between citizens of different States.

This clause, if it is applicable to the proceedings under this bill, either by or before the commissioners, would exclude from the benefits of the act all persons who reside in the State from which the railroad company derived its charter. A shipper of merchandise residing in Philadelphia could not sue the Pennsylvania Railroad either before the commissioners or the Federal courts for its violation of this law, both being citizens of the United States and of the same State. Such a condition of affairs would enable the railroad companies to defeat the purposes of this act as to the most important part of the people with whom they have dealings as common carriers.

The bill is framed, I suppose, upon the idea that the cases to which it applies are cases arising under the laws of the United States, and that as to such cases the citizenship of the parties is not a question that affects the jurisdiction of the courts to hear and determine the controversy. This assumption may possibly be correct as to the matter of the citizenship of the parties, but I am not prepared to admit it in this broad extent.

As to the other matter, whether after this act is passed the cases that are presented under its provisions for decision by the courts or the commissioners, I am well satisfied that they will not be such cases "arising under a law of the United States" as will, from their nature, give to the Federal courts jurisdiction to hear and determine them without respect to the citizenship of the parties to the controversies. These cases and the controversies concerning them exist now. They are now cognizable by the State courts and by the Federal courts.

Any man can sue any railroad company in a Federal court for any extortion or unjust discrimination (which is evidence of extortion) which has caused him a loss or any damage to his business. He can sue in a Federal court, if the defendant is not a citizen of the same State in which he lives, or in a State court if they both reside in the same State. So that the cases and controversies now exist, and are now being settled by the courts, State and Federal, to which the parties can lawfully appeal.

The evil exists, the right to be compensated for its infliction now exists, the remedy now exists, and the cases are now being prosecuted for damages, and for injunction, and all that, in the various State and Federal courts. How, then, can we so frame the law we are enacting that after its passage these cases and controversies that now arise without the help of an act of Congress shall then arise only under the act we are passing?

Congress can as well pass laws relating to divorces and to inheritance and to guardianship in the States and claim the jurisdiction for the Federal courts to decide upon them as cases arising under a law of the United States, as it can sustain such a pretension in this matter.

The argument that after this law is passed all the cases and controversies it deals with will be cases and controversies that will then arise under it is dangerously broad and revolutionary.

Such an interpretation of this act would cause it to repeal the common law in every State and Territory as it affects the rights and duties of shippers and carriers, and every statute law of each which fixes the rights of bailor and bailee in such cases. No cases would then arise under the common law or local statute law, nor would any common-law right or right under a local statute exist in the presence of the supreme law enacted by Congress, which would ride down and supplant all other laws covering the same subjects.

In an effort, which I believe to be a vain and fruitless endeavor, to give a better remedy to an aggrieved class against their oppressors, I do not wish to cut away the broad ground on which their rights are now comparatively secure to interpose a patchwork scaffolding, admitted to be imperfect and experimental, as the only ground on which the people who are injured can stand in defense of their rights.

I draw the distinction, of course, between the power of the Congress of the United States to enact such a law relating to the civil rights of persons and its power to enact a law for the preservation of the peace of the country and for the freedom and protection of commerce notwithstanding the States may pass laws of like kind, for the reason that the laws which the States pass are to punish offenses against the State sovereignty, and the laws which the United States pass are to punish offenses against the United States sovereignty, two different sovereignties enacting laws for the punishment of the same man for the commission of the same act, being two distinct offenses, because they are offenses against two distinct sovereigns. I draw that distinction and leave the subject.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I confess to a little surprise that the labor problem of the country should have been projected into this debate and into this bill, but it seems to be here, and I wish to make a few observations in regard to the pending amendment.

Though I am not authorized to speak for the class of men supposed to be perhaps immediately interested in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, I do not suppose that there is any more law-abiding class of American citizens than what are known as the American workingmen, the American laborers, whether they are employed in factories, upon the farms, upon the railroads, or in any other of the manual occupations of life. Whatever agitation there may be in the country at the present time or at any time, whatever tendencies to violence there may be as the result of deep and exciting causes, I do not suppose that this class of men are any more subject to the ebullitions of feeling or tendencies to breach of the peace than are any other class of men when they feel grievances which should, as they think, be redressed, and are in pursuit of some remedy which the law apparently is in no haste to afford them.

So far as the amendment is concerned, setting aside questions of its being vicious for the nation to enter into this course of legislation, if in line 8 the words "with violence" were substituted for the word "unlawfully," I do not believe that this class of men would be likely to object to the adoption of the amendment. In that case the amendment which now seems to be quite indefinite as to what shall constitute the act of conspiracy or shall make the conspiracy unlawful and so come under the just surveillance of the Government by the substitution of the words "with violence," so as to read, "with violence to obstruct or prevent the movement or running of any such train," I say with such a change as that I do not think, if criminal legislation would be proper in a bill like this, that the class of men alluded to and who it is proposed to curb and restrain by this provision, would make any objection to it, for they are as a rule, as I understand it, law-abiding citizens.

There are railroad commissions provided for in the statutes of many of the States. So far as I know there never has been any attempt to incorporate legislation properly belonging in a criminal statute directed to this class of men in any law the main purpose of which was to provide such a commission to regulate commerce in the States over the railroads and perhaps over the water ways in some instances of the States.

It would seem to be unnecessary to embarrass the bill with a provision of this kind; but if under the general power to regulate commerce it is necessary to introduce a provision of this sort, it seems to me that the Senate and the country ought to go in its national capacity a little further. If these men are to be punished for the combinations resulting in strikes, they certainly ought to find in the same legislation some provision which shall redress the grievances which lead to them. I do not allege that there have been any grievances which have led to the recent disturbances in Saint Louis and in the Southwest and in Chicago, and which have been threatened in other parts of the country. I do not allege that there are any grievances, but it is a matter of common knowledge that those who have been induced to make the disturbances complained and have believed that they were suffering great wrongs.

If we have a right to interfere with this branch of the labor problem, to legislate directly against strikes, and if it be judicious to do so in this bill, why should we not go further? Commerce can not be carried on between States without employers and employés, and in the regulation of commerce why is it not proper for us to see that the employer is guilty of no wrong, of no grievance, of no extortion whatever upon the laborer, without whom that commerce can not be conducted at all? It is well enough for us to go deep enough to find the causes which lead to disturbances, and to legislate so as to give relief against them.

With that view, if this amendment were to be adopted I would submit an amendment to the amendment, which I think the Senate would concede to be entirely proper, adding a proviso which I shall read, or something like it. It has been, of course, drawn without much reflection and without that careful attention to phraseology which should be given possibly to the amendment if it were to be adopted; but I would add something like this:

Provided, That whenever the persons so conspiring are employés of the common carrier so carrying persons or property, it shall be made to appear to the court that the employer shall have paid to such persons due and reasonable wages for their work, and shall have redressed or offered to redress any grievance of which the employé shall have had just cause to complain on the part of the employer, and any failure of such carrier or employer to pay due and reasonable wages to its employés for their work or to redress such grievance or complaint of the employé shall subject the employer, his agents, and managers to the penalties of this section.

I do not say that I would advocate that; but if the bill is to undertake to deal with the entire labor problem and to repress these ebullitions on the part of men who are feeling great grievances, whether they have a right to complain or not, who themselves believe they have been the subject of extortion in the direction of unfair pay for fair work, receiving an amount of wages which does not give them opportunity of comfortable support for themselves and their families, when labor to the full extent of the capacity of the human frame to perform it has been rendered—I say if we are to undertake to deal with one part of the labor problem in this bill we should deal with the whole, under the claim that having the right to regulate commerce we may regulate the carrier so far as concerns his relations with the men whose employment and work are indispensable to the performance of public transportation.

Are the men who own the railroads, who employ the men who make this complaint, to be allowed to make use of so great power in extorting from their employés when the public at large are making complaint of their alleged extortions? Are not these laborers a portion of the public, a portion of the American people, residents of the different States living along the line of the roads, depending upon the employment of the roads for their maintenance and support? To deprive the laborer upon that means of locomotion of labor without the means of reaching other sources of employment, so that practically to discharge those men is to turn them out to starve, or to deprive them of reasonable compensation for their work, is an extortion which should be held to be, if anything is, in the regulation of interstate commerce, a crime.

I am not in favor of any amendment of this kind to the bill. I think it out of place. It is not to be inferred, however, that should the general discussion of the subject of the labor troubles of the country take place in this body or in Congress this aspect of the question will fail of consideration. It is a large subject; it concerns the whole social fabric; and it is not to be dealt with in any piecemeal or patchwork manner.

So far as the bill in a general way is concerned I should be glad to support it; but I should not like to see interjected here the ideas or sentiments which seem to appertain to another discussion.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have only a word to say in reply to my friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], for I always accept with due humility any lecture he reads me on constitutional law or any other sort of law. But the Senator is not the only lawyer whom I have encountered in a practice of more than twenty-five years who always asserted that it was never right for any one to doubt the correctness of his legal conclusions.

If the Senator from Alabama is right on this question, it has destroyed all the ideas of my life in regard to the difference between Federal and State authority, all the ideas of the school of politicians to which I belong, and all the ideas that the great leaders of the States-rights Democratic party of the country have asserted. I never could under any possible state of the case, no matter what the danger or how imminent, agree to any such proposition as is asserted in the amendment now pending here.

The Senator from Alabama seems incapable of making any distinction between Federal instrumentality and the rights of private property. In so far as the United States takes property and uses it to carry out the delegated powers given it by the Constitution, it has the right to punish for an obstruction of the exercise of those agencies or instrumentalities. When a car is used for the purpose of carrying the United States mail it is a Federal instrumentality, and if it is obstructed, ever since 1791 the statutes of the United States have punished that obstruction. If a mob—as was the case, and I happened to be of counsel in it, some four years ago—stop a train of cars carrying the United States mail, and murder two men upon it and detain that train for an hour, that mob are tried by Federal authority in the district court of the United States for an obstruction of the mail, and then tried in the State court for the murder they have committed.

The United States under the Constitution has the power to regulate commerce among the States; and what is the meaning of that term as construed over and over again? The Federal Government has the right to say under what sort of limitations and restrictions commerce among the States shall be carried on. That is the whole and entire meaning of it. But if private property is attacked inside the jurisdiction of the States, outside of the delegated power given to the Federal Government, then the State courts only have jurisdiction, and under our form of government no others can have it.

The Government of the United States has the power to make money. It alone can issue the greenbacks which are now the currency of this country. If I invade the sphere of the Federal Government and undertake to make that money, I am punished in the United States courts and there alone; but after the money is made if I steal $500 or $50 of that money of the United States from another citizen, I am punished by the State authorities for theft, and not by the General Government. The limitation is clear and distinct upon the respective spheres of government.

Who creates these corporations? Are they created by the United States? They are created by the State governments. When they go into interstate commerce they come within the sphere of Federal authority and only then; but if on this private property, the car, the locomotive, if the lives or the security of the officials of the road, who are simply citizens of the respective States, are attacked, then the States and the States alone have power to punish.

This proposition, it seems to me, is so clear that I am perfectly willing to submit what I have said to go with the charge of rashness on the part of the Senator from Alabama in having asserted it. It is so clear to me, that I can conceive of no possible state of case in which the Federal authorities could go into a State and punish a citizen of that State unless he attacked the instrumentality used by the Federal authority within the grants of the Constitution for its own purposes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the course which the discussion has taken in the Senate since the amendment was introduced has determined me as to my action upon it, irrespective of the principle which seems to be involved in the amendment; and that there may be no mistake about my view with regard to that, I wish to say that if we are to have a government at all and if American citizenship is to be worth anything, then there are three objects which must be protected in this Government and by this Government, and those are life, property, and the pursuit of happiness. But it is evident that to put this amendment upon the bill would embarrass and I think imperil the passage of the measure, and therefore I am against it, if for no other reason.

The discussion which has taken place here shows that the amendment raises two questions which are foreign to the bill. One is the question whether the Government has a right to legislate, or whether the States alone have the power to legislate, in the enactment of a law such as is proposed by the amendment. That is a question upon which Senators will differ and do differ, and it is a question upon which the other branch of Congress will differ, and which will excite there as it has here discussion and elicit differences of opinion. It has drawn into this discussion another topic, and that is the whole labor question. I can not consent to vote for an amendment which if put upon the bill would subject it to the discussion of those questions in the other branch of the national Legislature, and while I do not speak for the committee and speak only for myself, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I do not yield to any Senator in my devotion to law and order, nor in opposition to every violation of law coming from any source whatever; but the amendment of the Senator from Alabama does not strike me as one which should be adopted by Congress, for this reason if for no other: The interstate commerce which we are trying to regulate, carried on by railroads running through the States, does not thereby make the railroads or the ground over which they run property belonging to the United States. They are not like forts, arsenals, dock-yards, &c., under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, where a crime committed is under the control of the Federal courts. But the offense committed is an offense committed within the State, amenable to the laws of the State; and if the amendment is sound in principle it will be appropriate in the Legislature of a State, and not in the Legislature of the United States. In other words, I do not think that we have anything to do with it. That is my judgment in regard to that.

Suppose you were having commerce carried on between the States under the old fashion as it used to be fifty or more years ago, by wagons carrying goods from Philadelphia out to Kentucky, Tennessee, and so on, passing through many States, and a difficulty were to occur between the wagoner and a man who tried by force to prevent his traveling over the highway, would that give the Federal Government jurisdiction? Wagons thus used are common carriers between the States just as much as the railroads. No one would pretend that the Federal court would have jurisdiction in that case and yet the principle is precisely the same. Suppose you have a strike as we had in Texas not long ago at Fort Worth, on the Texas and Pacific Railway, and several men were killed in the progress of the strike, did that confer upon the Federal courts jurisdiction to try the men who were guilty of offenses undoubtedly against the laws of the State of Texas? The fact that the railroad was in the hands of a receiver appointed by a Federal court in no wise deprived the State of Texas of criminal jurisdiction.

It does seem to me that this would be conferring upon the Federal courts enormous power, and would produce a feeling of unrest and alarm in the States which it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to overcome. It would be a well-grounded alarm. Let the State alone in controlling its own internal police affairs. The crimes which are committed against railroads are committed against the laws of the State, and the corporations should be protected by the law of the State the same as anybody else, and amenable to the law the same as anybody else. If in passing through a State these corporations violate the laws of that State, let them be punished by the State law for it, or if their employés commit crimes against the laws of the State let them be punished through the State courts.

I am averse to the stretch of Federal power beyond the provisions of the Constitution. This amendment is not provided for, in my judgment, by the commerce clause or any other clause of the Constitution.

Whenever you confer upon the Federal courts criminal jurisdiction over offenses committed by or against those engaged in interstate commerce reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the lakes to the Gulf, all over this country, you add to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts an enormous power never contemplated by the Constitution of our country, and you rob the States of that which justly belongs to them. Whatever I might do as a member of the Legislature of the State of Texas in regard to this matter, in the enforcement of the rights of life, liberty, and property, would be a very different thing from what I would do here. There in the Legislature I would not doubt my perfect right to aid such laws as I believed necessary in the protection of life, liberty, and property. Here I do not think the Congress of the United States has jurisdiction of the question.

I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I am satisfied that the Senate is not for this amendment. I am against it myself, because I think it will embarrass the chances of passing any law on the subject, and if there is no further disposition to debate the question I hope that we shall vote at once. I am urged to move to lay the amendment on the table; but I shall not make the motion if the Senate is ready to proceed to vote on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illnois will pardon me for one moment. I ought to add to what I said that there is a bill pending upon which this question might properly arise, and I think it should not arise here.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BROWN. On that question let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," as I understand, and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called), I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I do not know how he would vote upon this question.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I can state that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would vote to lay the amendment on the table from what he said when he left the Chamber.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should vote "yea," if I were not paired.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I wish to announce a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] in his absence. I have no doubt that he would vote "yea" on the pending question, and so I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Being assured that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would vote "yea," I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator for Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—49.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Logan,	Sewell,
Beck,	George,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Berry,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Teller,
Blair,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vance,
Bowen,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Hale,	Morrill,	Vest,
Camden,	Harris,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Payne,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Hearst,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Evarts,	Kenna,	Sawyer,

NAYS—3.

Dolph,	Edmunds,	Morgan,

ABSENT—24.

Allison,	Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Conger,	Mahone,	Ransom,
Brown,	Frye,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Hampton,	Miller,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I have an amendment somewhat like the one offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] which I desire to offer, though after the very decided vote of the Senate against that amendment I shall not call for the yeas and nays on it. It is not an amendment to prevent illegal conspiracies to wreck railroad trains, but to punish those who do wreck them. As I said, I only offer it, and shall not ask to take a vote of the Senate by yeas and nays on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That if any person shall willfully and maliciously destroy or in any manner hurt, damage, injure, or obstruct, or shall willfully and maliciously cause, or aid and assist, or counsel or advise any other person or persons to destroy or in any manner to hurt, damage, injure, or obstruct any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, or in carrying the mails of the United States, or any branch thereof, or any bridge connected therewith, or any vehicle, or if any unauthorized person or persons shall turn, move, or in any manner interfere or meddle with any switch, gate, siding, or other appurtenances to any railroad, such person so offending shall be guilty of felony, and, on conviction thereof in the United States circuit court, which shall have jurisdiction of the offense, shall be imprisoned for a term of not less than four nor longer than eight years. If death ensues from such act to any person, the offender shall be guilty of murder and punished accordingly. This penalty shall in no case interfere with the offender's liability to civil damage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment is substantially the same as the other, and without any disrespect to the Senator from Georgia I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that when I was on my feet before I said I should not discuss it, because the other had been discussed, and although I intended to have made some remarks upon it, the vote of the Senate was so decided that I shall refrain from doing so.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table if the Senator desires to make any remarks.

Mr. BROWN. No; I do not desire to discuss the question after the decided vote of the Senate upon the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. I have already stated that I merely wish to put the amendment on the record and have a vote upon it; and, as I stated when up last, I shall not call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. My colleague [Mr. PLUMB], who is absent from the city, before his departure requested me to offer the amendment of which he had previously given notice and which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

That it shall not be lawful for any railroad company, or for any manager, officer, or employé of any such company, to issue or deliver to any member of Congress, or to any officer or employé of the Government, or to any person at the request or on behalf of such member of Congress or employé, or to any member of the family of such member of Congress, or officer, or employé, any pass, check, or other instrument entitling the person to whom issued, or any other person whomsoever, to ride over any such railroad, or any part thereof, free or for a rate or charge less than that required to be paid by the general public; and it shall likewise be unlawful for any member of Congress, or for any officer or employé of the Government, to apply for or receive, for himself or for another, or to use, any such pass, check, or other instrument, or in any way to travel over any such railroad, or any part thereof, at and for any rate or charge lower than that charged to the general public; and any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to imprisonment not exceeding six months, or a fine of not less than $500, or both such imprisonment and fine, in the discretion of the court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to add:

That it shall not be lawful for any railroad company chartered or created by the United States, or any railroad company that has at any time received aid or assistance from the United States, either in money or by grant of land, to issue passes to any person or persons, or to allow any person or persons to travel on said railroad, or any part thereof, at and for a rate less than that charged for general travel over said road, save and except only the officers and employés of said road.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I doubt very much the propriety of putting any legislation upon the bill with reference to passes. If we do, it seems to me there is no reason why we should say to the railroad company that a certain class should not receive passes. So far as we have the power to control such a matter, I suppose we might say by statute at any time that a member of Congress should refrain from accepting passes. We might say that other officials of the Government should so refrain. I do not suppose we could say to a railroad company, simply because it is engaged in interstate commerce, that it shall not give passes to citizens of a State or to any one they see fit. The restriction must be put upon the person holding official station, and not upon the road.

But here are roads which we have chartered, have created, in which the Government of the United States has a proprietary interest; it is interested in the receipts from the passenger traffic. If there are any roads in the country which are suffering at all from this system, they are the roads which the Government holds its lien upon; and if we are going into this question at all, if we are to make any rule about passes, we ought to make one that will cover the case which I propose to cover in my amendment.

I think myself, however, that the bill ought not to be loaded down with that kind of an amendment. I am quite willing at any time to join in the passage of a general law of that kind, but it is not specially germane to this bill, and there is no particular reason why such a provision should be put on the bill at all.

Mr. PLATT. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that it is not exactly germane to the bill to put on this amendment, and perhaps as a member of the committee I ought to oppose its being put on the bill; but I am so well satisfied that the whole system of issuing passes not only to members of Congress but to everybody else is a discrimination against persons that I can not hesitate to vote for the amendment, it being proposed.

I do not wish to make any argument in favor of it, but I want to read a little from the testimony of Mr. Charles Francis Adams, who is now the president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Speaking of the difficulty of preventing rebates, he said:

A large shipper—and it is to large shippers that rebates are made—may have to pay an apparently sustained rate between Chicago and Omaha, while he secretly receives his rebate on local shipments to Galena or Rock Island. Again, he may pay the sustained rate on one article and receive the rebate on another, or finally he may pay the full rate to-day and receive the rebate in some other shape to-morrow. All these things are done, and done habitually.

Then he came to the pass system:

But the free-pass system is the favorite method of influencing traffic, and that is resorted to almost as a matter of course. The average shipper is fast getting to look on a pass as his right, and he thinks more of it than of several fold its money value to him. The extent to which this abuse has grown is very alarming. It is still growing.

Then ensued this colloquy:

Senator PLATT. That is one of the things which might be remedied by positive law about as easily as anything else.

Mr. ADAMS. How would you go to work to remedy it?

Senator PLATT. By forbidding the issuing of passes.

Mr. ADAMS. If you would, in a way that will be effective, forbid the issuing of passes, I would agree at once to make a considerable reduction in our passenger rates.

Senator PLATT. Would you like to have it done, if it could be done?

Mr. ADAMS. Nothing would please me more. I should like to have a heavy penalty imposed for every pass issued. I do not, as a rule, like to work through legislation in these matters, but if you will pass a law prohibiting all free passes and subjecting to fine and imprisonment any man who signs a pass or any conductor who takes a pass up——

Senator PLATT (interposing). Or any man who rides on a pass.

Mr. ADAMS (continuing). Or any man who rides on a pass, it would make a happy day for railroads and railroad managers.

The CHAIRMAN. You would feel that one good step had been taken?

Mr. ADAMS. If effective, such a law would relieve us of one of the greatest annoyances, outrages, and abuses that now exist in connection with the railroad business.

The CHAIRMAN. And yet you feel that you are compelled in self-defense to issue them?

Mr. ADAMS. Our free transportation over the Union Pacific amounts to $2,000 a day. I do not mean by that to imply that we give it away to that amount, because the carriage of our employés is included. Also very many people to whom passes are issued would never travel if they did not have a pass. Probably a very large percentage of the $2,000 a day—I will not say whether 40 or 50 or 60 per cent. of it—is travel of the non-paying kind, but last week the return of passes sent in to me footed up $14,000 in fares.

The CHAIRMAN. You think probably half of that would be to employés?

Mr. ADAMS. To employés and telegraph operators and to all the innumerable persons in some way connected with the operation of the road.

Then further on Mr. Adams said:

The pass system is an outrage. There is no reason whatever why any one should be carried free over a railroad any more than why he should be boarded and lodged free at a hotel, drive free in public carriages, or order goods without paying for them in shops. Yet, and especially in the West, things are getting to such a pass that no man who has money, or official position, or influence—especially political or newspaper influence—thinks he ought to pay anything for riding on a railroad. The company which flings about passes right and left is "liberal," the company which refuses to do so is "stingy," and it shall assuredly be made "red hot" for it when the Legislature meets.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. President, under ordinary conditions I should not hesitate a moment to vote against this proposition. I do not approve it, because I have no doubt on earth, on the principle and theory implied by the amendment, that any man in this Congress or out of it who could be bought by a railroad pass could be much more conveniently bought by the ready cash. So that so far as the real merit of the proposition be concerned, I should not hesitate at all to vote against it.

We all know that this nation of more than fifty millions of people, in a struggle which began twenty years ago and possibly more, for the intervention of some power to restrain the unrestrained railroad corporate combinations, has come to realize the fact that if any such intervention be made it must be made by Congress. That Congress is composed of two Houses, one numbering seventy-six members and the other three hundred and twenty-five, with the possibility and probability, perhaps I would not overstep the bounds of propriety if I said with the certainty, that there is not a man in either House who does not sit to-day with a pass over some railroad in his pocket. I am not only ready to concede but ready to maintain that he has received with perfect good faith and with perfect sincerity and honesty, and without a thought of improper motive or purpose, that pass. And yet the public presentation of this issue does not quite present the spectacle to the people of the United States which we ought to confront. For because of a conventional semblance, because of a conventional relationship as between those of us here who are called upon to legislate upon so grave a subject as this, I should vote, if at all, for this amendment.

I reiterate, I do not believe in the principle it asserts, because any man who may be bought or influenced by a railroad pass in his pocket could be better, more reasonably, and conveniently managed by the cash.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the proposition applied to the Pacific railway companies, that they should not be permitted while in debt to the Government, and in default, to carry hundreds and thousands of persons as a matter of compliment or favoritism without compensation, seems to possess force. It would seem to be, in a sense, a measure of protection to the Government, if it were practicable, that as to such railway companies a provision of this kind should be adopted.

But I desire to call the attention of the Senator who advocates this amendment to the fact that railway companies in this country to-day, and it has been so for a great many years, do not give passes simply as a matter of compliment, nor simply as a matter of securing favor or protection, but they have been and are often used as a means of procuring and keeping business.

The proposition to embody in the law a prohibition, applicable only to the Pacific Railway Companies which owe the Government, against issuing passes, leaving to the railway corporations whose roads are being operated by the side of the Pacific roads the unrestricted power to issue them to shippers, to purchase or influence business by means of them, would certainly put the Pacific railway corporations at a very great disadvantage. I suppose there is hardly a railroad company in the country which takes a shipment of stock which does not give to the party or parties in charge of the stock a pass or passes. While corporations which sustain no such relation to the Government of the United States as the companies mentioned in the amendment are at liberty to give passes, they will use that power to procure business, and to impose such restrictions upon the subsidized companies and leave unrestricted their rivals and competitors would be unjust to the companies and detrimental to the interest of their patrons and to the interest of the United States.

Then there are corporations which have received and earned land grants which owe the Government nothing and which would fall within the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. Right alongside of those roads railroads are being operated by companies which have received no land grants; and the effect of the amendment if it became the law would be, as I say, to give the corporations which have received no grants a very great advantage in the way of competition against those who would be embraced by the amendment.

The prohibition should be directed at all companies coming within the provisions of this bill or at none.

Mr. KENNA. I hope my friend did not in any sense whatever misunderstand my proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all.

Mr. KENNA. I believe the amendment to be utterly futile and utterly worthless, and the declaration of a principle which implies a reflection upon gentlemen of standing and character, both in and out of Congress, and that it ought not to enter into our legislation.

I have been reminded in the statement I made a moment ago that I had no reason to doubt that every member of both Houses of Congress had passes in his pocket which he had received honestly and sincerely, without any thought of reciprocation, that the statement might be too broad. I know nothing about that. I only spoke in the broad sense of what I understand and conceive to be the principle of the amendment; and I repeat what I have already said, that I believe the amendment to be calculated—perhaps "calculated" would imply a motive, and I will withdraw that if it does—but I believe the amendment in effect would operate eventually to defeat a measure which everybody concedes to have good objects in view and to be in the interest of a salutary public object.

Mr. SPOONER. I only want to say to the Senator from West Virginia that my remarks were addressed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado and not to that offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment, first, because I think it is unworthy of this body. It can produce no possible good effect. This is a bill to regulate interstate commerce. What possible connection has the giving of a pass with that question, unless it be to imply that it will influence the votes of members of this body?

That is disproved, first, by the character of the men who are here. It is an insult to this body. Second, it is disproved by the fact that a large majority of this body, it is evident, are in favor of the bill reported by the committee, and there is no possible ground for an imputation so unworthy of this body.

Then it is a subject with which Congress has nothing to do. It can not deal with it except in the light that this body affirm that they believe the members of the body can be influenced by a free pass in the votes which they may give upon the subject.

I do not think that we should enforce a proposition of that kind in the very face of the fact that it is evident now that the body proposes to pass the bill reported by the committee and to go just as far as it is practicable and safe to go in regulating the interstate commerce of the country.

For these reasons, sir, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to mingle in this debate. I am entirely in favor of the amendment, and I should like to relate an anecdote which I think has a little something to do with what was said by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Some twelve years ago, fifteen perhaps, when I was a member of the other House, I was riding on a railroad which led north from this city. The question came up of the matter of using railroad passes by members of Congress, and I had a conversation with an official, a director of that road, who assured me that the company sent their passes to all members of Congress alike, merely because they were engaged in the performance of public business, and he thought it would be proper that a road so important to the public should pay that respect to all public men in the habit of traveling over it. When I got back to Washington I repeated the conversation to a very eminent member of the other House, now dead. He told me that he had always had a pass over that road himself till that present year when his pass had not come. He met the president of the road shortly before and said to him, "You have not sent me the pass this year that you usually do." "No," said the president, "you did not vote for our bill!"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am afraid that the anecdote means a great deal; but what I think about the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is what the Senator from Wisconsin has so well stated, that the subsidized roads (saying nothing about those whose subsidies have long since passed and that we now have no connection with at all), those in which we now have an interest as representing the people of the United States, will be put at a disadvantage in respect of getting freight in connection with their competitors who are not subsidized. If the Senator from Colorado will modify his amendment so as to cover not only the subsidized lines but to cover the roads which are within the purview of this act as well, and that is the interstate-commerce operation, then I shall vote for his amendment with great cheerfulness, as I shall for that of the Senator from Kansas which has been offered and is in print.

I can not move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Colorado because it would be in the third degree. As it now stands I think what the Senator from Wisconsin has said is perfectly true, that you are offering a premium to the unsubsidized roads to get business away from those that Congress, representing the people of the United States, want to have on equal terms get all the business they can in order to pay our debt. But that is the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado as it now stands. If he will add to it, I repeat, a provision that all the roads that are within the purview of this act, that is, which are in the interstate transportation business, shall come within the same proposition, so as to put the Union Pacific for instance on the same footing as the other interstate roads in respect to passes, then I think it would be a very good amendment indeed and I would vote for it.

Mr. CULLOM. That would include passes to all people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In respect to the interstate roads.

Mr. TELLER. I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont if he will put it in shape.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will try to do that.

Mr. TELLER. I desire myself to relieve these Government roads of what I know and what everybody knows is a great burden. It has seemed to me often that if I were at the head of a great road of that kind I should find some way to relieve the road; but I understand there are difficulties on account of dealing with other roads in handling freight, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, that seem to render it almost impossible for a company of itself alone to make this change. I have no doubt that there is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin. It had occurred to me. But if there is an evil existing at all in the country with relation to this system of passes, it is in the system of exchanging passes for freight. Railroads enter into combinations by which they agree that the companies doing business in a certain direction, certain lines, shall issue no passes for getting freight; and the first they know one company has been quietly issuing passes and bringing in the freight. Now, if we are to go into this question at all on this bill, we ought to go into it to the extent of making a complete remedy.

I agree with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] that it is not fair to suppose that anybody here is influenced by the simple pass that he may have over a railroad when legislation is pending affecting it, and I think it would be exceedingly wrong for us now in dealing with this subject to simply say that Senators and Members of Congress and officials of the Government shall not have passes and let the whole question go with that. It is a declaration to the public—it amounts to that—that we believe officials do not do their duty simply because they are allowed to ride free over a railroad. It does not touch the evil that the railroad people complain of. It is a mere nothing. What we want to do is to cut off the pass system as far as we have the power; and now, if the Senator from Vermont is prepared to put his motion in shape, I will accept any suggestions that he may make which will perfect my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have written in pencil in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado a few words which I think will cover it.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to hear the whole amendment as proposed to be amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I should like to have read first what I have inserted by permission of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That it shall not be lawful for any railroad company within the purview of this act, or for any railroad company chartered or created by the United States, or any railroad company that has at any time received aid or assistance from the United States, either in money or by grant of land, to issue passes to any person or persons, or to allow any person or persons to travel on said railroad or any part thereof at and for a rate less than that charged for general travel over railroads, save and except the officers and employés of such railroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is as far as we have power to go.

Mr. TELLER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. How will you get over the contract in the charter of State roads which are obliged by their charters to issue to the judges and executive officers and members of the Legislature of the States, &c., free passes? How are you going to override that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not want to override it, because I can not. That is the only reason why I do not want to do so. This modification that I have suggested to the Senator from Colorado only applies to the operations that are within the purview of this act—that is, operations from one State to another.

Mr. SEWELL. The roads within the purview of this act are covered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The roads within the purview of this act. Therefore if any railroad in New Jersey, for instance, that is bound by its charter to give a State judge a pass over its road, undertakes to give that judge a pass by an arrangement with the Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, from Hoboken to Pittsburgh, crossing the State line, then I say, charter or no charter, the Congress of the United States in regulating the transportation of persons from State to State has a right to say that it will not allow it. The State of New Jersey can give as many privileges by its laws to the members of its courts as it pleases within its own boundaries, but it can not give them beyond; and therefore if Congress has a right to pass this bill at all, as I believe it has most fully, it has a right to say that there shall be fair play and equality, which is the whole theory of the bill, among everybody, and that favoritism shall not be extended to anybody.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, on looking at this amendment it does strike me that if there is anything that is calculated to make this bill ridiculous before the country it is this proposition. If there is anything that could be calculated to satisfy the country that we were trying to do exactly what the railroads wanted us to do, this certainly would be sufficient evidence of it. Now, I do not say that this is not a proper amendment, or that the views of those who believe the railroads ought not to give passes are not proper, or that there is any intention of an improper character in connection with it; but when the Congress of the United States commence dealing with a great measure of interstate commerce like this in such a manner as to make the whole country believe that they are afraid of themselves, that they distrust themselves and their own honesty, that they are afraid of their own course of conduct, it is not becoming the dignity of such a body. In order to make the people believe that they are perfect in everything they want to enact a law to prevent them from accepting a pass from a railroad company or any one else! There is no member of Congress required to accept a pass. There is no law requiring a member of Congress or his family to accept a pass to-day; and why do you have to pass a law against yourselves or against the people for fear you will do something that might be criticised? It strikes me as a very small piece of business for the Senate of the United States. If a railroad or a steamship company or a steamboat owner or a coach proprietor or a man driving a wagon chooses to haul me without charge, he has a perfect right to do it, the same as I have a right to take you in a carriage, or you me, down the Avenue.

What an idea, that the Senate of the United States shall attack a bill of great magnitude like this by putting upon it a provision that no man, woman, or child shall be hauled by a railroad unless he or she pays his or her fare! Why, sir, if a man is dealing with great quantities of goods and he passes them over a railroad and the railroad chooses to give him a pass or to pass him free, whose business is it except the business of the two parties? What business has Congress to deal with a proposition of that kind, because there is a difference between the fare of one man and another, where it is no violation of law?

But I have observed in Congress time and again that if there is anything we can do to convince the people that we ought to have safeguards thrown around ourselves for our own self-protection we are always ready to do it. Why, sir, when the franking privilege was abolished, it was abolished because there was a cry against it that bureaus were sent under the franks of members of Congress and that their clothes were sent home, and all such nonsense as that. Congress rushed to the rescue at once and passed a law prohibiting themselves from sending documents free in the mail, but allowed every officer of the Army from a lieutenant up, every clerk in a Department, to send "penalty envelopes" without paying a cent, and they reserved to themselves the privilege of paying their own postage, and thought they were making the world believe that they were more honest than other people.

In this bill we find commissioners provided for who are to get $7,500 per annum. A member of Congress gets $5,000, and for fear the member of Congress might accept a pass or a frank on a telegraph line, or something of that kind, we pass a law declaring to the world that unless we prohibit ourselves from doing it we are sure to do it; and in order to make the thing look as though we were not afraid of ourselves we amend it by saying that no other person shall use a pass. We are getting a little jealous of other people now inasmuch as we restrict ourselves by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, and now we propose to apply it to everybody else for fear people would say we are alarmed at our own honesty and therefore we take in all the rest of mankind.

I may be wrong about this; I may, perhaps, vote solitary and alone, as I very often do; but I have at least the nerve to do that which I believe to be right, I do not care whether it applies to a railroad corporation or anything else. In my own State and everywhere else—and you all know it—Legislature after Legislature has prohibited its members from receiving passes from railroads. Why? Because they wanted the people to think that they were more honest than others; and yet I notice they all ride up and down the railroads everywhere without paying fare.

Is this going to prohibit railroads from giving free transportation? You say they shall not give you transportation at more reduced rates than others. What does that mean? That you shall be charged the same as anybody else and anybody else the same as yourself. Suppose a railroad ticket agent down here should hand me a ticket the price of which is $20 or $15 or $10, or whatever it may be, instead of a pass. Is that a violation of the law? Perhaps you would say it violates this law. How will you get at it? I have a ticket; that ticket is valued at so much; it takes me over the road, and you can not stop it.

I will not say it is a piece of demagogism, because it would not be proper to use such a term, and I do not wish to use it because I do not think that is the intention of it; but we have so long kept ourselves in the pathway of a certain belief and prejudice against every man who has public office or who is prominent in this country that we have led the people to believe that nearly every man in public life is dishonest. It is by that character of weakness which we show before the country that causes men to believe that there is dishonor among those who hold prominent positions.

Now, sir, I do not propose to tell my constituents that I am going to be bought with a railroad ticket. They do not believe it, and I am not going to vote that I can be bought with a railroad pass, nor am I going to vote that any of my constituents can. If one of my constituents accepts a pass on a railroad, let him accept it. If the railroad proprietors choose to give it to him, it is their business and not mine. If one of my constituents ships large amounts of grain or other merchandise to the East and a railroad man chooses to take him through because of the fact that his transactions are great in connection with that transportation agent, I can not object. It is his right, his privilege, the right and the privilege of a railroad company or of an individual. If I choose to-day to invite twenty-five of my friends to go with me to Chicago and I pay their transportation, whose business is that? It is theirs and mine. What is the difference in the principle? Everybody knows I am able to do it; therefore if I am, and I choose to put my hand in my pocket and pay their transportation to Chicago, it is no man's business but mine and theirs.

But you would have it understood that if some person in the Senate wanted his friends to go somewhere and should give them a pass or buy them a railroad ticket, there was something underneath that which was dishonest, that he had some motive, that he was going to produce some result, that he was going to use those friends that he had taken to Chicago and paid their fare for some improper purpose, and hence he could buy them by paying their fare from here to Chicago. Is there a Senator in this Chamber who, if he is invited with a dozen others by a gentleman to go with him anywhere and return and the fare is paid, will walk back into the Senate and feel that he is under obligation to vote for the first bill that the Senator reports? I hope not. I hope there is no one here who feels himself so small that if some man invites him to dinner or invites him to go somewhere and pays his fare or has a ticket for him, he is under obligation to support him in something that he desires? I hope nobody here believes that.

Mr. President, if we continue as we have for a few years making the country believe that we are all so well to do in the world that we want to pay for everything as we go and make everybody else do it, I suppose the result will be that they will send here all the poor men they can find who are able to pay all these expenses! Do you not know that very doctrine has been taught in this Chamber by men heretofore in reference to striking your postage down, striking down everything that might be an accommodation, without any man thinking of it as an inducement to men to be elected to Congress and other places who have ample means to live and to legislate for the country and give their time and labor because it is a mere pleasure to them? We are tending in that direction, I think. It is about time, in my judgment, for men here to believe that they are honest and act as honest men, and not encumber a measure like this with such propositions.

I do not profess to know anything about the merits or demerits of great corporations, or what their relations may be to this bill if it shall be passed; but it being in the direction of great good in the future if not at present, I would not encumber it with a character of amendment that will only make the bill appear before the country as something to be laughed at, as of a trivial character, indicating that we are acting like men playing with the ignorance of the people, who believe that all the little things that can be done only show the greatness of men because they think they are doing them against some corporation. Why, sir, millions of dollars, if you pass this amendment, will inure to the railroads. Instead of doing them an injury, millions of dollars will come to them, and it is in the direction of a benefit to the railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Illinois on the subject of the franking matter, because I have always thought and voted that that was a matter of public communication between the representatives of the people and the people, and I voted uniformly against abolishing what is called the franking privilege. But the Senator from Illinois ought to remember that the principle of keeping members of Congress free from any bias in regard to affairs has existed a great while in the statutes of this country. A great many years ago Congress passed a law that no member of Congress should be interested directly or indirectly in any contract with the Government; and more than twenty years ago Congress passed a law that no member of Congress should promote or prosecute or have to do with any claim or matter in any of the Departments for any fee or reward whatever; that whatever he did about it he must do as the representative of his constituents, and not under the bias of having a personal interest in it by way of fee or reward, and punished it with severe penalties.

All that the Senator from Illinois has said about leading the people to suppose that Congressmen might be corrupt or dishonest or biased by such matters would apply equally to both those laws to which I have referred, and yet they were thought necessary and wise and they have been passed, and nobody thinks of repealing them.

Now when you come to this matter of passes over railroads it rests substantially upon the same principle and it certainly rests upon the principle of the bill. The Senator from Illinois asks whose business is it if the railroads from here to Chicago or from here to Burlington, Vt., propose to carry my friend and myself to our respective homes for nothing, just as they would ask us if they had a private carriage to ride up town this afternoon. In this sense it is nobody's business, but the same would be true if these railroads offered to carry our horses home for nothing. Whose business is that? Or if they offered to carry our horses for half-price, and so to do it all the year round? It is the same principle exactly. Therefore if this bill is right in its substance, and that is that there shall be equality in rates between things under similar circumstances, it is right that there should be equality of rates between persons under the same circumstances, and we provide for it as to passengers, I believe, in this bill as well as to freights. That is all there is of it. And everybody has seen, as has been seen in State Legislatures and elsewhere, that although it does not imply corruption, the fact that a railway company issues a great number of passes to all the members of the Legislature of a State implies that that corporation thinks that it will be to its benefit, which it supposes to be the public advantage, to issue those passes, and that if legislation comes up in that Legislature, or in Congress if it were here, the Senators and Members who have those passes will feel more justly inclined, will get over the prejudices they have against the corporation, just as I saw about fifteen years ago in this very Chamber, when the first effort was made to bring the Union Pacific Railway Company to some sense of its obligation and to stop the payment of public money to them when they were so largely indebted to the United States, when the debate was going on, a member of the House of Representatives, a leading director and I do not know but at the time the president of that company, appeared in this Senate Chamber, and I saw, without being impertinent and going near, that railroad passes were distributed among the Senators just at that particular time.

Everybody must understand the motive of that sort of thing; and that was to produce a bias, not to corrupt a Senator, but to make him feel more justly, as the railroad company would put it, more even-minded, that they were liberal with him and that he ought to be liberal with them. That is what railroad people in general issue passes for. They issue them—I do not speak of exceptional cases to my friend from Illinois or to myself, but in general—the business of issuing passes is a business that means business, and it is intended to produce a result, just as a railroad company issues to the great shippers of grain and beef from Chicago passes to and fro from New York all the time. That is one of the compensations they give that man for getting his business; and that is not fair toward the man to whom they do not do it, and it is not fair to the other railroads who are not permitted to do it. That is the way the question stands, as it looks to me.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this proposition any further except to say a word in answer to the suggestion that the giving of passes means business. In other words, it means when you give a pass to a legislator you expect something from him. In the State where I reside there are many miles of railroad, and more than in almost any other State in this country. There are numbers and numbers of roads in that State that never expect any legislation, have never had any after they were chartered, and do not want any; and yet they give passes to members of the Legislature, the governor, State officers, sheriffs, and often to the men who transport their goods over the roads. As I said before, they do not do it expecting any legislation. They ask no legislation and have had no legislation.

I now move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator will permit me to make a single observation.

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, my relation to the original amendment offered is somewhat peculiar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Vicarious.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, vicarious, as the Senator from Vermont suggests. I should perhaps rather have described myself as its step-father, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests, its putative father, or it may be its godfather. There is suggested here another relation, it seems; "posthumous," the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] intimates. [Laughter.]

My colleague [Mr. PLUMB], who is absent, as I stated, prepared the amendment and had it printed. I am very sure that if he had not been unavoidably called away from the Senate he would have been here to have advocated it, to have presented the reasons why it should be adopted, and to have repelled the arguments that I myself feel called upon to make against it, for I frankly admit that I am not in favor of it and I do not propose to vote for it. It is a bequest to me; it is bequeathed to me, and of course as the residuary legatee I am bound to present it and make the best showing that I can for it, and having done that, to announce my determination to oppose it.

In the first place, Mr. President, I do not think there has been any adequate foundation laid for placing a wholesale imputation in this way upon Congress. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] declares—and I assume that he is an expert in these matters—that every member of Congress in both Houses has railroad passes in his pocket.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. INGALLS. With great pleasure.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator could not have failed to hear my disclaimer of the broadness of that statement. I distinctly said afterward——

Mr. INGALLS. I was referring to the Senator's first statement, not to his second one.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator be kind enough to do me the justice to state the substance of both my statements?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly I will, with great pleasure, but I was about to proceed, if the Senator had not been so impatient; I was commenting upon his first statement, and was about then to proceed to his second.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will do even justice to my second statement.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly I will, indeed, and after having stated, as I did, that the Senator declared that each member of both Houses had railroad passes in his pocket——

Mr. KENNA. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. INGALLS. He then proceeded to state that his assertion was too broad.

Mr. KENNA. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from West Virginia in his first statement stated no such thing.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator be good enough to advise me what he did say?

Mr. KENNA. The RECORD will advise the Senator what the Senator from West Virginia did state. I did not state as a fact that every member of both Houses had a pass in his pocket.

Mr. INGALLS. Until the Senator corrects me from his own recollection I shall still adhere to the verity of my remembrance, and that is that in his first statement he did declare his belief that each member of both Houses had a railroad pass in his pocket; but he subsequently modified that by the declaration that he supposed that was too broad, but how much too broad he did not declare.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know whether either of those statements is correct or not. I do not know that all the members of both Houses have railroad passes in their pockets. Nor do I know that any considerable number of members of either House have railroad passes in their pockets. Therefore I am unprepared to say that there is any widespread, deeply seated, and diffused necessity for a wholesale imputation like this to be cast upon Congress by our own declaration. I stand ready here to unite with a majority of this body in the adoption of a resolution that shall direct an inquiry to be made as to how many members of this body have railroad passes in their pockets. I will vote affirmatively this afternoon or to-morrow morning in favor of a resolution that shall inquire what members of the Senate go out of this city and come into this city northward and southward upon railroad passes, and westward also, as the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] suggests. And I invite those who believe that this is a great national evil, a great peril and disgrace, to unite with me in inviting immediate and instant inquiry as to the prevalence of this evil, and if it shall appear as the result of that inquiry that every member of this body, or a considerable number of the members of this body, are in the habit of avoiding the payment of railroad fare in going to and from this capital, and that it is a necessity that needs legislation, then I will vote for appropriate legislation.

But I have not the data in my possession at this time that enable me to say whether or not I ought to declare that such is the fatal contagion, the disease that has permeated the whole body-politic, that we are called upon to rise up and with our hands on our mouths and our mouths in the dust—although we can hardly do that when we have risen up [laughter]—declare that we are so unfit to be trusted with the management of our own affairs that we have got to be put under guardianship to be instituted by ourselves through an act of Congress.

Mr. President, for that reason, if for no other, because I do not know the extent of this difficulty, the perils that threaten us, the ills that should be guarded against, I am not prepared to vote for this amendment. There is a homely proverb about the obscenity of the fowl that defiles its own nest, and my judgment is that there has been fully enough during the last few years of declarations on the part of Congress that they, of all people in the United States of America, are not fit to be trusted, that their moral nature is so infirm, that they are so debilitated, that they are so incapable of conducting themselves with decorum and propriety, that they must continually be stiffened up and girded round about with penal statutes to prevent them from doing something that would render them a disgrace and a degradation in the eyes of the American people.

Mr. President, I have a brother-in-law in Colorado who is the traffic manager of one of the great trunk systems of that State. He is an estimable gentleman, who stands high in his profession, and he took the liberty not a great while ago to send me a card of travel over his railroad, and said to me in a letter that he hoped I would come out this summer and bring my family, and that he would take the observation car and hook it to a train and take us all over his route and show us the mountains and the rivers, and perhaps he would go through to Salt Lake and let us see that country.

I should regret to have it supposed that by accepting that act of courtesy on the part of a relative I was subjecting myself to the penalty of some statute like this. What turpitude would there be involved, in case my engagements should allow me after Congress adjourns, in accepting that invitation and taking that ride over that country and looking out of the back windows of the observation car on the cliffs and pinnacles and summits and mountain ranges and wonderful curiosities of Colorado? Would there be anything wrong about that? And yet if I should accept that invitation—no more injurious than if I were to accept an invitation to ride in his buggy down Blake street in Denver—I should be liable, if this amendment becomes a law, to imprisonment not exceeding six months or a fine of not less than $500, or both imprisonment and fine, in the discretion of the court, and I suppose I should get both. [Laughter.] I imagine after having had the hardihood to offer this amendment, and the temerity to vote against it, I should get both fine and imprisonment in case it should become a law.

Mr. President, in the city where I live there are eight or ten railroads concentrated. When I return to my own home to spend the vacations among my people I have had from time to time the courtesies of these various lines of railroad extended to me, not for the transaction of business, not with the idea that I was to do any dirty work for those railroad companies, not that by doing that they had put a collar on my neck so that I was like Gurth, the born thrall of Cedric the Saxon, the bond slave, but simply to enable me from time to time to go out as I desired among my people and visit them and see how they were getting along out in the waste places, and what they wanted me to do when I came back to Congress.

Of course there was no difficulty about my paying my fare if I had desired to do so, but it has not been my habit. [Laughter.] When I have made these journeys around among my people it has not been my habit to pay railroad fare. [Laughter.] And I have occasionally on those journeys been hospitably entertained in various cities on the route. I have been invited to gentlemen's houses and kept overnight and had supper and breakfast and no bill was tendered to me in the morning, and I have gone on my way rejoicing. And yet I venture to say that, notwithstanding all that career of unbridled freedom and license, there has been no profound or deeply seated impression that I was guilty of turpitude, or that in consequence of having accepted these courtesies I had placed myself under any serious obligation to those people.

Mr. President, after we have carefully inspected and scrutinized this amendment, after we have escaped from the first tremor of fear, from the instantaneous trepidation that always overcomes a person when he meets with a specter of this kind in the highway, I do not think the isle had better be affrighted from its propriety. I do not really think that when any man who has heard this amendment read and who has done me the honor of listening to my feeble observations comes to-night to review in the inner consciousness of his own soul the evils that he has done, he will feel himself individually conscious that there has been any such profound wrong or wickedness in his conduct in this behalf as to require us to adopt an amendment that, in the first place, has no connection whatever with the subject of this legislation, and in the next place, does not seem to be warranted by any public exigency.

I now, therefore, with great pleasure yield to the Senator from Illinois to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. May I say one word before——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOM. If I have no right to be heard on the subject, very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to lay the amendment on the table. The question is on that motion.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] upon this bill. Understanding that if he were here he would vote to lay this amendment on the table, I cast my vote "yea."

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but as I believe if he were present he would vote "yea" on this motion, I take the liberty of voting "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire if we are voting on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to lay on the table.

Mr. SPOONER. Which amendment?

Several SENATORS. All.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the pending amendments.

Mr. INGALLS (when Mr. PLUMB's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PLUMB] is absent and paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were here, my colleague would vote against the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present, I understand he would vote for this amendment and I should vote against it. In other words, I would vote to lay it on the table.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Frye,	Logan,	Sewell,
Beck,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Sherman,

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. On the top of page 6 I find the following provision in the bill:

And when any common carrier shall have established and published its rates, fares, charges, and classifications, or any part of the same, in compliance with the provisions of this section, it shall be unlawful for such common carrier to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation than is set forth and specified in such published rates, fares, charges, and classifications, until the same shall have been changed as hereinafter provided.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that that provision intends to compel all railroad and other transportation companies that fall within the purview of this act to charge everybody alike for fares as well as for the transportation of property. It has been the immemorial practice between railroad men controlling their respective railroad companies to exchange passes and to secure tickets from the proper authority of any other company when an officer in charge of a company desires to send an agent connected with his company to transact any business with other companies. It has never been usual, in other words, for railroad presidents or superintendents to charge each other when passing over each other's railroads to railroad conventions or anything of that character; or when a railroad company desires, for instance, to send a clerk to the headquarters of another railroad company to look into some difference between the balances on their books, or anything of that character, to charge fare. I think under this provision of the bill they would be obliged to charge each other for every mile they might ride on their respective roads.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BROWN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULLOM. Has he had his attention called to section 20, which is the last section but one, in which the right to issue "mileage, excursion, and commutation passenger tickets" is reserved in the bill?

Mr. BROWN. These are free tickets; neither mileage nor excursion nor commutation tickets.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest whether that does not go as far as the Senator cares to go?

Mr. BROWN. No, it does not. I think between railroad companies, when they are transacting business with each other, or their officers are attending railroad conventions where they meet to consult about the common good of the respective roads, they should be permitted, as they always have been, to pass each other free of charge over their respective roads; in other words, to give free tickets or free passes in such cases.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not understand that to be the purport of the amendment offered by the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I have not yet read the amendment I propose in this section.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed it was the one in print.

Mr. BROWN. No; it is one I have just prepared. I propose in line 26 of section 5, before the word "No," to insert:

But nothing in this act shall prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés.

That is simply conforming to the constant usage, and I do not see that there can be any legitimate objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 26 of section 5, after the word "provided," it is moved to insert:

But nothing in this act shall prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers or employés.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Now, Mr. President, I desire to offer one or two other amendments, and I will first turn to section 20, the one to which the honorable chairman of the committee has just directed my attention. I should like to preface the motion with a very short statement. I do not intend to take much time on any of these propositions, because I appreciate the value of time now and the further fact that we are to dispose of this bill this evening before we adjourn, as I understand.

It has been the constant usage of railroad companies, so far as I know anything about their management, or at least for a very long time—it has been so during the years I have had connection with them, and I think it has been for a much longer time—to grant reduced rates to the clergy of the different churches. With the exception of a few who occupy the principal pulpits of the cities, as a class clergyman are poor and receive very meager compensation. Many a time one preacher living on the line of a railroad attends three or four churches, preaching at the different churches on different Sabbaths and different days.

The custom of the railroads with which I am familiar is in such cases to give them half-rates or half-fare. It aids the churches very much in their support, and I think the railroad companies do not extend the half-fare very grudgingly. It is no very great burden upon them. I think it would gratify not only the clergy, but all the church-going people of this country to permit that practice to continue, and it would very much mortify them to cut off that privilege.

Now, why should not the railroad companies have the right, if they think proper to do so, to grant free passes even, or reduced fare, to the clergy under such circumstances? It seems to me proper to do so, and as the bill now stands I do not think it could be done.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what there is in the bill now that would prevent a railroad company doing that thing.

Mr. BROWN. I will again refer to the section that I read from a few minutes ago. Probably the Senator did not notice the reading of it.

Mr. GRAY. I ask for information.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that section 5, on page 6, prohibits railroad companies that fall within the provisions of this act from collecting or receiving "from any person or persons a greater or less compensation than is set forth and specified in such published rates, fares, charges, and classifications, until the same shall have been changed as hereinafter provided." When they publish their rates of fares they are bound to stand by them until they have changed them on ten days' notice, and while they are in force they are not permitted to make any distinction or discrimination in favor of or against anybody in reference to rates, fares, or classifications. "Fares" come in there, and they are forbidden from making any discrimination.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that it looks to me now as if the amendment already adopted on his motion would be the limit of the power of the railroad officers. Under the section as it is amended the railroad officer can issue passes to employés.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will look at my amendment again he will see that it only applies to passes granted by railroad officers, presidents or other principal officers, to other railroad officers and employés.

Mr. SEWELL. It would be construed that it was the only exception allowed by this bill. The provision now cited requires that after they have fixed the rates they shall not make any exception; and the Senator's amendment makes it very much stronger than the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWN. It was as strong as the English language could make it. I could not make it stronger. I was proposing now not to amend that section, but to amend the twentieth section, by inserting on page 21, after the word "tickets," in line 6:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates or free passes to ministers of the gospel.

I have some other classes in the printed amendment I offered, but I prefer to have the vote on each class separately, because Senators might be willing in one case to incorporate the amendment and not in another. Therefore, I offer the amendment now in that shape, including only ministers of the gospel.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think that the amendment is necessary in order to enable railroads to allow reduced fares to clergymen; but if it does not by its adoption raise the presumption that nobody else shall have the benefit of reduced rates I have no objection to it. I think it does raise that presumption, and therefore is objectionable.

Mr. BROWN. It comes in at the end of the section.

Mr. CULLOM. But by presumption it precludes the railroads from doing it for anybody else.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Illinois that if the Senator from Georgia will modify his amendment so as to say that "nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent railroad companies from giving reduced rates," then I think it would enable them to give reduced rates; and my judgment is that under the bill as it stands they would have the right to do it if they chose.

Mr. BROWN. I can not find any provision in the bill which would seem to authorize a company to give passes.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator find any prohibition?

Mr. BROWN. I think I do in the section I have read.

Mr. HARRIS. I looked at the section very closely and I could not see it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the Senator from Georgia had better withdraw his amendment, or at least it had better not be adopted, because I think under the bill all the liberty that ought to be taken by railroads in dealing with clergymen can be taken.

Mr. BROWN. Under the bill as it stands, I take the liberty of saying that railroads can not grant passes to clergymen.

Mr. CULLOM. I differ with the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia why, when a railroad company publishes its rates, it may not publish that it will give half-fare to clergymen?

Mr. PLATT. I have been listening with all the attention I could for the last fifteen minutes, and I have not heard anything so as to be able to get a connected idea of what has been going on in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again reminds Senators that complaint is being constantly made that it has been impossible in the last half-hour to hear a word that has been said. The Senate is expected to take notice that the Senator occupying the floor is unable to be heard and Senators complain that they can not hear him on account of the loud conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the amendment to come in after the word "tickets," on page 21, in line 6 of section 20, at the top of the page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, section 20, line 6, after the word "tickets," it is moved to insert:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates or free passes to ministers of the gospel.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "or free passes." I do so because I am satisfied that under the bill the companies will have that right if they choose to exercise it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on laying on the table the amendment of the Senator from Georgia with the amendment to it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on all questions. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I know not how he would vote. Therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am told by the colleague of the Senator from Kansas that he would vote "nay." So I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. I desire to vote "nay;" and I inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has voted "nay."

Mr. MCKENNA. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Fair,	Miller,	Platt,	Teller.
Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,

NAYS—36.

Allison,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Frye,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Blair,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Vance,
Brown,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cullom,	Hale,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Dawes,	Harris,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Sabin,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Sherman,
Call,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Camden,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Manderson,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Pike,

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I ask leave to amend the original amendment by striking out one word and inserting another. As I now have it, it reads:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates or free passes to ministers of the gospel.

I desire to say "ministers of religion," instead of "ministers of the gospel." The latter expression, I understand, would exclude the ministers of some religious associations in the United States, because they do not pretend to preach the gospel.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What ministers are those?

Mr. BROWN. The Jews, I believe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Old Testament is part of the gospel.

Mr. BROWN. Preaching the gospel is generally considered to apply to the New Testament.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read.

Mr. BROWN. I strike out the words "the gospel" and insert the word "religion."

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as modified is to insert in section 20, line 6, after the work "tickets:"

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates or free passes to ministers of religion.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my amendment to strike out "or free passes," and reiterate that I do so because under the bill as it stands I hold that the companies have the authority to grant such a pass, if they choose to do so, without such legislation as this.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think they have, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not clearly understand the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. If my amendment is agreed to it will give the railroad companies power to discriminate in favor of special and lower rates to clergymen. I offer the amendment because inserting the words "or free passes" may tend to construe the bill so that it would not allow the railroad companies to give free passes to anybody else if they choose to do so.

Mr. HOAR. It is very clear that if the original amendment passes without the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] can not have his free passes any longer unless he preaches the gospel. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN. I see gentlemen are about to vote under a misunderstanding of the question. Let my amendment be read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BROWN and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand, the Senator leaves out the words "or free passes."

Mr. BROWN. No, the motion is to strike them out. The bill provides as it now stands:

That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets.

Then my amendment comes in after the word "tickets," and the provision is made here as to the class it refers to for free tickets or free transportation in the exception. Why should there not be free or reduced rates in the case of clergymen?

Mr. CULLOM. While I do not believe that the amendment is at all necessary in view of the general provisions of the bill, if the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment is adopted I have no objection to it personally.

Mr. BROWN. If that is adopted it is worth nothing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. DAWES. What is the pending question on which we are about to vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], which will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CONGER] is not here. If he were here he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Beck,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Berry,	Gray,	Miller,	Sherman,
Call,	Hale,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Camden,	Harris,	Palmer,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Evarts,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Fair,	Kenna,	Sabin,	Wilson of Md.
Gibson,	Logan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—16.

Blair,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	Morgan,	Vest,
Coke,	Hearst,	Payne,	Walthall,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Allison,	Conger,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Mahone,	Stanford,
Butler,	Frye,	Manderson,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Chace,	Harrison,	Morrill,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read as it stands now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "tickets," in line 6 of section 20, insert:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has become of the remainder of the printed amendment as to "editors of newspapers, delegates to agricultural conventions," &c.?

Mr. BROWN. That has not been offered yet. I desire to offer one amendment to the amendment. At the end of the amendment I desire to have inserted the words:

Or free passes to blind persons.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that Senators will not nibble at this bill all day in this sort of way. It seems to me that if we are going to pass any bill we ought to confine it to legitimate subjects for consideration. It has been voted here two or three times that the bill does not interfere with the issuance of passes. That has been declared by two or three yea-and-nay votes, and I certainly think it does not. I hope the Senator (who I believe is friendly to some legislation) will not interfere with the passage of the bill by offering amendments that have already been disposed of in effect.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator accuses me of nibbling at the bill. There are only a few little errors that I want to nibble out of it. I want to get the bill in a shape to get along with. I think there are some little defects that ought to be nibbled out. I have examined the bill very carefully, and I confess I can not find anything that authorizes me as an officer of a railroad to grant a pass to a blind man. I think it is prohibited as the bill now stands.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me that the votes of the Senate have twice declared very clearly that the bill does not interfere with the issuance of passes. I have no objection to the Senator offering his amendment, however.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know, under the bill as it now stands with the modified amendment of the Senator from Georgia, whether delegates to religious assemblies, that is, conventions of the Methodist Church, the Baptist Church, &c., are included? I wish to know what the amendment means which provides that free passes or reduced rates may be given to ministers?

Mr. CULLOM. The words "free passes" were voted out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then leave out "free passes." I wish to know what "reduced rates to ministers" means if it does not imply that the delegates to any religious assembly, as the Senator's amendment originally was, are to be excluded, or whether the bill would permit a railroad company, if there was to be a great Methodist convention at Atlanta, Ga., or at Burlington, Vt., to allow delegates to that convention to go at half-fare; that is, a full rate one way for going and returning?

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand that, as the bill now stands, any reduction of fares could be given, unless it came under the head of an excursion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I want to bring it down further in the same line to the assemblies of the soldiers, who every year assemble and have their camp-fires and reunion meetings, both North and South, I suppose; and people on the one side, at least, are thought to have deserved a good deal of their country; and on the other side, of that part of the country for which they fought. Now, I should like to know whether this bill would prevent a railroad company from giving half-fare, as it is called, to a great soldiers' convention North or South—I am not on the question on which side they fought?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will look at section 20 he will find these words:

That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, storage, or handling of property free or at reduced rates for the United States, State, or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the issuance of mileage, excursion, or commutation passenger tickets.

It seems to me that these words authorize the railroad companies to issue tickets at reduced rates to anybody who is going to a convention or soldiers' reunion, or whatever it may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Coming under the head of excursion tickets?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly, excursion tickets.

Mr. BROWN. What I refer to are not usually called excursions.

Mr. CULLOM. My observation is that they are always called excursion tickets, and always issued by railroads.

Mr. BROWN. In my section of country the railroads never issue them as excursion tickets. An "excursion" is where a large number of people want to go from one point to another for a sort of holiday or frolic, as they do sometimes. That is called "an excursion," or by our colored friends, who abbreviate it a little, "a 'scursion." But I do not understand that that would embrace a Methodist camp-meeting, such as the Senator from Vermont referred to.

Mr. CULLOM. Could not the railroad issue excursion tickets to the camp-meeting the Senator refers to?

Mr. BROWN. Not in the usual acceptation of the term, not in the usual railroad phrase.

Mr. CULLOM. They may adapt the phrase to the law.

Mr. BROWN. I think as we have made these exceptions we had better perfect them by making them as they ought to be. I would agree with the Senator from Vermont in his suggestion that they ought to apply to soldiers on both sides. The railroad companies are not compelled to grant a free pass, only permitted to do so if they think proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand whether the Senator offers his amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I offer my amendment in reference to blind persons. I know they are very seldom provided for. They come to a railroad office and say, "I have a friend at the next city"—perhaps 100 or 200 miles—"and he writes me that if I will come there he will do something for me. I have not a dollar of money; I live on charity. Will you not give me a free pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would fall under the head of charity in the other part of the section.

Mr. BROWN. It might possibly fall there.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me perfectly clear that such cases are already provided for in the bill, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia to his own amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the original amendment of the Senator from Georgia as amended.

Mr. BROWN. I move further to amend by inserting as the language is in the print:

The delegates to agricultural conventions or religious assemblies.

Simply giving a railroad company, if it chooses, the right to grant reduced rates in such cases.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope it will be voted down. I do not care to discuss it further.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the proposed amendment the words:

Or delegates to agricultural conventions or religious assemblies.

Mr. BROWN. Under no proper acceptation of the term is an agricultural convention called an excursion, nor is a Methodist camp-meeting or people going to it called an excursion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will you not please add, "or people who go to assemblages of military men?"

Mr. BROWN. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot move to amend it because it would be in the third degree.

Mr. BROWN. I accept it as part of my amendment if you will put it in shape.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Say "or assemblies of those who have been in the military service."

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Georgia, or one or the other, if a thousand people were going from Washington to Baltimore to an agricultural convention or a military assemblage or a church convention or to any other meeting, could they not get excursion rates under this bill?

Mr. PLATT and Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very question in dispute between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think there can be any dispute about it.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think they could if this bill becomes a law and the law is observed by the railroad companies. They must follow the usual practice and call things by their right names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Add to the amendment the following:

Or delegates to agricultural conventions or religious assemblies or assemblies of those who have been in the military service.

So as to read:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion or delegates to agricultural conventions or religious assemblies or assemblies of those who have been in the military service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment to the amendment, and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. BROWN. I call for the yeas and nays. I understand that strikes out what I thought there was a pretty strong disposition to adopt, a provision in favor of ministers of religion.

Mr. HARRIS. That amendment is still pending. The Senate is proposing to amend that.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Chair hold that the vote just taken voting down these others does not embrace that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It certainly does not.

Mr. BROWN. The question will still be on that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Then I merely call for a division and not for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the original amendment of the Senator from Georgia as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I submitted an amendment some days ago, to which I now call the attention of the chairman of the committee. In the bill previously reported in the Forty-eighth Congress the commission were directed to inquire into the system known as "stock-watering." I had proposed an amendment, to insert the clause of the proposed bill of the Forty-eighth Congress, which has been omitted from this bill. Whether it was an accidental omission by the committee, or whether the committee intended to strike out that portion of the previous bill, I do not know.

I propose on page 20, after the word "pooling," to insert the words:

Also the system known as stock-watering.

In the bill proposed by this same committee and acted upon in the Forty-eighth Congress those words were included, and if I should obtain the attention of the chairman of the committee I would desire to know whether they purposely omitted those words in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 19, line 3, after the word "pooling," it is proposed to insert:

Also the system known as stock-watering.

So as to read:

That the said commission shall specially inquire into the method of railroad management or combination known as pooling, also the system known as stock-watering, and shall report to Congress what, if any, legislation is advisable and expedient upon that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator seems to be appealing to me. I do not think there is any importance to be attached to the amendment whatever. It is something that belongs to the States substantially. We have no control over it, and I do not think it will add anything to the force of the legislation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have we no control over the roads incorporated by the United States?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I now propose an amendment as a separate section, to be added to the bill:

Any railroad corporation against whom suit is brought in the courts of the State where the cause of action originated or the penalty was incurred is hereby prohibited from removing the same to any circuit or other court of the United States.

That is, that when such a suit is brought in a State court the corporation shall not be allowed to remove it to a United States court under this bill. That is my amendment.

Mr. PLATT. There is nothing in this bill that provides for bringing an action in a State court.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; it is not necessary that there should be anything in the bill allowing it. That a party has a right to do. A citizen of Connecticut or of Nebraska may bring a suit against a corporation in a State court, and there it will remain and be tried unless the corporation asks to remove it to a Federal court under a statute of the United States.

For a violation of this proposed act, for any damages which accrue, for which a party may bring suit under the act, or for which any penalty is provided under the act, I propose that when such a suit is brought, if the party has a right to bring it in a State court, the corporation shall be prohibited from removing it into the Federal courts. The removal to the Federal courts is provided by statute already; and for damages incurred, which the bill provides for, a man may bring suit against the corporation, and the suit for the penalties provided in this act may be brought in the State court.

It would seem to be hardly worth while in this bill, which seeks to do justice to the people, to make their burdens any greater. What would any remedy given by the bill be worth to the citizen who lives, if you please, 400 or 500 miles from the place where a Federal court may be held? Under the bill damages may be allowed to an individual for overcharge, for extortion, or for discrimination. He may bring suit in the State court, and the cause may be removed 500 miles—it may be in the State of Kansas or Nebraska or on the Missouri River, where Federal courts are held—and to give the privilege for damages in such a case would be a denial of justice, because after the party has commenced his suit in the court of the State which is opened to him, then the corporation presents itself and asks to remove it to a point 500 miles distant, where he must go with his witnesses and dance attendance week after week and month after month, and the case may be placed on the calendar, where it may be four or five years before it is reached. It is a mockery to tell the citizen he may have damages when they are denied to him in this way.

The people of the Western States have been suffering a long time from the power of corporations to remove their cases into the Federal courts. If I may be allowed a moment longer I will state that the foreign insurance companies came into the State of Nebraska, and when her Legislature attempted to provide that their suits should not be removed, they were met by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, or some district or circuit court, saying that the State has not the power to protect its own citizens by providing that no foreign insurance company shall do business in that State until it has filed a written agreement with the secretary of state that it will not remove a case from the State court to the Federal court. In the interest of the people it is time there should be some such remedy either by providing that the Federal courts shall be held in different parts of the State or granting this relief.

We are suffering in various ways, if I may be allowed still further to speak of this matter. A foreign corporation in Scotland or in England goes to the State of Nebraska and loans money on real estate at 10 per cent. interest; which they have a right to do, and if even for a day or two the debt is overdue the mortgage may be foreclosed. Two-thirds and probably three-fourths of the farms in Kansas and Nebraska are mortgaged, and a large portion of them are mortgaged to foreign corporations, and then for any default, when they borrowed the money in order to improve their condition in life and to improve their farms, the mortgage is foreclosed.

We want to protect a little the people from the advantages which capital gives. I shall not probably be successful in this attempt, but I may at least make a suggestion in that direction. I say that while we are seeking to restrict the ownership of real estate in the hands of foreigners, we give them an unlimited power to foreclose our lands under their mortgages. Iowa may be more fortunate but Nebraska is not, and the calendar in the Federal courts is beginning to be loaded down with mortgages foreclosed in the name of foreign corporations.

The point is to evade the laws of the State. It is not necessary to prohibit that. You can allow the foreign corporation to loan its money to a citizen of the State. The law of Nebraska provides that in the foreclosure of a mortgage no attorney's fee shall be allowed.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is wrong.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Wrong! No, sir. The people of Nebraska by their Legislature say so, and it belongs to them to say whether it is right or not. A Senator near me says that that would be cheating the lawyers. All I say is that it would be no crime. The State of Nebraska provides that there shall be no percentage for the attorney in the case. But although the law of Nebraska provides that there shall be no attorney's fee, yet capitalists would insist upon putting in their mortgages, notwithstanding the law against it, a provision to pay 10 per cent. to the attorney.

Capitalists demanded and required that the party to whom the money was loaned should in violation of the State law incorporate in the mortgage a promise to pay the attorney a fee of 10 per cent. That matter was taken to the supreme court of the State of Nebraska, and the supreme court of the State of Nebraska said: "No; parties can not stipulate to violate the law." A capitalist has a mortgage of $10,000 and he desires to foreclose it. I am speaking of what is the actual practice. He runs over into the State of my friend from Iowa and he gets some man to buy the mortgage, and suit is instituted in the name of the Iowa gentleman who buys the mortgage. He is a non-resident of the State of Nebraska and he brings his suit in the United States court. By that means he evades and violates the law of the State of Nebraska and proceeds to a foreclosure, and on the $10,000 mortgage there is paid 10 per cent., which is $1,000 attorney fee, in violation of the law of the State.

Foreign corporations resort to that subterfuge, and at every term foreign corporations are being more and more represented on the calendar of the Federal courts in precisely that attitude. The citizens are powerless. The Legislatures have no power to protect their citizens against this violation of the law.

The insurance companies act in precisely the same way. Two or three hundred miles out on the Missouri a man's house burns down and the foreign insurance company removes his case to the Federal court, compelling the citizen to accede to the terms which the corporation asks. So in these cases the railroad companies will do the same, and the citizen will be powerless in that respect. You give a right of action and then retain in the corporation the power of removal, and the right of action becomes of no avail.

I trust that this point will be readily seen and appreciated. What objection should there be to saying that a corporation which comes into Kansas, into Iowa, into Nebraska, may enrich itself as a citizen of Nebraska does, as their own corporations do, and that that corporation shall have their cases tried in the courts of Nebraska? For that reason I have proposed the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. Any railroad corporation against whom suit is brought in the courts of the State where the cause of action originated or the penalty was incurred, is hereby prohibited from removing the same to any circuit or other court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some years ago the Committee on the Judiciary had under consideration the question of amending the law regarding the removal of causes, and we were in favor of and reported a bill to limit the removal of causes from State to Federal courts, as they are called—what I should call national courts, if I do not offend anybody by the phrase. But we found that it was a subject which required careful investigation and most skillful and accurate expressions in order to keep within the constitutional line and not to do injustice as well.

The bill was reported, however, and, as we thought, in pretty good form, but it did not become a law. I hope it will yet become a law; but I appeal to my friend from Nebraska that he will produce more mischief by this amendment in the form in which he has got it, just then and there and in that way, by putting it in this bill, which is an administrative bill and not a judicial bill, than he will by leaving it and trying to help myself and others to pass a bill which shall cover the whole of this subject. For that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call attention to the language of the amendment. It assumes that under this bill a man may have his remedy in the State courts. I undertake to say that that is not the law. I do not suppose that anybody in the Senate will for a moment believe that that is the law.

Mr. SPOONER. He may have the common-law remedy.

Mr. TELLER. He may have the common-law remedy, and he has now, and that we are not interfering with by a special provision of the bill. The suggestion is that if a party brings in a State court under the bill his suit the corporation shall not remove it. How long will he stay in the State court? Not long enough to get a solid footing. Unless the States legislate that suits may be brought, we can not legislate into the State courts any of these cases. I have at least always understood that that was the rule.

First, if the Senator proposes to save these people a tribunal in the State courts he has got to devise some method to get them in the State courts and keep them there up to the time that they ask for a transfer of the case to the Federal courts. There is not anything in the amendment; it is absolutely meaningless. It could not help anybody; it may not hurt anybody; but it would not look well for the United States Senate to put into the bill a proposition of that character.

Mr. PLATT. If there is any force or effect to the amendment, it is that the Congress of the United States passes a law and then says that no suit shall be maintained under it in its own courts, but they shall all be maintained under it in State courts. I apprehend that Congress is not ready to do that.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I gave notice the other day of an amendment which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 1 it is proposed to add the words:

And every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The only object of the amendment is to bring any case of extortion under the penalty clause of section 7. I do not know that the chairman of the committee will object to it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think there is a little distinction between the violation of an act against extortion and one of unjust discrimination. Still, so far as I am concerned, when it is declared that it shall be willful extortion, I do not personally have any objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. In section 8, prescribing the qualification of the commissioners, the following language is used:

No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any manner pecuniarily interested therein, shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office.

In another section, section 14, beginning in line 3, the bill provides that—

A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, but no commissioner shall participate in any hearing or proceeding in which he has any pecuniary interest.

This latter clause is customary in our circuit and supreme courts, that the judge shall not sit on a case where he has any pecuniary interest; but the first clause absolutely prohibits any gentleman who may be appointed to qualify if he owns any stock in any common carrier, no matter whether he has to hear the cause or not.

I submit that that is a requirement which ought not to be in the bill. The number of gentlemen in this country who are competent to fill the position of commissioner under the bill is necessarily limited. It requires deep, broad men, the very best that we can possibly obtain. I should not like to say to such men as ex-Senator Thurman, Judge Cooley, Roscoe Conkling, A. S. Hewitt, A. J. Cassatt, and a dozen others whom I might name, that before acting in this capacity they would have to divest themselves of everything that they owned in the world in all probability, for that class of men as a general thing have their investments in railroad securities.

A man who is thoroughly equipped, thoroughly competent to fill this position, certainly has amassed something in life. If he has not, it is an evidence that he is not fit for the place, in my opinion. The provision which governs the judges of our courts up to the Supreme Court certainly ought to be sufficient to protect the country against the acts of these commissioners.

I do not think, looking at it from a business standpoint, as a business man, that we ought to require gentlemen who are competent to fill this position to divest themselves of everything they have got and put it out of their hands.

Therefore I move an amendment, which I send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 8, line 21, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the words "or owning stock or bonds thereof, or who is in any manner pecuniarily interested therein;" so as to read:

No person in the employ of or holding any official relation to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall enter upon the duties of or hold such office.

Mr. CULLOM. I only wish to say a word about the amendment. While it may not be of very great consequence, yet the fact is that there is scarcely a State in the Union which has a railroad commission that has not such a clause in the law creating it. I think myself that it is a proper provision. Whether such gentlemen as the Senator has named have their pockets full of the bonds or securities of railroads or not, I do not know; but I know a good many men in this country who unfortunately have not, who I think would make very good commissioners. I believe myself, in view of the history of the different States upon the subject, that we ought to leave the words stand as they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Illinois to a blank in the last section of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, I intended to have that filled, if there are no other amendments to be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no other amendments offered.

Mr. CULLOM. I propose to insert in the last section of the bill the words "one hundred," so as to read "one hundred thousand dollars."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to fill the blank in section 21, before the word "thousand," by inserting the words "one hundred;" so as to read:

That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1887, and the intervening time anterior thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I have one more amendment which I wish to offer before the bill is reported to the Senate. In section 4, line 6, before the word "provided," I move to insert:

And this provision shall apply to transportation by common carriers on rivers as well as by railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CULLOM. That subject has been discussed, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BROWN. There has been some discussion on the subject, it is true, but there has been no vote of the Senate on the question that I am aware of.

I know there may be a great deal of difficulty about regulating on the ocean or on the lakes the transportation companies under the provisions of the bill; but why steamboats running on the Mississippi River should have the privilege of charging more for the shorter than the longer haul, which is practiced every day, and why they should be left perfectly free from control while the railroads running alongside of them are put under this control, I am unable to see.

There is no difficulty about embracing the rivers. The railroads are a distinct class, and the committee has taken them in and made the act apply to them. The rivers are as much a distinct class as contradistinguished from either an ocean or a lake.

There are probably 30,000 miles of navigable rivers in the United States. Why should not the provisions of the bill apply as well to the transportation on the rivers as on the railroads, either on the side of the river or anywhere else? I confess I am unable to see any good reason why the bill should not apply as well to the steamboats as to the railroads.

It is not denied that the same evil exists in both cases. I put on record the other evening a table prepared by a distinguished railroad man, giving the figures, showing that there are three companies in Cincinnati who own the three steamboat lines, and they have divided the river between themselves. One company takes from Cincinnati to Louisville, another from Louisville to Memphis, and another from Memphis to New Orleans. If an independent boat is put on the river, he states that they put one of their regular boats after it, running to the same points, and putting the freights down to a ruinously low rate, and they drive it out. The companies have the monopoly, and they charge just as they please in fixing the rates. If it is a competing point, they put the rate lower. If it is a point where there is no competition, at half the distance, they put the rate double as much. If it is necessary to control transportation at all, why should that be permitted on rivers if not on the railroads?

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from Georgia has answered his own interrogation when he says that boats come in and compete with each other and bring down the freights to a low point, and then go in and combine.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator did not understand me. I know he would not misrepresent me if he had understood me.

Mr. PALMER. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I said that this distinguished railroad man had furnished me the information that the three lines or companies have divided the river into three parts and each takes one part. They allow no competition. If an independent boat goes in upon the river they take a boat out of their own lines and have it run alongside of the independent boat between the same points, charging a ruinously low rate until they drive it out of the river or drive it into a combination with themselves; and they do not tolerate any competition.

Mr. PALMER. I will say that I have seen the same course of procedure followed on the rivers of this country, but it always rectifies itself.

Mr. BROWN. Then why would not the railroads rectify themselves?

Mr. PALMER. The case is entirely different. When an evil exists you can not get up a rival railroad in six months. It is very well known that where excessive charges are not restrained new boats come into existence; the evil cures itself; and it seems to me that anything of this kind added to the bill would render it entirely nugatory and make it ridiculous.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to see the old discussion opened again, and therefore I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to lay the amendment of the Senator from Georgia on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve the amendment in section 4, agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the words "and from the same original point of departure," so that I may move to amend it in a way that I hope will meet the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be regarded as reserved.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to reserve the first amendment in section 4, I mean the first in point of the order in which it stands, the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment also will be reserved.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish also to reserve for a separate vote the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the same section next in order after the one referred to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I wish to reserve also the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] in line 26 of section 5. Those are the amendments I wish to reserve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments indicated will be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. INGALLS. Will it be in order after the bill shall have been reported to move to strike out section 4 entirely?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. That I did not know.

Mr. VEST. I desire to reserve a separate vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], in order to move to strike out certain words in lines 59, 60, and 61, on page 3 of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be reserved.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] about water routes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. KENNA. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont, who has reserved for a separate vote the amendment of my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] to section 4, if he has any objection to stating now what will be the substance of his amendment to the amendment of my colleague?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not the slightest.

Mr. HOAR. Let us settle the other amendments first.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to stating.

Mr. KENNA. I should be glad to have the substance of the amendment to the amendment stated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I will state that to the Senator from West Virginia, who has asked me a fair question——

Mr. KENNA. And solely for information. I want to have it understood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I will state to him and to the Senate what I propose to move. I propose to retain the words which were stricken out as in Committee of the Whole and add to them, after "departure," the words "or the same point of arrival;" so as to make it reciprocal both ways.

Mr. KENNA. Let me ask, so that I may understand the Senator, whether he means to put the point of departure and the point of arrival in the alternative?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; which I think ought to harmonize the views of both sides of the Senate upon the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be reserved? If not, the question will be taken on concurring in the remaining amendments. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole not reserved.

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the bill be printed as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us print it as passed. That is the best way.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, let us pass it first and then print it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on concurring in the first amendment reserved, the reserved amendments to be taken in their order. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 6, after the word "used," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole agreed to insert the words "under a common control, management, or arrangement;" so as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, &c.

Mr. SEWELL. It is hardly necessary for me to make any remarks on the amendment. The question is perfectly clear to the Senate. The amendment adopted throws the transportation lines by water practically out of the bill, so that you will adopt rules to govern the railroads which will prevent their competing as they do now with the transportation lines by water. The proposition was first voted down by a very large vote, and I trust it will be now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the first amendment reserved. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is non-concurred in. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. PLATT. Was the amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], non-concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has non-concurred in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the question taken by yeas and nays. ["Too late!"]

Mr. PALMER. I did not understand the vote to be that the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. PLATT. I think it is but justice to the Senator who offered that amendment, who has now left the Chamber, that there should be a fair expression of the Senate upon it.

Mr. INGALLS. I think justice to us requires that he should stay here.

Mr. HALE. If he has abandoned the amendment, certainly the rest of us need not consume time needlessly.

Mr. PALMER. He made an express request that the yeas and nays should be called upon concurring in the amendment if he were away, and he is away on official business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you want to have the yeas and nays called?

Mr. PALMER. I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, let the Senator have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking the vote on concurring in the first reserved amendment by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 6, after the word "used," insert the words "under a common control, management, or arrangement."

Mr. MCMILLAN. In the absence of this amendment all transportation by water in connection with railroads is embraced in the bill. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan, which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole, restricts the transportation by water to lines of boats which run in connection with a line of railroad under some common control, management, or agreement, so that if there is no such common arrangement or agreement the boats are not within this act, and there can be competition on the great lakes as every place else.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the first reserved amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH answered to his name.

Mr. CALL. Pending the question on concurring in the amendment, if agreeable to the Senator from Illinois, I will move that the Senate adjourn. ["Too late!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the roll is proceeding, and the first name has been responded to.

The roll-call was resumed.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CONGER] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] on this question. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Beck,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Harris,	Palmer,	Spooner,
Call,	Hearst,	Payne,	Vance,
Camden,	Hoar,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Whitthorne.
Fair,	McMillan,	Sabin,

NAYS—14.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Miller,	Teller,
Allison,	George,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Iowa.
Blair,	Hawley,	Sewell,
Cullom	Logan,	Sherman,

ABSENT—31.

Blackburn,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Pike,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,
Butler,	Evarts,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Cameron,	Frye,	McPherson,	Stanford,
Chace,	Gray,	Mahone,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Hale,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Harrison,	Morrill,

So the first reserved amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CALL. Unless the Senator from Illinois objects, I will now move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. The unanimous agreement of the Senate some days ago was that the bill should be finished to-day, and I hope that we shall go on until we have disposed of it.

Mr. CALL. I shall not object to that course if the Senator from Illinois insists on it, but——

Mr. CULLOM. It will take only a little while longer, I think.

Mr. CALL. These are important amendments, and necessarily we must consider them hastily now.

Mr. KENNA. I do not understand that there was any unanimous consent that the bill should be finally disposed of to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, there was.

Mr. KENNA. I appeal to the RECORD. I think there was not any understanding of the sort.

Mr. CULLOM. The President of the Senate may decide that matter.

Mr. KENNA. There was a general disposition to have an understanding that at an early hour—4 o'clock in the afternoon—the Senate should proceed to vote without further debate, but no such understanding was reached.

I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois at this moment that if his programme is to force a conclusion of the bill to-night, he may find himself rather retarding than improving the progress of the bill. This is not a bill to be forced through the Senate at this hour of the evening without a very thorough understanding by everybody that it is to be done. There are some amendments, one in particular, which will probably not be coerced through at this hour of the evening in the absence of a number of Senators. I should like to see the bill concluded at as early an hour as possible, but I admonish the Senator that he may make better haste by going more slowly on the proposition to pass the bill to-night.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator addresses himself to me as though he thought I was undertaking to bulldoze somebody.

Mr. KENNA. I beg pardon. I do not mean to intimate any such thing.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is certainly mistaken in his man, if he thinks so. I have a very distinct recollection of what occurred. In the first instance, I asked that the bill be disposed of at 5 o'clock on Monday, yesterday. Some Senators, among them the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], objected. Then, on the appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that I yield and give another day, fixing the time at 3 o'clock to-day for the final vote and to dispose of the bill, I asked that that be done. Then the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] objected, and said he did not want any hour fixed, but was willing that the bill should be disposed of to-day, and that was assented to.

Mr. KENNA. Provided that we should reach a conclusion of the debate.

Mr. CULLOM. That was the unanimous agreement, as I understood it at any rate, and I think every other Senator who was present so understood it.

Mr. KENNA. I think that the Senator will find that instead of that being the unanimous understanding it was simply the end of that proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I should be glad to see this bill with the amendments, especially those which are reserved and yet to be acted upon, in print. I am going to stay with the Senator from Illinois as long as he wants to stay here to-night if he chooses to go on; but I think perhaps it would be quite as well for us to allow the bill with the amendments agreed to as in Committee of the Whole to be printed. I have no objection to an understanding that we shall take it up immediately after the routine business in the morning and proceed to vote. I have no objection to considering the general debate entirely closed, and that we proceed to vote upon the various amendments to-morrow. I am ready to go on now, however, if the Senate is entirely willing to do so.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to know what the decision of the Senate was the other day before I say anything further about it.

Mr. HARRIS. My suggestion was wholly independent of that. I do not question the agreement as stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has the proceedings before him, which are much more accurate than the recollection of any individual, and they correspond with the recollection of the Chair at the time. After some colloquy between the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] the Senator from Illinois said:

My object is to get a time fixed and get the subject disposed of at some period.

Then follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to fix Tuesday for taking the vote on this bill? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection to that proposition to fix Tuesday as the period for taking the vote on the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not later than that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not later than Tuesday.

That was the understanding.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I appeal to him to consent to an adjournment at this time. It is very evident to those of us who are friends of the bill, and have been from the earliest possible time, that there will be a good deal of discussion upon the reserved amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now is a good time for it.

Mr. CALL. It is evident that we would be kept here until a late hour to-night without effecting the passage of the bill. I therefore propose to the Senator from Illinois that he consent to adjourn, and if he does not object I will move an adjournment.

Mr. HALE. We had better come to some understanding before adjourning.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not feel like yielding, for the reason that I have been a good deal abused, I may say, for having a measure here that has taken up so much time, and I have been very anxious to have it disposed of so as to get it out of the way of other business. I have been in as much haste as possible consistent with due deliberation, and I am unwilling now to yield to an adjournment unless there can be an hour fixed at an early part of the day to-morrow at which time the bill and amendments shall be disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I object to, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] did. It is not right on a bill of this kind to fix an hour. We came to that understanding the other day, objecting to hours, and the Senator from Iowa was right about it; but we agreed that we would stay it out, with the amount of business there is before the Senate. Every Senator, if he has kept the run of the bill, knows just what the amendments are interlined in his bill, and what the effect of them is, as far as any of us can understand them, which I am not very sure that I do as to the whole of them.

It does not bind the Chair, all admit, but we agreed we would stay it out to-night; and now to make an agreement to stay it out to-morrow or to vote at a particular time would turn out in the same way probably. Certainly to agree to vote at a particular time is objectionable, as the Senator from Iowa said the other day, because some amendment might be proposed which ought to be discussed a little; but to agree to stay until it is done is safe for everybody.

Mr. KENNA. I do not understand that we agreed to stay here indefinitely, day and night, until the bill was done, or that we agreed to sit it out to-day. Of course I do not mean to assume that any Senator on this floor will undertake to delay final action on the bill for a moment. I have seen no indication of that sort, and I do not expect to see any. I know at least one amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole to which a great many Senators attach much importance; and upon that amendment I think I express the sentiment of the entire Senate when I say that it is desirable to have the Senate full when the question is determined. That is the motive of all I have said on this question. I have no desire to delay the bill in any manner whatever, nor to precipitate it, beyond reasonable opportunities which may be afforded.

I beg the Senator from Illinois to understand most distinctly that I meant no reflection upon him in any feature of his management of the bill in what I said.

Mr. CULLOM. I only said what I did on the supposition that the Senator thought I was misrepresenting the state of facts. I certainly agree with the Senator from West Virginia in desiring a full vote on the particular amendment to which the Senator, I suppose, refers; and I should be very glad if we could have it now if we can have a full Senate here.

Mr. KENNA. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that we can not get a full vote to-night, for the reason that several Senators are absent and not paired on the question, and I hope he will consent to an adjournment until to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. My purpose in naming an hour was that we might get through with the bill before spending the whole day to-morrow in its consideration. If we do not name an hour it is inevitable that we shall take all day to-morrow in the consideration of the bill, and thereby keep other business back.

Mr. ALLISON. Why can we not agree that at a certain hour to-morrow, say 2 o'clock, what is known as general debate shall cease, and then brief debate shall be allowed.

Mr. HOAR. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ten minutes.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont suggests a brief debate of ten minutes for amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I shall object for one to consuming the morning hour, as it is called, with this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. When?

Mr. FRYE. To-morrow morning.

Mr. KENNA. We can commence at 2 o'clock and dispose of the bill easily in the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair awaits any proposition which may be made.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator from Illinois will consent that the matter may go over; and I speak only with reference to one amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator make some definite proposition, so that we may understand if it is adopted what we shall do to-morrow?

Mr. VEST. Let us agree to take the vote at 5 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire whether there would be any objection to the arrangement which the Senator from Iowa has in substance suggested, that at 4 o'clock to-morrow general debate shall cease, and that debate thereafter shall be under a ten-minute rule or a five-minute rule, I do not care which.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Five minutes.

Mr. HOAR. That proposition does not involve an agreement to take up the bill at the close of the routine morning business, but it leaves it in the power of the majority of the Senate then to do it, as of course it always can take up any particular bill when it shall see fit.

Mr. SAWYER. I suggest that we take up the bill at 2 o'clock. There will be time enough then if we vote at 4 o'clock, and it will give us the morning hour for the Calendar, which we have not had for a long time.

Mr. HALE. Why not have all debate to-morrow under the five-minute rule?

Mr. EDMUNDS. And have the same understanding which we have had, that we may violate it.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Chair to propose that unanimous consent be given that all debate after 4 o'clock to-morrow shall proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CULLOM. And that the subject be disposed of to-morrow before adjournment.

Mr. GORMAN. There will be no objection to that course, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that at 4 o'clock to-morrow any further debate on the pending bill and amendments shall be under the five-minute rule, strictly enforced. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York objects.

Mr. MILLER. I object to any arrangement of that kind at all. I have had something to do with this bill. The arrangement which was made the other day to take the vote to-day I think was improperly made. I say that in sustaining the position taken by the Senator from West Virginia. The proposition to fix the hour for a vote on the bill was called up early in the morning, as soon as the bill was taken up, and no arrangement was made. Then later in the day it was called up, when a number of Senators who would not have consented to the arrangement were out of the Chamber, and I judge that that arrangement was improperly made.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, it seems to me that he is mistaken in the question of time. I think the one suggestion followed the other in a very few minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I was present when the first suggestion was made, and I did not understand that any such agreement was come to at all. I went away from the Senate Chamber understanding and believing that no arrangement had been arrived at for any definite hour for voting.

Mr. KENNA. May I make a suggestion? I had the same impression exactly, and that is why I made the suggestion I did a while ago. When the first proposition to fix a time was made there was no agreement reached, and I left the Senate Chamber with the understanding that there was no time fixed.

Mr. MILLER. The bill has been under discussion for several weeks. One very important amendment has been made, known as the Camden amendment. A vote has been reserved upon it in the Senate. Several days of discussion have been had upon that proposition as it now stands before the Senate. After the bill is reported finally to the Senate, when we come to a time when we are to be asked to vote upon it——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now.

Mr. MILLER. Which is now, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, the Senator from Vermont gives notice of another amendment touching that same proposition. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont may be found to be quite as important as the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia which has been discussed here for days. I do not say that it is, and I do not say that I shall desire to discuss it at all, but if Senators will consider that amendment they will find that it is very important indeed, and it may necessarily lead to a long discussion.

To say that the discussion to-morrow after 4 o'clock or after any other time shall proceed under the five-minute rule is simply to say that this body is to act upon that most important proposition in the bill, because it is the most important proposition in the bill, in my judgment, the fourth section, without proper discussion and without a proper understanding of it, is to my mind to pass upon the bill without due consideration.

If the proposition of the Senator from Vermont had been presented here a week or ten days ago and had been discussed and considered in connection with the other amendments, then we would have been ready to vote upon it; but it has not been here at all. If Senators will undertake to investigate the amendment of the Senator from Vermont they will find that it is a very important proposition, and we may be prepared to take it, and we may not.

My judgment is that the best thing the Senate can do is to adjourn upon this condition of affairs and proceed with the discussion of the bill properly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from New York, I think, will remember that the proposition which the Senator from Vermont now has given notice he will offer as an amendment to section 4 was suggested by me on one of the days that the so-called Camden amendment was pending. So the Senate is not taken by surprise in this regard at all. It is not a new subject brought at this hour before the Senate, but was definitely stated several days ago during that general discussion, and was one of the amendments which I suggested on that occasion.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Illinois will now consent, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope before the Senator makes the motion to adjourn that the Senate will consent to the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, that general debate close at 4 o'clock, and that after that the debate on the bill and amendments shall be under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the proposition.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that objection is made. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Florida to withdraw the motion for a moment until consent can be had for printing the bill and amendments.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the bill with the amendments? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall move to take up the bill to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business.

Mr. CALL. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 12, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 11, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The remainder of the Journal was then read and approved.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the prayer of the Chaplain, delivered this morning, be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Official Reporters that the prayer was not reported.

RECONSTRUCTION OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the acting Secretary of the Interior for the reconstruction of the east wing of the Interior Department building, with diagrams of the proposed plan of improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PORTRAITS OF EX-ATTORNEYS-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, a letter from the Attorney-General asking that authority be given for the allowance by the accounting officers of the Treasury of certain vouchers for portraits of ex-Attorneys-General; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH CREE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the acting Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for the relief of certain renegade British Cree Indians in Montana and to prevent their starvation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for present consideration House bill No. 2851, being the special order fixed for to-day.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I shall not antagonize that motion by raising the question of consideration so as to enable us to proceed with the continuation of the Army appropriation bill, in view of an arrangement partly made with the chairman of that committee, who is willing to accept, as I understand it, a suggestion that the consideration of this special order shall not consume a greater length of time than two hours. With that understanding——

Mr. ELY. I think we can finish the bill in two hours.

Mr. HALSELL. I am satisfied that two hours will be sufficient; and I feel bound in good faith not to exceed that time, since from the very wording of this resolution, making this a special order, the consideration of the bill is subject to appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin raise the question of consideration?

Mr. BRAGG. I do not, with the understanding that the special order shall not consume a greater length of time than two hours.

Mr. ELY. I think that will be sufficient.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, NEW MEXICO, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which is the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELY. I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order fixed for to-day, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ELY. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of this bill be dispensed with, and that it be read by sections after the general debate for consideration under the usual rule.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ELY. I desire to have read as a part of my remarks the report of the Committee on Private Land Claims on this bill.

The report (by Mr. ELY) was read, as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to provide such a tribunal and course of procedure as shall be best adapted to ascertain and settle the claims of persons to lands in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and in the State of Colorado, by virtue of any right, title, or authority derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments, which the Government of the United States is bound to respect under the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, or of the treaty known as the "Gadsden treaty" with Mexico, or under the usages and customs of Spain and Mexico concerning the disposal of lands. To the ascertainment and settlement of their claims the faith of our Government is solemnly pledged by treaty stipulations. In recognition of these treaty engagements the act of Congress, entitled "An act to establish the offices of surveyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska," &c., approved July 22, 1854, was passed. The eighth section of that act made it the duty of the surveyor-general to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico, and to make a full report thereon in the manner therein provided, such report to be laid before Congress for such action as might be deemed just and proper with a view to confirm bona fide grants and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico.

By a subsequent act of Congress, in 1870, the provisions of this section were extended to the Territory of Arizona. This remedy has been found inadequate and almost valueless to claimants. This report of the land commission of 1880 stated that "after a lapse of nearly thirty years more than one thousand claims have been filed with the surveyors-general, of which less than one hundred and fifty have been reported to Congress; and of the number so reported Congress has finally acted upon only seventy-one." It has been well said that "if this was the working of this law for thirty years, it is obvious that some new legal machinery must be found to perfect the obligations of the Government of the United States under these two Mexican treaties." This committee, believing this law of 1854 to be not only inadequate and valueless to claimants, but misleading and injurious to the just rights of the United States, have by an amendment to this bill recommended its repeal, but have in the seventh section of this bill preserved, as far as may be, to honest claimants who have attempted to avail themselves of its provisions, the results of their labor and expenditures.

The tribunal constituted by this bill, a commission of three persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, seems to your committee to be one well adapted to ascertain and settle these land claims justly, equitably, and with the least delay and costs to the claimants or to the Government. It may be added that it is the tribunal which has been usually constituted by preceding Congresses for the settlement of like claims under other treaties.

This committee respectfully report this bill to the House with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments, namely:

Insert in line 15 of section 5, before the word "sickness," the word "non-residence."

Insert in line 6 of section 7, after the words "Guadalupe Hidalgo," the words "or the treaty concluded December 30, 1853, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty."

Strike out in lines 16, 17, and 18 of section 7 the words "shall be accepted as evidence as though taken before the commission created under this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be competent evidence before said commission of such weight and credibility as they shall deem it entitled to, having in view the manner and circumstances under which it was originally taken."

Strike out the concluding part of section 7, beginning with the word "provided," in line 26.

Insert in line 5 of section 12, after the words "Guadalupe Hidalgo," the words "and the treaty with Mexico concluded December 30, 1853, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty."

Add to the end of said bill as printed a new section, to wit:

"SEC. 20. That section 8 of the act of Congress approved July 22, 1854, entitled 'An act to establish the offices of surveyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes,' and all acts amendatory or in extension thereof or supplementary thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. ELY. I now yield so much time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is the result of very great care upon the part of the Committee on Private Land Claims, and has been unanimously reported with a favorable recommendation to this House; and the committee believes that if it is passed that the private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado will be speedily settled. By the eighth article of the treaty made between the Government of the United States and the Republic of Mexico on the 2d day of February, 1848, at Guadalupe Hidalgo, Mexicans who were in the Territories previously belonging to Mexico and who should remain for the future within the limits of the United States, as defined by that treaty, should be free to continue where they then resided, or to remove at any time to the Mexican Republic, retaining the property which they possessed in said Territories, or to dispose of the same and remove the proceeds wherever they pleased without being subjected on this account to any contribution, tax, or charge whatever.

Those who should prefer to remain in said Territories might either retain the title and rights of Mexican citizens or acquire those of citizens of the United States; but they were to be under the obligation to make their election within one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications of that treaty; and those who should remain in said Territories after the expiration of that year without having declared their intention to retain the character of Mexicans should be considered to have elected to become citizens of the United States; and a further provision was that property of every kind in said Territories then belonging to Mexicans not established there should be inviolably respected; the then owners, the heirs of these and all Mexicans who might thereafter acquire said property by contract, should enjoy, with respect to it, guarantees equally ample as if the same belonged to citizens of the United States. By the subsequent treaty with Mexico, made in 1853, known as the Gadsden treaty, the United States are bound to respect the rights of property as in the treaty of 1848.

In recognition of these treaty obligations and to carry out in good faith their stipulations, Congress passed an act approved July 22, 1854, the title of which is "An act to establish the office of surveyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nevada, to grant donations therein, and for other purpose."

Section 8 of said act is as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to land under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico, and for this purpose may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the Territories to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of 1848, denoting the various grades of title, with his decision as to the validity and invalidity of each of the same under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States, and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos respectively, and the nature of their titles to their lands, such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico; and until the final action of Congress on such claims, all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act.

This, sir, has been the law ever since 1854 for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

On the 28th of February, 1861, an act of Congress was approved extending the provisions of the eighth section of the act of 1854 to Colorado, and on the 15th of July, 1870, to Arizona Territory. I call the attention of the House to the unsatisfactory results of the attempted settlement of private land claims in these Territories and the State of Colorado under the provisions of the law as it now exists. The land commission of 1880 stated that after a lapse of nearly thirty years more than one thousand claims have been filed with the surveyors-general, of which less than one hundred and fifty have been reported to Congress; and of the number so reported Congress has finally acted upon only seventy-one. The surveyors-general have reported to Congress an average of only five per year since 1854, and Congress has taken action on an average of less than three per year since that date. There are embraced in those one thousand claims filed with the surveyors-general many millions of acres of as rich and fertile lands as there are in the United States, and in that vast area there are fraudulent claims no doubt set up to millions of acres of it.

On the other hand, there are no doubt many bona fide grants which the Government, under her treaty obligations, is bound to respect. When these claims are filed with the surveyor-general, all the lands covered by them, whether fraudulent or bona fide, are reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government until the final action of Congress upon such claims.

Mr. Chairman, the millions of acres of land embraced in the one thousand claims filed with the surveyor-general, with the exception of those which I referred to awhile ago which Congress has acted on, are just in the condition they were in 1848 when the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was entered into. It is not known whether they belong to the United States or to the claimants, nor do I believe that it will be known to whom these lands belong in the next quarter of a century, unless there is a tribunal created for the ascertainment and settlement of these claims. So unsatisfactory is the present law that the Commissioners of the General Land Office have called the attention of Congress to the subject time and again.

In his annual report for 1872, on page 65, Commissioner Drummond used the following language, which I will read:

Particular attention is called to the condition of private land claims within the limits of the remainder of the territory acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and within the limits of the territory acquired by the treaty commonly known as the Gadsen purchase.

During the last session of Congress, this office submitted for the settlement of these claims a draught of a bill that, in my opinion, contains all the best features of the laws passed for the settlement of similar claims in California, together with certain additions which experience has suggested, and which it is believed will advance the interests of claimants and protect those of the United States. The inadequacy of the laws now in force for this purpose is well known, and justice to the meritorious class of claimants who hold private claims in said territories under grants properly acquired from the former government, requires that they be provided with a more speedy means of perfecting their titles than they are now afforded.

From the history of private land claims in other localities we may reasonably infer that all delay in the final adjustment of like claims in the Territory now under consideration will increase the number, and render more difficult the detection of parties who present claims under forged or fraudulent title papers with the view of securing confirmations therewith. And it may be added that with the completion of railroads now being built or projected, and with other material improvements constantly developing the resources and adding to the wealth of that country, land now comparatively worthless will become valuable, and the incentive for manufacturing fraudulent papers of this character will be correspondingly augmented.

In 1874 the surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico, in his annual report, said: "For want of a feeling of security as to title sales of land, either by Government or grant, claimants in such regions are practically closed out, and will so remain until some relief is afforded by Congress. Such a state of things is sufficient to paralyze the industry, energy, and hope of any people." The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his annual report for 1875, called the attention of Congress again to the subject, as follows:

It is now more than twenty years since the surveyor-general of New Mexico commenced the examination of claims in that Territory, and he has since reported to Congress less than one hundred and fifty claims, though in 1856 he had more than one thousand upon his files; and of the number reported Congress has confirmed but seventy-one.

From these data it will be seen that the probable date when the last of these one thousand claims in New Mexico alone will be reported on and confirmed is in the far future. In the mean time the claimants must wait without remedy, and their grants, which would be valuable if the title were completed by a United States confirmation or patent, must remain comparatively worthless, as is all property where the vendor offers for sale an incomplete title and prospective legislation. The settler dares not settle and improve land lest it be subsequently found to be within the limits of some unconfirmed and unsurveyed grant; and the United States, by such delay, not only loses the sale of its land, but, &c.

This statement was repeated in the annual report of the Commissioner for 1876 with this addition: "In addition to the foregoing I might add that while these private land claims remain in their present unsettled condition it will continue to retard emigration to and settlement in said Territories, for until the titles thereto are ascertained and the land segregated from the public domain it will be impossible to determine which is public land subject to appropriation and settlement under the public-land laws and which is not; therefore, settlement made with a view of acquiring title under the public-land system is necessarily at the risk of finding in the future the land settled upon included within the limit of a private land claim and the improvements lost to the party who made them. There have already occurred many cases of hardship in this respect." Again, in his annual report for 1877 the Commissioner of the General Land Office called attention to the condition of these private land claims, and urged upon Congress the necessity of some suitable legislation for the removal of the cloud resting upon land titles in the Territories.

The surveyor-general of New Mexico, in his annual report for 1878, uses the following strong language:

I have little hope that Congress will act upon any of these suggestions, as they have twice been presented heretofore and no action taken thereon; but the magnitude of the Government interest involved with the title to millions of acres in question impels me to again call attention to the criminally lax method and imperfect means of investigating and adjusting these Spanish and Mexican titles. The uncertain condition of things is retarding settlement, and until all these titles are segregated from the public domain that uncertainty of title will continue, to the serious detriment of the citizens generally.

The special land commission appointed by act of Congress said in 1880 in their report, after having investigated the condition of private land claims in States and Territories containing treaty claims—

The time has arrived when the States and Territories containing these treaty claims are no longer on the frontier, and they have ceased to be populated exclusively by a foreign population. Lines of transcontinental railroads are piercing them in every direction; the restless activity of American civilization is spreading towns and farms over the plains, and has exposed the hidden treasures of the mountains; emigration is flowing in with magical rapidity, and industry and industry and thrift are exploring every avenue for development and investment.

But at the foundation of all permanent growth lies the security and certainty of land titles, and no discussion is required to prove that this is unattainable in communities covered with claims to title of foreign derivation and of unascertained boundaries. Even the Government is ignorant of the lines of demarkation between its public lands and these treaty claims, and uncertainty and insecurity taint the titles of purchasers.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have shown conclusively that the present law is entirely inefficient for the settlement of that long-vexed question, private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado. The next question, Mr. Chairman, to which I call the attention of the House, is whether the commission proposed to be created by the provisions of the bill under discussion will be adapted to ascertain and settle the claims of persons to land in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a new tribunal in this Government. The tracing of the history of the various boards of commissioners for the ascertainment and confirmation of private land claims is very interesting, and I am sure the operations of those boards will show their great efficiency in the speedy settlement of private land claims, wherever they have existed.

The first commission was created by act of 3d March, 1791, to finally confirm settlement claims and to grant military donations in Vincennes and the Illinois country in the territory northwest of the Ohio River derived by the United States from the Virginia cession of 1st March, 1784, and from that time at different periods boards of commissioners have been created to settle private land claims in territories acquired by the United States. Their operations have always been expeditious and satisfactory. The law of 1854 applies only to the region embraced in the bill. The judicial confirmation of land claims began with the act of 26 May, 1824, but this mode has proved so slow and so expensive to claimants that it is very unsatisfactory. The next act for the final confirmation of land claims by commissioners was the statute of 3d March, 1803, to adjust titles in Mississippi Territory, embracing so much of the present States of Mississippi and Alabama as lies north of the thirty-first degree of north latitude. For this purpose, two boards of three commissioners each were created, one for the district west of Pearl River, and the other for the district east of Pearl River. These boards, after finally deciding two thousand one hundred and fifty-two claims, adjourned sine die 21st September, 1805.

Congress, encouraged by such celerity of adjustment, on the 3d of March, 1807, passed an act, the fourth section of which conferred like powers of confirmation on the board of commissioners created by act of March 2, 1805, for ascertaining claims in the Louisiana purchase of April 30, 1803. The act of 1805 had created three boards of three commissioners each, one for the eastern and one for the western district of Orleans Territory in the State of Louisiana, and one for the rest of the purchase, then called the district of Louisiana, afterward called the Territory of Louisiana, and finally called the Territory of Missouri. The board for the eastern district of Orleans Territory decided about two thousand and fifty-seven land claims, and adjourned finally in 1811. The board for the western district of Orleans Territory decided two thousand three hundred and eighty-nine claims. The board for the district or Territory of Louisiana, afterward called the Territory of Missouri, embracing all of the Louisiana purchase north of the present south line of the State of Arkansas, finally confirmed one thousand three hundred and forty-two land claims and rejected a large number; the whole number confirmed and rejected is estimated to be about three thousand nine hundred and seven claims before their final adjournment, which was in January, 1812.

Florida was acquired by the United States from Spain by the treaty of February 22, 1819, and was surrendered to the United States on July 17, 1821. Congress, in view of the rapid and satisfactory adjustment of land claims by boards of commissioners having final powers of confirmation throughout the whole public domain in the Territories I have mentioned, passed an act on May 8, 1822, creating a board of three commissioners for East Florida, a like board for West Florida, and vested them with confirmatory powers in land claims. The board for East Florida confirmed or rejected 423 claims. Their successors, under act of February 8, 1827, confirmed or rejected 167 claims. Their successors, by act of May 23, 1828, the last act for the final adjustment of Florida land claims by commissioners, ended their labors on January 20, 1829, deciding in less than eight months 379 claims—confirming 116 and rejecting 263. The successive boards for East Florida had by January 20, 1829, decided about 969 claims and reported 180 more. The board for West Florida and their successors, under act of March 3, 1825, by July 13, 1825, when it finally adjourned, decided 590 land claims, confirming 515 and rejecting 75.

By act of March 3, 1851, and acts amendatory thereto, a commission similar to the one proposed in this bill was created for the settlement of private land claims in California, and nearly all the land claims in that State have been settled with facility and great satisfaction.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his annual report for 1882, makes the following statement in reference to claims in California presented to board of land commissioners created by the act referred to:

Number of claims	813
Mission claims under No. 609 (24)	23
Total	836
Claims rejected by board and courts, or both	212
Claims finally confirmed (estimated)	624
Claims surveyed and reported	596
Confirmed claims not yet reported	28
Confirmed claims docketed but not disposed of	25
Total in California to be disposed of	53

Mr. Chairman, I have presented the two systems in contrast with each other. I ask, sir, if there can be a doubt in the mind of any gentleman on this floor, in the light of the results of the two methods of settling private land claims, as I have shown them, that the commission is infinitely preferable. Sir, the time has come when the Congress of the United States must meet this question and do something to protect the rights of honest claimants, and see that the stipulations of treaties in regard to these lands shall be carried out in good faith, and at the same time see to it that the Government is not swindled out of the lands belonging to it. This Congress has it in its power now by the passage of this bill, in my judgment, to settle speedily, justly, and equitably all the private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado, and thus check the gigantic frauds which have been perpetrated in those Territories for many years past.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in regard to a proposed bill creating a tribunal for the settlement of these private land claims, very similar to the one under consideration, says:

It might perhaps be suggested that, inasmuch as in the majority of the cases these claims will have to go into court for the final adjudication of title, the commission might be dispensed with and the courts vested with original and exclusive jurisdiction in all cases. This course would be open to the following objections:

First. Delay, which is the principal objection against the present mode of settling these claims under the act of 1851. In this connection it should be taken into consideration, first, that the courts already have all of the legitimate business they can attend to; and, second, that if the adjudication of the title in these cases were made an original proceeding in the courts, the whole case would have to be made up in the court, requiring in each case a period varying from two or three days to a week or ten days, according to the particular circumstances in each case, while, on the other hand, if the case is brought into court in the form of a complete transcript of the proceedings of the commission thereon it can be disposed of in a comparatively much shorter time.

If the confirmation of these claims were left entirely to the court, it would, in my judgment, be a low estimate to fix the limit within which they would all be confirmed at twenty-five years.

Second, The commission as constituted in the proposed bill, with its interpreters and two law agents, one of whom is required to be skilled in the Spanish language, furnishes a more perfect and effectual means for the protection of the interests of the United States than if the adjudication of these claims were devolved upon the courts. The bill contemplates that one of the law agents shall be in constant attendance upon the commission, while the other, whose duties will be more in the nature of a special attorney or agent, is abroad collecting testimony in behalf of the Government. In many instances it will be necessary for each agent to visit the premises in person to procure the information and witnesses necessary to a proper defense of the interests of the Government. The district attorneys could not possibly perform these duties, if it were required of them, for the reasons, first, that outside of the time necessary to the discharge of the duties properly pertaining to their respective offices they would have but little time to devote to these duties, and, second, that it would be necessary, in order to properly peform them, for the district attorney of each judicial district to be familiar with the Spanish language.

The advantages of the settlement of private land claims by a board of commissioners instead of by judicial confirmation are set forth strongly in Commissioner's report for 1871 and in report of May, 1858, by Mr. Sandidge, chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, as follows:

It is submitted, however, that existing legislation in regard to these claims is very unsatisfactory both to the Government and to claimants, in proof of which it is only necessary to refer to reports of Congressional committees and to frequent reports of the surveyor-general of New Mexico and this office on the subject.

On May 28, 1858, Mr. Sandidge, from the House Committee on Private Land Claims, reported as follows:

"The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a large mass of documents relative to private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico, instruct me to make the following report:

"It appears that a number of these claims were before the Committee on Public Lands of the last Congress; but, from some cause, no action was taken thereon by the committee, nor by Congress. These claims, with others, since forwarded by the surveyor-general of the Territory, have received the most careful attention your committee could give them; but, in justice to the committee, I must say this examination has been confined entirely to what seemed to be the principal papers in each case; having no time to scrutinize the evidence and the application as made by the surveyor-general of the Spanish and Mexican laws and usages to each of them in detail. Nor will it ever be in the power hereafter of any committee of this House to make such an examination as will be entirely satisfactory, should these claims be allowed to accumulate before Congress. It is now ten years since the Territory of New Mexico was acquired, and nearly four years since the surveyor-general of the Territory was authorized to examine and report to us the private land claims of its people: and although protected, as is supposed, by treaty in the enjoyment of their property, no man in that Territory, without some action of Congress, can say that his title, however acquired, would hold against any claimant who might purchase his lands from the Government. Heretofore, and from the same cause which has embarrassed your committee, Congress has been compelled, in passing upon similar claims in Louisiana, Florida, and Missouri, to rely upon the report of the several boards of land commissioners, and to confirm or reject by whole classes, as recommended by the commissioners.

"In view of such action, the people of New Mexico are not at all pleased to be compelled by law to submit their muniments of title to one man, whose fitness for surveying is not supposed to qualify him particularly for discharging the duties of a judge, and yet whose opinions are expected to control, to a great extent, the final action of Congress upon their claims. Because of this, and that Congress, if it shall reserve the right to itself of passing judgment, must rely upon the report of an examining commission, your committee believed it very important that such a board should consist of at least three persons, whose recommendations, whether to Congress or a judicial tribunal, would be entitled to and command more respect than your committee or the House can award to the report of the surveyor-general alone.

"But as Congress may not create such a board, and as it is due to the parties interested that the titles by which their lands are held should not be passed over to be settled by another generation, your committee have authorized me to report favorably (with one or two modifications) upon all the claims recommended for confirmation by the surveyor-general; with the understanding that should the action of Congress conform to the views of the committee as to this board, the claims may be finally determined under the new law.

"But for the gross injustice of the people of New Mexico of delaying for an indefinite period action upon their claims, and the certainty that under existing arrangements Congress can never consider them under more favorable circumstances than at this time, your committee would not have been willing to report upon any of these individual claims for the reason first stated—want of time to examine fully, and the unknown quantity of land claimed by most of the parties.

"This last difficulty can not be obviated without a survey of the lands, and that, it is presumed, will not be ordered by Congress in advance of a recognition of title. Of the fourteen claims proposed to be confirmed by the bill herewith reported, the area of but five of them is either stated or estimated. They are for 1 league, 4 leagues, 5 leagues, 7,600 acres, and about 20,000 acres.

"Whether the other claims embrace a less or greater amount is not and can not be made known from the documentary evidence of title forwarded by the surveyor-general.

"The grant in each case refers to some stream, hill, mountain-top, valley, or other known natural object, for boundary."

In the same report he says:

Attention has also been drawn to this matter in reports by my predecessors nearly every year since 1856, and in a communication recently received from the governor of Colorado he reports as follows:

"As nearly as can be ascertained, the following Mexican or Spanish land-grant claims are located wholly or in part in the Territory of Colorado: Vigil and Saint Vrain, area claimed, 4,096,345 acres; Vigil and Saint Vrain, area confirmed, 96,651 acres; Nolan, area confirmed, 48,825½ acres; Maria Baca, No. 4, area claimed, 100,000 acres; Sangre de Cristo, area claimed, 1,200,000 acres; Antonio (not confirmed), claimed 2,500,000 acres; Beaubien and Miranda, about 300,000 acres; making in all 8,342,821½ acres; to which add the Ute Indian reservation, 19,077,120 acres, and the total comprises much more than one-third of the whole area of the Territory of Colorado, all of which is rendered unavailable at present both to Government and people for purposes of sale and settlement.

"In order to realize the magnitude of this unavailable land I call your attention to the fact that it comprises more acres than the whole of the State of Ohio, or than Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Connecticut, and Maryland, combined.

"Should you seek a remedy for the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs, I would most respectfully recommend that the Secretary of the Interior, or Congress, compel the grantees of all these tracts, or their representatives, to definitely locate the area conceded them by the Commissioner of the General Land Office within some limited time. So soon as this is done all this land will be open to pre-emption and entry, and both the Government and the settlers will be largely benefited thereby. Some of these grants are already inhabited by several thousand settlers, or squatters, as they are called, who can not secure Government patents for their claims, and who fear to make valuable improvements until these Mexican grantees locate the quantity of land awarded them by the decisions of the Secretary of the Interior.

"I sincerely believe that the interests of the General Government, and of our people, and the growth both of this Territory and New Mexico, will be subserved by the adoption of some policy which will enable emigrants who desire in good faith to settle upon the public lands, to know where they can make their selections without fear of future disturbance by adverse claimants. This whole matter is becoming so serious a drawback to the settlement of some portions of this Territory, that I feel it incumbent upon me to call the attention of your Department to the subject.

"It seems to me that if practicable the Ute reservation should be reduced in quantity, or at least the limits should be thoroughly defined by a public and official survey, marked by such monuments as will prevent future trespass upon the domain of the savages."

Some of the claims heretofore confirmed by Congress and surveyed cover principalities in extent, the claimed limits of one such embracing by estimation more than 2,000,000 of acres.

It is most important to the growth and prosperity of those Territories, to which settlement is being rapidly attracted by the extension of railroads, that a separation be made at the earliest possible period between the public lands and those claimed under foreign titles.

In this way only can the settler know where to locate safely, so as not to intrude on the premises of others. The want of such definitive adjustment of the lines of public and private lands has already, in one instance, brought to notice by the governor of New Mexico, led to armed hostilities between settlers and employés of the grant claimants.

It is respectfully suggested that the creation by Congress of a commission similar to that instituted by the act of March 3, 1851, for California, would best conduce to a speedy and just settlement of claims of this kind, and promote the rapid growth of those young and enterprising Territories.

Mr. Chairman, those officers of the Government whose business it has been heretofore to look after the public lands of the United States, and who have investigated the operations of the various tribunals created by Congress to adjust and settle private land claims, are prepared to form an opinion as to the best mode of settling them, and having had the opportunity, on account of their peculiar duties, to ascertain the most efficient means for their settlement, have unhesitatingly, as I have shown, recommended their settlement by a board of commissioners, such as is proposed to be created by this bill.

The ascertainment by the Government of what lands belong to it is a matter of the highest importance, and the rapidity with which they have disappeared from the public domain has excited an interest in the minds of the people of the United States in the last few years unparalleled in the history of this country. Two hundred million acres have been given away to railroad corporations, leaving only about two hundred millions belonging to the Government for the poor people of this country.

The original intention of the Government was that the public lands belonging to it should be reserved for homes for our own people, fixing a price so low that the poor people could procure homes for their comfort, but instead of that many million acres are in the possession of foreign corporations, claiming them as their own. Congress should watch with jealous eye the future disposition of the public domain.

Mr. HEWITT. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALSELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT. I should like to know whether in the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky this bill confers upon the commission adequate power to revise and deal with those cases in which it is alleged frauds have been committed by stretching the boundaries of the grant; in other words, whether this commission can take original testimony as to the extent of the grant, and rectify the surveys that have been already made—fraudulently made, it is alleged—so as to bring them down to the boundaries and quantity of land intended to be granted by the original grant.

Mr. HALSELL. I think so. That was certainly the intention of the committee. It was their intention to correct all the evils that it was believed had existed for many years with reference to the boundaries, and in view of the uncertainty of the testimony that had been taken to allow them to use only such testimony as had been taken, and give it such weight as the commission should think it deserved.

Mr. HEWITT. In reading the seventh section I do not find a specific grant of power to make the investigation required to rectify the allowances of land. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the committee would be willing to accept an amendment which would confer specifically a grant of power on the commission to investigate the correctness of the quantities of land in the grant heretofore surveyed?

Mr. HALSELL. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the committee are exceedingly anxious to have the best bill that can possibly be matured, and if amendments are suggested that will conduce to that end I am very certain the committee will accept them. I am not prepared to say as an individual what amendments I would accept. But knowing the general feeling of the committee, I know they feel an intense interest to get such a bill as will best accomplish the object intended.

Mr. HEWITT. I ask the gentleman not to move the previous question so as to cut off the proposition of an amendment of that kind.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know what may be the purpose of the committee, whether to call the previous question or not. But I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL] to line 15, section 5, where there is inserted the word "non-residence," as an amendment by the committee, for the purpose of saying to him I am afraid it was a great mistake to insert that word. We in Texas have had a great deal of experience in the adjudication of claims of this sort which originated under the Government of Mexico. We also had a great deal of experience with claims evidently manufactured and brought up subsequently to the time of annexation. If this word "non-residence" be inserted, if the depositions of non-resident witnesses can be taken to establish these claims, I venture the statement that the whole of these claims will be established, and you had better just pass an act to turn over this land to whoever claims it than attempt to pass any bill of this kind.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I will explain that the provision of the bill to which the gentleman from Texas refers in section 5 only refers to the examination of non-resident witnesses.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that. The bill as amended provides——

That in case it shall be found impossible to procure the attendance of any witness by reason of non-residence, &c.

Now, then, of all things it is the most important to the Government and to the actual settlers there, claiming under the Government, that you shall have the witnesses who establish these claims brought before the courts, if it is practicable. And when you insert this word, which is an addition to the language of the California act, as I have said, you had better pass an act turning the land over to the claimants, because it will all go to them.

I now call attention to this provision in section 7, on page 5:

And evidence heretofore taken before the surveyor-general under the act of 1854, entitled "An act to establish the offices of surveyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," shall be competent evidence before said commission of such weight and credibility as they shall deem it entitled to, having in view the manner and circumstances under which it was originally taken.

That is an amendment also by the committee. Of course the committee have examined the subject and understand it better than I do; but it is a matter of very great moment that that commission shall be able to see the witnesses and hear the witnesses and sift their means of knowledge, and not take the loose testimony that may have been given ex parte and settle the claims upon such evidence as that.

Mr. HALSELL. The committee contemplated that such a commission would be created as would be able to judge of the character of the testimony presented to them, and give only such weight to it as in their judgment it was entitled to. But this goes so far as to say that this "shall be competent evidence before said commission, of such weight and credibility as they shall deem it entitled to." It is there as evidence, and they can presume nothing from the presence of the witnesses, from the manner of their testifying, from the fact whether it was ex parte testimony or testimony taken upon cross-examination, and I suggest to the committee——

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest the reason of that? This testimony was proposed to be used for the reason that it was authorized to be taken under the law of 1854, and many of the witnesses are now dead. The parties claiming these lands and grants went to certain expense, under the then existing law, to bring witnesses before the surveyor-general, but, after the surveyor-general had reported Congress failed to act, and this bill now proposes to repeal all the action that has been had, and this evidence is simply to be submitted to the commissioners to have such weight as they may see fit to give it.

Mr. HALL. Up to the present time the acts of Congress have provided a method of procedure under which testimony could be taken, and a great number of claimants have proceeded in accordance with the acts of Congress, have filed their evidence before the surveyor-general, and have been knocking at the doors of the Department and of Congress for thirty or thirty-five years past attempting in vain to get some kind of action, and being almost willing to be beaten rather than be kept perpetually lying on the steps of the Department and at the doors of Congress asking for what seemed to them right and proper.

In a great many instances this testimony has been taken at great trouble and expense, and, as has been suggested, many of the witnesses are dead, so that to attempt to go back and secure that testimony again would be an impossibility. The present bill simply contemplates a change of forum, a change of method, putting this whole subject under the practical control and in the hands of the courts of the country. First, the district court, the superior, of course, of the commission created; and it was deemed not only proper but eminently just to these claimants that this evidence, which had been already taken pursuant to the laws of the country and had been on the files of the Department for years, should not be thrown aside and entirely lost, but should be made competent to be considered by this commission and by the district court, in case of review, for what it seemed worth—not, perhaps, of the high character of testimony that might be taken now pursuant to present methods, but still testimony worthy to be considered and to receive such weight as the commission and the court may see proper to give it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate fully the objects which the committee have in view——

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from Texas proceeds the Chair desires to inquire whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL] or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELY] has the floor for this hour. The Chair did not understand whether the whole hour was yielded or only a portion of it.

Mr. HALSELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ELY. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HALSELL] has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELY. I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the great importance of the object the committee have in view. It is certainly a matter of very great importance that good titles should be confirmed, that bad titles should be opened and the whole matter of these titles should be adjudicated. I do not propose to set up my judgment against that of the committee, who have gone through the labor of investigating this subject and have examined the law under which this testimony was taken, which I have not done. What I wished to do was to suggest to the committee the danger of allowing the commissioners provided for by this act to have their judgment controlled by evidence the character of which they have no means of determining except what appears upon the cold paper. I have seen so much in relation to this character of claims, and in relation to the kind of evidence by which it has been sought to establish them, that I feel it is always best, wherever it is practicable, to have the witnesses who are put forward for the confirmation of these claims put in a position where they can be cross-examined, where their meaning can be fully brought out, and where their character and their means of knowledge can be tested by the tribunal that is to pass upon their testimony. My sole object was to bring that view to the attention of the committee.

Mr. ELY. I yield now to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time. In section 7 of the bill it is provided that the claimant can come before this commission and have his claims adjudicated, and, if the evidence be satisfactory to the commission, there is a confirmation of the grant, which deprives the United States of any claim as much as though Congress had passed a special act granting the land comprised within the boundaries of the grant directly to the claimant.

All over this vast extent of territory, comprising, as the chairman of the committee has said, an area equal to several of our most important States, people from the East and the West, the South and the North, have during the last twenty years settled and made their homes. They claim title adversely to these pretended grantees; and this bill makes no provision for their defense or protection. The Commissioner of the General Land Office says that his office is filled with petitions claiming protection from the Government against these gigantic "land-sharks" (as they must be called in many instances), who have succeeded in getting through Congress special grants conveying to them hundreds of thousands, and even millions of acres, when they were entitled either to nothing or to a very small number of acres. And these grants by Congress have been declared by the Supreme Court to be absolute, to be grants de novo, to cut off all title that the United States may have had in the lands. This bill provides that the decision of the commissioners to be appointed in pursuance of the act shall have the same effect as the decision of the court, with the proviso that the parties may go before the United States district court and finally before the Supreme Court to test the justice of the claim. The bill is right in every particular, except that in my judgment these men who settled upon these lands, who have resided there in many instances for twenty or thirty years, should have the right to be parties to this contest.

I have prepared an amendment, with which I think the committee will be perfectly satisfied, allowing these parties to come in and show that there is no title as claimed under the Spanish or Mexican grant, or that the boundaries as claimed extend beyond the original grant. Such things, Mr. Chairman, are common. I have the honor to be a member of this committee, and there was referred to me as a subcommittee one of these private land claims where the report of the surveyor-general, made under the law of 1854, showed that the private land claim covered 130,138 acres. On close examination and thorough inquiry I ascertained that if there was any grant at all it covered only 1,813 acres.

Mr. FELTON. How did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. From the General Land Office. The Commissioner of the Land Office wrote me a letter, which I embodied in the report, advising that the bill to confirm that grant be laid on the table. And the case is similar with hundreds of these claims.

Mr. FELTON. Then that shows the necessity of passing a measure of this kind.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Some law of this kind is absolutely necessary. Congress has and can have no means of knowing the feasibility or justice of passing in any given case a special law confirming a land grant to any man. In one case mentioned by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the quantity of land claimed to have been granted was 1,700,000 acres; and a special act of Congress was passed vesting in the claimants that quantity of land. But it was ascertained afterward that 96,000 acres constituted the full extent of the grant; and the rest of the land vested in the claimants by special act of Congress was land of the United States. By that act the settlers upon 1,600,000 acres of land had their property swept away without any judicial trial. The Supreme Court declared that the act of Congress was a gift, a grant de novo by Congress, which could not be disturbed; that title had vested under that act, and these settlers, not having secured a title from the Government of the United States, must be turned out.

My amendment proposes, as I have indicated, that in any case arising under this bill the parties who have settled on the land in question, occupying 80 or 160 acres it may be, shall be allowed to become parties before the commissioners and before the court to defend their title and to show, if they can, that Mexico or Spain never granted to the claimants any land whatever. In this way not only the interests of the settlers but the interests of the United States will be protected, and there will be far less liability to fraud. In my judgment this bill ought not to pass without such an amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that the Committee on Private Land Claims are willing to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I am glad to understand, Mr. Chairman, that the committee are willing to assent to this amendment.

Mr. ELY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed at fifteen minutes after 12 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I must object. I do not know that any more time than the gentleman indicates will be desired, but on so important a bill a reasonable time should be allowed for debate.

Mr. ELY. There are only two hours allowed for the disposition of this bill, and at quarter past 12 o'clock one of those hours will have expired. After that the bill must be considered by sections, and we may not be able to get through with it in the two hours, unless we agree to this limitation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the order requested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELY] will be made, and the general debate on this bill will be closed at quarter past 12 o'clock. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ELY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the many and involved questions growing out of land titles, which it is the aim of this bill to settle, are extremely important, both to those claiming the lands, who have their all involved, and important to our Government, in that solemn treaty obligations are involved. They should then merit the generous and favorable consideration of Congress. It may be well to state in this connection that all similar questions have been settled in the manner proposed by this bill. In all cases where lands have been acquired from foreign governments, whether by cession or conquest, the intricate questions which the new relations have given rise to have been invariably settled by commissions appointed and constituted in the same manner proposed by this bill. Questions growing out of the cession of lands by Great Britain and from the acquisition of the immense Louisiana purchase and the Spanish and Mexican land grants of California and the ceded lands of Florida from Spain were all settled in this way. The establishment of commissions has been the agency of settling speedily, economically, and satisfactorily the question of title involved in this immense territory, covering hundreds of millions of acres of land. No other method was ever suggested or thought of in regard to this immense acquisition.

In the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado are to be found the only lands now remaining unsettled, so far as land titles are concerned. Regardless of the satisfactory manner in which the method of commissions has resulted, it has been suggested that a different method be applied to them. For about thirty-eight years these lands have remained as they now are. Their condition has been growing worse instead of better. The lands there are no nearer settlement than they were thirty-eight years ago. The reason for this is that there is a constantly increasing stream of immigration pushing into this section of the country, which gives rise to a great demand for lands. The questions which grow out of this demand for lands and the rapidly increasing settlement of the lands are very complicated and embarrassing, and will become more and more difficult of solution as the years roll by. The commission appointed for the settlement of land titles in California was enabled after four years' work to finally and satisfactorily adjust practically all disputes to land titles in that State. This was accomplished, although the condition of land titles was possibly worse at the passage of this law than those of all other acquired Territories. It is no argument against the commission plan that a few cases involving large amounts have not as yet been settled in that State, involving large sums of money. This is still less an argument when it is proposed to use it as such in reference to the Territories and State named in this bill. It is not the large and valuable grants alone which this plan is intended to settle.

In New Mexico and the other sections named in the bill the smaller grants are largely in excess of the larger ones. Many of these smaller grants embrace less than 80 acres of land. This argument has no effect when brought to bear upon the smaller grants. As a rule only the larger ones will be placed in dispute. The smaller grants will be speedily settled, and will not, like the larger grants, be carried into the courts. The grants which most need the intervention of a commission are the smaller grants, and these small grants can be settled before it with small cost of time and money to the holders. The values of these grants are so small that the holders would not ordinarily be justified in expending the time and money required by a judicial ascertainment. To force them into the courts would be an act of great injustice, for, in that event, the burden of court expenses would be more than they could bear. This would put the undisputed claimant of a small holding of ten acres on a par with and to the same expensive formalities of protracted investigation and the usual delays of court proceedings as the disputed claimant of thousands of acres. It is the rights of the undisputed claimants, especially those of small holdings, that we desire to protect by a commission, and to afford them an opportunity to acquire titles to their homesteads without further delay and with as little cost as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the lands in regard to which we desire to have the titles settled by this bill are not public lands, but it must be kept constantly in mind that as a rule these claimants long before they came under the sovereignty of the United States had a good and sufficient title to the lands they claimed. Their right to these lands has long been recognized by common and statute law, and also by the usages and customs of the parent country. They exercised all the rights which any man may exercise in regard to land. They disposed of their lands by will and inherited lands from their ancestors; they bought and sold, and so doing no question was ever raised as to their right so to do; nor was the sufficiency of their title ever brought into question more than is ordinarily the case elsewhere. In their own country, where they and their fathers had lived long before the United States acquired the right to govern them, their right to these lands was absolutely clear and indisputable. As in all cases, there may be fraudulent and insufficient titles to large tracts of these lands; but wherever lands are held by the tenure of fraud and corruption this forms the exception rather than the general rule, and such titles constitute but a small part in number compared with the immense number of rightful claimants whose claims would be happily settled by a commission.

Before these lands were acquired by the United States the people occupying them owned the soil. It was theirs by all the rights secured by their laws. They had paid for them, and they had occupied them and cultivated the soil. This mere act of occupation and cultivation in itself was a valuable consideration to the sovereign of these people from whom they derived their title to these lands. Their sovereign had no claim to their lands according to their laws, and when these people were transferred to the sovereignty of the United States it must be borne in mind that they still possessed unimpaired their rights of person and of property. These rights were guaranteed to them by treaty obligations—by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo and other solemn like stipulations. The people who held these lands can not, perhaps, make a perfect paper title, if any paper title at all exists. The transferring of land by written instruments was not known to their laws. Their ancestors settled upon the lands when the whole country was populated with savage tribes of Indians, and they acquired their right to possession and their possession by an apportionment according to the military usages of that day. It may be that records were kept of the different allotments that were made; but if so, many of them have been obliterated by the lapse of time. It would work great injustice now to require that these people should show some written instrument of title.

This they can not do, and to evict them in case they can not show a grant, cession, warranty, or survey of their lands, as is provided by other bills now before the Congress of the United States, is a species of cruelty and barbarism which could be compared only to savage raids known to Indian warfare. These people can only prove that they or their ancestors or grantees have occupied and owned their lands from time immemorial, and they can prove no more. Upon this showing they should be given their titles, and not be put to the trouble and expense of judicial ascertainment. The bill now pending before the United States Senate is especially detrimental to the small holders of these grants. It establishes a triple tribunal, running through the highest courts in the land. By it the poor man with his small holding is compelled to go as far with his small income as the rich man with his large interests to carry him through the difficulties of the situation. The result of such a judicial ascertainment of rights will compel the poor man to lose his all. He can not stand the pressure caused by delays and the costs of litigation. The result will be that he will be compelled to relinquish the dearest rights of man—the rights guaranteed to us by Magna Charta and the rights guaranteed to them by solemn treaty stipulations—the rights of person and property. Many of these people will lose their lands and will be driven away from their birthrights if this plan suggested by the Senate bill is consummated.

This Government has no more right to take possession of their lands in this way than it has to take possession of the Canadian dominions. It will be seen that this bill includes claims that have been acted upon and reported to Congress for confirmation by the surveyor-general of the Territory of New Mexico.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you will see that all the best features of the various plans suggested for the ascertainment of titles by judicial inquiry without inquisitorial, oppressive, and confiscatory characteristics are included in this bill. At the same time it deals generously with the claimants, and kindly gives assistance to those who are in need of the favorable consideration of the Government. This bill places these people where they belong, in the category of citizens of the United States. It assures to them their rights of person and property, equal to those possessed by our people in all sections of this great country. It treats them as citizens and not as intruders upon public lands. It secures to them the lands which are rightfully their own, and it will be a guarantee to them that this Government means to deal with them honestly and justly.

Mr. ELY. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chariman, I have been a member of the Private Land Claims Committee long enough to become thoroughly satisfied that the present method of disposing of the cases of the character now under consideration is in no way satisfactory to the committee having the cases in charge or to the Government or the parties who are interested in them. During the short time I have been on this committee it has become my duty to investigate and consider some three or four cases coming under these grants, and I have not yet found a single case wherein I have not become satisfied the claimants were asking from ten to fifteen times the quantity of land they were entitled to receive. And such a course of procedure as this, which inevitably, I may say, results in that which is not creditable to Congress and which is not just to the Government, is not one that should be sustained and upheld by the Congress of the United States.

Now, I believe that by adopting the amendments to this bill, as reported from the committee, the amendments offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THOMAS] which have been suggested, we have a most perfect tribunal, one that will be entirely satisfactory to the whole country, and one which will result in disposing of this question in a manner just to the Government as well as to the claimants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed for the general debate on this bill has expired, and the Clerk will now report the bill by sections for debate and amendments.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purposes of ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and in the State of Colorado a commission shall be, and is hereby, constituted, which shall consist of three commissioners, one of whom shall be skilled in the Spanish and English languages, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, which commission shall continue for four years from the date of the passage of this act, unless sooner discontinued by the President of the United States; and there shall also be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a competent attorney, whose duty it shall be to attend the sessions of the said commission in behalf of the United States, and in all things to represent the interests of the United States in the matters coming before the said commission.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to this first section of the bill whether it would be agreeable to the committee to insert after the word "States," in line 16, the words "in connection with such attorneys as may be employed by persons claiming adversely to such grant."

My reason is that there may be other or junior claims to these grants; and they may want their attorneys to co-operate with the attorneys of the Government——

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Texas to say that an amendment has been suggested which will be offered at the proper place, allowing actual settlers to come in, which amendment has been accepted by the committee and so far as I know there is no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that provision ought to be made at the end of section 5, and I shall propose at the proper time, unless the committee suggests some amendment more satisfactory, to insert the following:

Provided, however, That any person claiming an interest in any land embraced in any such claim shall have the right to appear in any case involving the same, in person or by attorney, and introduce evidence in support thereof, and in support of the claim of the United States to the land involved in the proceeding.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to permit me to read an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, which I think will effectually cover the ground.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I propose to move to insert at the proper place the words:

Provided, however, That any person or corporation claiming an adverse title or right, under the United States or otherwise, to any part of the land so claimed, or who shall be in the actual possession of the land so claimed, or any part thereof, otherwise than by the lease or permission of the claimant, at the time of the passage of this act, shall be entitled to and shall have the right to intervene as a party in interest in the cause or proceedings before the said commissioners, by attorney or otherwise, at any time before a decision has been rendered by said commissioners, and to submit evidence attesting in whole or in part the right of the claimant or the existence or the validity of the alleged grant or claim, which evidence so submitted shall be considered by the commission in making their decision.

Mr. REAGAN. That is better, and I think should be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it the purpose to bring that in at the bottom of section 5?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall offer it at the end of section 7.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any two of said commissioners shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and no proceeding shall be taken as a board except there be a quorum present; and each of said commissioners shall be, and is hereby, authorized to administer oaths; and the board, when in session, may summon witness and issue writs of subpœna to compel their attendance, and examine witnesses in any case pending before the said board, and do all and singular the acts and things necessary to carry this act into effect, of all which a complete record shall be kept, and which record, together with all testimony, shall be kept, taken in writing, and be recorded and preserved in bound books to be provided for that purpose: Provided, That in case it shall be found impossible to procure the attendance of any witness, by reason of sickness, extreme age, or other disability of such witness, it shall and may be lawful for the said board to provide for taking the testimony of such witness in the usual manner and under the usual rules established by the courts in such cases.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

"In line 15, before the word 'sickness,' insert the words 'non-residence,' so that it will read 'by reason of non-residence, sickness,'" &c.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. There is a verbal correction to be made in this connection, which I ask consent to make; in line 6 the word "witness" should be "witnesses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be heard upon that amendment.

I wish to inquire of the committee if they think it best to keep the word "non-residence" in; and I beg to state in relation to that, that the making and bringing of grants of this sort into Texas, and I suppose into all of the Territories, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, has been one of the industries of that part of the country for many years, and it is conducted by as able lawyers as this country produces, men who know how to shape testimony to meet any objection which may be urged in any court. It is well known to all who are conversant with the subject that by going into Mexico and paying men as for a day's work, you can make up any case you please. If these words, then, are to remain in the bill, the claimants can go to Mexico and make their proof by deposition, as it will be taken there; so that it will be cheaper for the Government and better to pass an act at once and place the title in the present claimants than to undertake to protect its rights.

Mr. HALL. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask: Do you think the danger to which you allude is any greater than the injustice which might follow the deprivation of the right to parties hereafter of taking testimony of non-resident witnesses? There are people living in the various States whose testimony might be applicable in that connection.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose it is true that to get at the justice of these cases it is very rare indeed that it would be necessary to send to Mexico for witnesses, because the witnesses are in the country where the land is. That is where the cause of action arises and where the title exists.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I will state, with the consent of the gentleman from Texas, that I offered the amendment in committee, but I am not strenuous about its adoption. It only seemed right to put it in, but in consequence of the view the gentleman takes of it I am not unwilling to have it stricken from the bill.

The amendment of the committee was rejected.

The Clerk read section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That each and every person claiming lands in either of the Territories or State mentioned in this act, by virtue of any right, title, or authority derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments, which right, title, or authority the Government of the United States is bound to respect under the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the Government of Mexico, or under the usages and customs of Spain and Mexico in the disposal of lands, shall present the same to the said commissioners when sitting as a board for that purpose, together with such documentary evidence and testimony of witnesses as the said claimant relies upon in support of such claim; and evidence heretofore taken before the surveyor-general under the act of 1854, "An act to establish the offices of suryeyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," shall be accepted as evidence as though taken before the commission created under this act; and it shall be the duty of the said commissioners, when the case is ready for hearing, to proceed promptly to examine the same upon such evidence, and upon the evidence produced in behalf of the United States, and to decide upon the validity of such claim, and, within thirty days after such decision is rendered, to certify the same, with the reasons upon which it is founded, to the clerk of the United States district court in and for the district in which such decision shall be rendered: Provided, That all claims to lands in the Territories and State aforesaid provided for in this act which have prior to the passage of this act been examined and reported to the Secretary of the Interior with recommendation for confirmation by either of the surveyors-general of the said Territories and State, and which are now pending before Congress for its action, shall not be required to be presented for the examination of the said board, but shall be disposed of by Congress under existing laws, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the board, on petition made to that end, that the surveyor-general has erroneously approved any such grant or the survey thereof, and recommended for confirmation any such grant so erroneously approved or surveyed, in which case the board of commissioners shall proceed to investigate and act upon the same as though it had never been acted upon by the surveyor-general.

The amendments of the committee are as follows:

Add after the words "Guadalupe Hidalgo," in line 6, the words "or the treaty concluded December 30, 1853, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also recommend to strike out the words "shall be accepted as evidence as though taken before the commission created under this act," in lines

18, 19, and 20, and insert "shall be competent evidence before said commission of such weight and credibility as they shall deem it entitled to, having in view the manner and circumstances under which it was originally taken."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee is to strike out the proviso beginning in line 32 and continuing down to line 47.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I wish to offer the amendment I have already indicated to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That any person or corporation claiming adverse title or right under the United States, or otherwise, to any part of the land so claimed, or who shall be in the actual possession of the land so claimed, or any part thereof, otherwise than by the lease or permission of the claimant, at the time of the passage of this act, shall be entitled to and shall have the right to intervene as a party in interest in the cause or proceedings before the said commissioners by attorney or otherwise, at any time before a decision has been rendered by said commissioners, and to submit evidence contesting, in whole or in part, the right of the claimants or the existence or validity of the alleged grant or claim; which evidence so submitted shall be considered by the commissioners in making their decision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of some member of the committee whether or not it was deemed practicable to impose some limitation upon the duration of claims? There must be a great many instances where the strong adverse possession of a portion of the property claimed, or all of it, ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. ELY. This bill provides for that further on.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Where a person has been in possession forty years he is entitled to claim not to exceed 80 acres of land, by reason of actual possession for that length of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is contained in a later portion of the bill, I will not press the matter now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to propose an amendment which I have written out, to come in after the word "rendered," in line 32 of section 7. I propose to insert there these words:

And such claimants, before the title to any such claim shall be confirmed to them, shall show that they, or those under whom they claim, have paid all taxes due on the same to the Territorial, county, and municipal governments in which the same may be situated.

I desire to say to the committee that we had in Texas various efforts running through more than thirty years to control the manufacture of titles. Those engaged in that business would come into the State and manufacture a title to land in a country which had been settled for thirty or forty years, where men had made their homes, built their residences, planted orchards, and made all sorts of improvements. The parties would sue the settlers in the Federal courts, perhaps at a great distance from them. Those who had wealth enough and determination enough to resist this attack upon their titles would be all right. The parties would say, "We will make a quitclaim deed to you." Others, unable to litigate, had to rebuy their lands or be ejected. We never had that stopped until we got the thirteenth article inserted in the constitution of Texas, that parties could not maintain their claims or have any standing in court unless they could show they had paid State, county, and municipal taxes upon the property in dispute. That gave us repose. If you adopt that provision you will put a stop to this fraud.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that is right. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HALL. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Texas if there is not a broad distinction between the case put by him and this case. The cases the gentleman has alluded to applied only to lands where the original title belonged to the State of Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. They applied to lands where there was a Mexican title.

Mr. HALL. I understand that; lands subsequently acquired by the State of Texas. Now the taxes that you would require to be paid under this proposed amendment are taxes which are assumed to have been levied on lands the title to which is in the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that in the section of country where this bill will operate these claims purport to be older than the junior claims where the titles are from the Government. These claims are brought in subsequently on older deeds. It was to prevent that that we adopted the article in our constitution to which I have referred; and the same proposition should be adopted with reference to Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In my judgment this body ought to go very slow in legislating upon this question, and it seems to me that here is a good place to go slow.

By the act of 1854 Congress provided for the examination of all these titles, and the present surveyor-general of New Mexico has entered upon the work of examination and re-examination of the work of his predecessors. If that work is allowed to go on it seems to me in a very brief time the facts and information will all be laid before Congress and the way will be smoothed for accurate Congressional action.

I have very little faith, Mr. Chairman, in these commissions that are appointed under the whip and spur and with the idea that they must act and act promptly. I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter I have received from Hon. George W. Julian, surveyor-general of New Mexico, concerning this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Santa Fé, May 3, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Let me ask your particular attention to the inclosed article from a leading Democratic paper in this Territory touching the bill recently reported from the House Committee on Private Land Claims, and made the special order in your body for the 11th of May. The article pretty clearly expresses my views; and as I am on the ground, mingling freely with the people here, and my official duties necessarily interest me in the subject and qualify me, I hope, to give an intelligent opinion, I trust you will do me the honor to duly consider the points made in the article. Under the circumstances I ought to be better fitted to judge of the matter than most of the members of Congressional committees, who are obliged to look at it at long range. But I need not dwell on the subject. I only wish to add that the passage of the bill referred to, at least in its present shape, would be disastrous to the best interests of New Mexico. I know your interest in matters involving our land policy and your personal friendliness to me; and for this reason I make this appeal to you.

I am, very truly, yours,

GEO. W. JULIAN.

Hon. JAMES B. WEAVER.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is no man in America better qualified to judge of the present land policy, or the policy as to any particular locality or district, than Mr. Julian; nor can his motives or information or intelligence be impugned in the least. I now send to the Clerk's desk the article referred to in Mr. Julian's communication, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE LAND COMMISSION PROJECT.

Under the act of July 22, 1854, it is made the duty of the surveyor-general to carefully examine all claims to Spanish grants, and make full report of his opinion to Congress for its final action. This would have proved a wise method of settling these cases if the surveyors-general of this Territory had been capable and honest men, and Congress had promptly acted upon their reports. The shameful maladministration of the act of 1854 has been the trouble, and not the act itself, and what is nedeed, therefore, is not further legislation or new machinery but improved methods. We are now living under an administration thoroughly committed to the work of reform. Our present surveyor-general has nearly completed his investigation of the cases on the files of his office; and, under instructions from the Land Department, he is thoroughly re-examining the work of his predecessors and preparing supplementary reports which will smooth the way of Congress to a speedy and just conclusion in the final settlement of these cases. All that is now wanted is that this work shall go on, and that Congress shall promptly do its duty. Many millions of acres now held in reservation under false claims and extravagant surveys can thus be speedily restored to the public domain, and the prayer of the people of New Mexico for settlement of their land titles be satisfactorily answered.

But should it be decided that Congress is not a fit tribunal for the adjudication of these cases, an easy and obvious remedy is at hand. Let the act of 1854 be so amended that the cases examined and reported by the surveyor-general shall be referred to the General Land Office for decision, with the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, as in other cases. Each claim will thus be submitted to the appropriate department of the Government, with all the documentary and other evidence respecting it, and the opinion of the surveyor-general touching the law and the facts, and his citation of authorities in support of his views. This would open the way for the final settlement of the whole of these Spanish grants in less than two years, and New Mexico would have a new birth.

But the grant claimants of the Territory are now howling for a "land commission" to settle these titles. They see rocks ahead, and are hunting for some means of escape. They don't like the operations of our surveyor-general, and they are seeking to arrest his work by transferring the whole business to a tribunal to be created by the bill recently reported from the House Committee on Private Land Claims. Let us look at its provisions. The three commissioners it provides for are to decide these cases, and from their decision an appeal lies to the district court of the Territory, and from the decision of that court to the Supreme Court of the United States, which is already behind with its work four or five years. The speedy settlement of these titles by such a process is simply impossible. It would require eight or ten years; for every grant claimant would appeal from an adverse decision, even if sure that his title was bad, simply as a means of prolonging his dominion over his ill-gotten possessions. It would be his interest to do this as the holder of a false claim and, in nearly every case, of a very large additional area illegally surveyed into it. It is thus easy to see why our grant men are so anxious about the passage of this bill. The speedy and just settlement of land titles in New Mexico is exactly the thing they do not want, and they are striving, with all their might, to avert or postpone their impending day of judgment. Every intelligent man in the Territory who is not interested in Spanish grants, and has given the subject his attention, knows this, and that the passage of this bill, in its present form, would be disastrous to New Mexico.

The measure is radically defective in other particulars. It makes no provision for turning over to the proposed commission the archives now on file in the surveyor-general's office, nor the opinions of the surveyor-general, with the law and evidence in each case and his citation of authorities in support of his views, all duly certified, and now before Congress. These papers would greatly facilitate the work of the commission by economizing its labor and speeding its conclusions. Without them each case must be re-examined from the beginning, including the retranslation of all Spanish papers.

The pending bill is open to another and far more serious objection. The great curse of New Mexico, so far as these grants are concerned, has been the enormous stretching of their boundaries by deputy surveyors, whose interest it was to extend their lines as a means of increasing their pay, or as the result of bribery by the claimants. Witnesses have been suborned for the purpose, and millions of acres of the public domain surveyed into the grants. The surveyor-general, if ever so honest, has been armed with no power to judicially determine the boundaries in advance, so as to make impossible these gigantic frauds. The settlement of titles is of far less moment than the correction of surveys, and the pending bill, in making no provision for this, gives us Hamlet with Hamlet omitted. The question of boundaries is as strictly a judicial one as the adjudication of titles. We must insist, therefore, if a commission is to be created, that the act providing for it shall be no half-way measure, but cover every point, and leave nothing undone in the work of a complete settlement of this long-pending and vexatious problem.

Before the Clerk had completed the reading of the above article the time of Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, expired.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the whole of the article be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done under the general leave that has been granted.

Mr. ELY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES.]

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word in reply to my friend from Iowa. Of course every new surveyor-general, every new governor, every new judge, every new officer that goes out to a Territory in the West always goes there for the purpose of reforming that portion of the universe. He always announces that every officer who preceded him did not know what he was about, but he is going to bring justice to the new land of promise. I, sir, have great respect for Mr. George W. Julian. I know something of his history in Congress and in this country. I am willing to concede that he does perhaps know as much as any public man of his time regarding the proper workings of the land laws of the United States. He was appointed upon the Committee on Public Lands in this House for years. But, sir, after some practical and active experience in the West for the past seventeen years, I stand here to say that these private land claims can not be settled, they can not be properly adjudicated, frauds will be committed upon the Government, injustice will be done to private individuals, and great frauds will result under any system of laws that leaves this matter to the executive and political branch of the Government, and I will tell you why. I have watched the working of both systems.

I have had something to do, in an indirect way, with the administration of the law for the settlement of private land claims under the act (of 1851, I believe) to settle private land claims in the State of California. The present bill is modeled upon that act, and what is it? It provides for three commissioners, who are to proceed to make an examination of the claims presented. One of those commissioners and its secretary must be familiar with the Spanish language. They take the testimony. When they have settled an individual case and made their ruling or finding and decision, that decision is filed, and there is an appeal to the United States district court of the district in which the land is situated. Then there is a proceeding in the nature of a trial de novo in a suit in equity in the United States district court. The parties go there; they have the benefit of the testimony taken before the commissioners, and I am prepared to say, sir——

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more. I think I can explain this subject to the House in five minutes in opposition to the communication of Mr. Julian, which has just been read.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was recognized, and yielded to Mr. SYMES.

Mr. SYMES. Now, Mr. Chairman, when these questions come before the district court, as I have said, they come for trial de novo. There appears the United States with its attorney; there appear the claimants with their attorneys in their behalf. They have the record made up, and the testimony taken by the commissioners, and new testimony may be taken, as I understand, under this bill. They then proceed in, allow me to say, the only way to determine important property rights which the civilization of mankind has yet invented that will result in anything but injustice and fraud and other things I do not propose to mention.

Then, sir, when that tribunal has made its decision, if the party is dissatisfied, he can take it for review, on appeal, to the Supreme Court of the United States. Then, sir, we have some assurance that the questions of title under the treaties will be settled in such a way that we shall not have, throughout the length and breadth of the land, charges of fraud and political influence upon the executive and upon the political departments of the Government. This bill provides for settling these titles in the courts. In the State of California final decisions, which now occupy thousands of pages in the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States, have settled the title to lands worth hundreds of millions of dollars under an act similar to this. On the other hand, sir, let me look for one moment at the experience under the act undertaking to have the executive department, through its surveyor-general in New Mexico, settle private land claims in that Territory. The surveyor-general proceeded to investigate, to make surveys, to establish boundary lines, to report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and then, upon his report, those cases were brought here to Congress, and have been pending before Congress for the last twenty to thirty years.

Now and then claims have been confirmed, it is alleged, for millions of acres more than they ought to have been, claims now alleged to be fraudulent, and suits have been pending during the last two or three years in the circuit courts of the United States in Colorado and elsewhere to set aside the patents given for those immense grants, and fraud has been charged and countercharged so as to besmirch every man connected with the business. The Maxwell land grant is an example. For these reasons, sir, I stand here to say that the attempt to settle private land claims by the executive and political departments of the Government is a farcial failure when those claims are supposed to be worth millions of dollars, and the cupidity of ringsters and claimants is involved. So I ask the House to consider this bill, perfect it if it is not perfect in details, and pass it. Then, when these claims shall have passed the commission, been reviewed in the district court of the United States, and appealed to the Supreme Court, we shall have settled these private land claims in a manner that will be above suspicion.

The pending formal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman upon this floor who has a higher regard for Mr. Julian, the surveyor-general of New Mexico, than I have.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, I think he is not speaking upon my amendment, and, as I fear that we may get away from the question, I suggest that the gentleman yield, and let us have that disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in looking at the provisions of section 15——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I gave way to have the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] acted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to introduce an amendment just before that.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is the one proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last clause in the pending amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] for the purpose of having a vote upon his amendment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] now proposes to call up a different subject, and I think we had better dispose of the pending amendment before we proceed to anything else.

Mr. HOLMAN. My reason for seeking the floor now is that the amendment which I offer ought, I think, to precede that submitted by the gentleman from Texas. The fifteenth section provides—

That wherever evidence shall be adduced by any claimant, and the fact proven to the satisfaction of the said commissioners, of the continuous occupancy and possession by such claimant, by himself or his ancestors or grantors, for forty years next preceeding the passage of this act, &c.

Now that does not meet the proposition to which I was seeking to call the attention of the committee a short time ago. It seems to me that where a party in possession—not the claimant who brings the matter formally before the court, but the party in possession, and who, under an amendment already adopted, is permitted to come in and defend—shows an uninterrupted adverse possession for a long period of time, the land ought not to be awarded to the claimant.

Mr. SYMES. Without a hearing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say if that fact is established the land ought not to be awarded to him at all. I therefore propose to amend by inserting immediately after the language of the gentleman from Texas, whose amendment I think ought certainly to be adopted, a provision to this effect——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Indiana that it would be best now to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas in order to ascertain whether it is to be a part of the bill or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that course. I call for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment of Mr. REAGAN was read, as follows:

After the word "rendered," in line 32, insert the following:
"And such claimants, before the title to any such claim shall be confirmed to them, shall show that they or those under whom they claim have paid all taxes due on the same to the Territorial, county, and municipal governments in which the same may be situated."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. REAGAN, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 46, noes 44.

Mr. HEWITT. I send to the desk an amendment——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The proceedings on this bill are conducted in such a way that it is impossible for gentlemen on this side of the House to know what is going on. The last vote was cast largely on suspicion, gentlemen about me inquiring on what subject they were voting.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was twice read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The discussion seems to be conducted almost exclusively by gentlemen on the other side of the House, and with so little voice that we do not hear what is being said. I call attention to the matter with the view of having legislation proceed intelligently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not compel gentlemen to speak loudly.

Mr. HEWITT. I move to amend by inserting after the word "taken," in line 23, page 5, the clause which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And whenever a claim is presented before the said commission under the provisions of this act it shall be the duty of the said commission, before proceeding to hear the same, to ascertain and determine the extent thereof in number of acres; and all final decisions shall be limited and determined by said preliminary determination; and said commission shall not include in their said determination any land in excess of the land intended to have been granted in the original grant; and for the purpose of said determination the said commission shall have control of the archives now on file in the offices of the several surveyors-general, together with the opinions of the surveyors-general relative thereto.

Mr. HEWITT. This amendment has been framed upon consultation with the members of the committee, and I believe it receives their approval. It is intended to meet the criticisms which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] made after having the letter from Mr. Julian read. I believe there is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. HEWITT was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the text of section 7, as it now stands amended, the clause which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

No land which it shall be established by competent evidence has been in the actual possession of any person and the person under whom he claims, adverse to the claimant, continuously for the period of twenty-five years previous to the formal presentation of the claim, shall be awarded to the claimant.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the fifteenth section of this bill provides for a title by limitation to the claimant after an occupation of the land for forty years; but there is no provision in the bill, so far as I am able to discover, by which a limitation shall run in favor of the adverse claimant, the party who is permitted by an amendment offered at the instance of the committee to appear adversely to the claimant. It does seem to me that in perfect harmony with the treaty on which these claims are supposed to rest, where it is established that there has been during a long period of time an actual, open, adverse possession on the part of an occupant, and he is permitted to come in and defend and show that fact, the land which he has thus occupied should not be embraced in the finding in behalf of the claimant.

Mr. CROXTON. Does not the fifteenth section cover that?

Mr. THOMPSON made a remark sotto voce.

Mr. HOLMAN. The fifteenth section does not apply to it at all. It only applies to the claimant who brought proceedings. These claims were generally filed. It is suggested to me the language is, Mr. Chairman, "that wherever evidence shall be adduced by any claimant and the fact proven to the satisfaction of the said commissioners of the continuous occupancy," &c. My friend misapprehends it. Wherever it is proved by any claimant the term claimant will be interpreted by the proceedings showing claimant is the person who presented originally his formal claim to the land. The amendment I seek to offer is not as to the claim between a claimant and the Government, but as between a claimant when filing his claim under this bill and the other who is permitted to come in and defend for himself. It does seem to me where a claimant has held peaceful possession for twenty-five years the claim ought not to be determined in favor of the adverse party.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment should prevail. The territory in which these private land claims lie was ceded by Mexico to the United States, and the United States therefore acquired whatever title Mexico had; that is, the legal title to these lands, subject to the treaty stipulations with Mexico. It seems to me the attempt here is to set up a statute of limitation against these claimants or against the United States pending the consideration by the United States of the rights of claimants. If the claimant has not a title as against the United States, if the United States decides against the claimant's title, then the land lapses into the body of the public domain, as I understand it. But now it is proposed to set up a statute of limitations against the United States and against the claimants. If one of these claimants under a grant from Mexico has not a valid title, then I say these lands should lapse into the body of the public domain. If he has a good title, then under the treaty with Mexico we are bound to confirm that title, and no intruder or trespasser in the mean time upon that land should be allowed to establish an adverse claim.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the objection I have to the amendment is not that it is too short, but, on the contrary, that it is too long. There have been times in our country when statutes of limitation were not regarded with favor, but this is not the case now in the most learned and able courts of the country.

In the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor we have three or four statutes of limitation. We have the three-year statute and five-year statute and ten-year statute; and possession, peaceable possession, without actual or constructive notice of adverse claim, for ten years gives the claimant title superior to the older title which has not been asserted in that time to the land claimed by the occupant. This is in the interest of peace, to prevent litigation. It has been vindicated in the courts upon the ground that it was a fraud upon the settler to allow him to go upon the land and settle upon it and hold possession without actual or constructive notice of adverse title. If a man holds a title not placed of record, not giving notice of it, and allows the Government to grant it away or people to settle upon it, he perpetrates a fraud upon the settlers; and the statute of limitations, I should say, instead of twenty-five years in behalf of the settler who has occupied land in peaceful possession, without any notice, constructive or otherwise, of adverse title, should have a far less period.

Mr. THOMPSON. As against the United States?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not talking about the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. But I put the question to the gentleman as to the statute of limitations as against the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not talking of claims against the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. But the legal title is in the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I am discussing the question of contesting claimants. This bill is to adjudicate claims between adverse claimants, and I say when a claimant has occupied the land in peaceful possession, without actual or constructive notice of adverse title, in consideration of peace and justice and the growth and settlement of the country his claim should be allowed after the period fixed by the statute of limitation.

Mr. THOMPSON. Even if his claim did not originate under a grant from Mexico?

Mr. REAGAN. I have been trying to state what my proposition is. I do not know that I understand the gentleman's point.

Mr. THOMPSON. Let me explain it. Here is a claim under a grant from the Government of Mexico; now, as I understand that proposition, an outsider may enter upon the possession of that land without claiming to have had a grant—a mere interloper—and if allowed to remain in possession of it for ten years or for twenty-five years or some other term, he acquires a valid title even as against the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman does not understand the point of my argument. I do not mean that.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, then, a valid title as against one who claims under a grant from Mexico, and which grant, if valid, the United States as the holder of the legal title is, under the treaty with Mexico, bound to confirm.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman misapprehends my point. I say as against the private adverse claimant. This law has for its object the quieting of these titles and the adjustment of the claims. Provision is made to authorize adverse claimants to set up their titles. Now I insist that there ought to be some limit——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I regret that I can not finish the sentence.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a suggestion or two upon the proposed amendment which seems to me ought to settle the question that it is not a proper one to append to this bill. The title to these lands is now in the United States Government, and it holds them in trust under these treaties for the various parties who have held and still claim to hold grants from the original proprietary government; and this Government is under the highest duty and obligation to perform that trust as well as to see that the original and rightful beneficiaries receive the lands which this Government has been holding all these years for them. It is the duty of Congress to prevent, therefore, these interlopers and trespassers from going upon the lands and acquiring title hostile to the original and rightful owners, either by adverse possession or otherwise.

It would be a new idea for the Government to place a limitation in behalf of these interlopers and trespassers, by which they could acquire title as against the sovereign Government. Such a procedure could not be permitted and should not be allowed to intervene to dispossess the original and rightful beneficiaries; especially in view of the fact that the Government has never furnished them a tribunal into which they could go and assert their rights so as to have their titles completed; but the slow policy of the Government has been to stand mute and silent until they should come here and knock at the doors of Congress. It seems to me in consequence of it that no statute of limitations should be enacted to work this great injustice to them.

Another reason why a statute of limitation ought not to run in behalf of persons who are occupying the lands without rightful title or claim, or even color of title, is that these titles are in the Government of the United States. If the Government has granted to any of these individuals, they will be protected by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana; they can assert that right in the courts as a matter of defense, that is to say, if they have any right under the authority of the Government they have a means to protect themselves. But this bill is simply to settle titles that are supposed to be held by the Government in trust for the beneficiaries under these treaties with foreign governments; and under such a state of affairs it would be scarcely just, in my comprehension, to bar or cut off rights of that character by such a limitation.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the pro forma amendment, and I beg the indulgence of the committee to permit me to renew it for a few moments upon this subject.

The United States Government by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo made provision to respect the titles acquired by citizens under the laws of Mexico; but it did not obligate itself, as supposed by the argument of the gentleman from Iowa here, to allow them to retain a dormant title an indefinite length of time, and then when the lands became valuable present it to the country and demand that it should be recognized. There is no such thing as that. The gentleman seems not to have understood the proposition I make, which is that the statute of limitations is not to run in favor of any one except as to persons who have occupied lands in fee-simple—uninterrupted adverse possession—for ten years after the constructive notice or a record or an actual notice of title. Is it to be presumed that the United States have enacted such a folly, when it agreed that the titles acquired under the Government of Mexico should be respected, as to say that under this treaty and according to our own laws the holders of these titles should be permitted to allow them to remain dormant in their hands, with no notice of their interest, for twenty or thirty years, until parties have gone in and held possession and made improvements, and then when the lands are valuable to present their claim?

Mr. HALL. How can you complain about the beneficiaries not making the record of their title when you have furnished them with no tribunal in which they can make them?

Mr. REAGAN. I think the gentleman from Iowa assumes too much in saying that the Government has not made arrangements; in fact, it never prevented them from recording their titles.

Mr. HALL. They are recorded.

Mr. REAGAN. If they are recorded that is a sufficient notice to the people.

So the whole of the gentleman's argument rests on the idea that there has been no notice of title; and he assumes that. But if they have titles they should be known to the records and the public maps or to some human being, and if they are known to none of these, if there is no evidence of them, how can there be any justice or morality in holding dormant titles in their hands till the country is settled up and improved, and then producing the titles and driving settlers from their homes?

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. Is there any such thing known to the law as constructive notice? Can there be notice unless the law prescribes the act which shall operate as such? And is there any such act of Congress prescribing anything that can be done by these occupants that shall act as notice?

Mr. REAGAN. I venture to say there is not a State in the Union where it has not been determined that a record of a title is constructive notice.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the formal amendment.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is mistaken as to the object which he desires to accomplish by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. My friend from Iowa, I think, was also mistaken in one statement. The titles to Mexican grants are not in the United States, and never have been. The theory of all these cases is, that if the claim is a good one the titles began with the Republic of Mexico or with Spain, and that this Government never owned the land at all. That is the theory upon which the claim is based. If it is not derived from Spain or Mexico it has no status.

Mr. THOMPSON. The title must remain somewhere. If not vested in the claimant it must have passed with the act of cession, and therefore the legal title is in the United States.

Mr. SPRINGER. The title is not in the United States, if the claim is a good one. The United States acquired the sovereignty. But wherever an individual owned land under the Government of Mexico his title is protected under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and that is what this commission is for, to determine the rights under the Government of Mexico.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Suppose there is no evidence of the man's title anywhere?

Mr. SPRINGER. Then he has no title. The title does not exist in the air. It must be established by proper muniments of title.

Mr. REAGAN. From the time of the annexation of Texas until now these titles have continued to come in, and I venture to say will continue to come in, in New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado until they are finally closed up in some way.

Mr. SPRINGER. If any citizen of the Republic of Mexico at the time of the cession of territory to the United States owned land under the laws of Mexico, he did not part with his title by reason of the cession; but the Government of the United States pledged itself in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo to protect that title, whatever it was; and it is for the purpose of ascertaining what that title was that this commission is established.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I find that the amendment will more appropriately come in when we reach section 15 than where it is now offered. I therefore withdraw it.

Mr. McADOO. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. I make a point of order against further debate on this bill. This debate was only allowed to proceed for two hours by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair is informed, there was no order of the House on the subject of limiting debate, nor was unanimous consent asked. The Chair was informed that the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims and the chairman of the committee having charge of the Army appropriation bill made an agreement as to the committee rising, but there has been no order of the House upon the subject. The Chair suggests a motion to rise is the way to dispose of the matter.

Mr. HALSELL. What the Chair has stated is exactly true. I feel I have no right to trespass on the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], but I think we are near the end of this bill, and I ask the gentleman's indulgence for a few minutes longer, and in that event I think we will get through without any difficulty.

Mr. BRAGG. It does not seem as if this bill would be finished although all the afternoon should be given to it.

Mr. HALSELL. I think we can get through with it pretty soon.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman state what time he desires?

Mr. HALSELL. Thirty minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I will yield thirty minutes, and I give notice that at the end of thirty minutes I will claim the floor, vote or no vote, on this bill.

Mr. McADOO. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 7 the following:

"Provided, That no alien, or person who is not a citizen of the United States, shall acquire title to any lands subject to the decision of this commission unless his right to the same is clearly provided for by any of the treaties herein referred to."

Mr. McADOO. I think the time has come when in all future legislation of Congress the principle contained in this amendment should be ingrafted on the statute-book. In the first place, both political parties in their national conventions have declared against alien ownership of lands. In the second place, we are confronted by the fact that nearly 30,000,000 acres of land are owned by persons who are not citizens of the United States, with millions upon millions of foreign capital invested in cattle now grazing on the public domain, and by the additional fact that by reason of large foreign investments in railroad bonds secured on lands, which will in many instances be foreclosed, the time is not far distant when 100,000,000 acres of land will through foreclosure come into the hands of foreigners, as has been pointed out in the able report made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] in support of his bill against such ownership.

There are now two bills before this House embodying the principle of this amendment; one, as I have said, introduced by the gentleman from Alabama and one by myself; and there is probably no other measure before Congress which has behind it such a powerful public sentiment as have these bills against alien ownership. American land for American citizens, say our people; let those only own our land who believe in our institutions. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, it is a fact, demonstrated by the exceedingly able Commissioner of the General Land Office, a gentleman of sterling integrity and marked ability, Mr. Sparks, that there are now only 5,000,000 acres of the public domain upon which a settler who has no capital can settle himself.

When you look at the map of the United States and the vast amount of public land which it exhibits, the idea naturally occurs that our public domain is almost illimitable and inexhaustible; but the real fact is, that taking out the great area of land that can not be cultivated without irrigation, which is always costly, and the large portion of land which is sterile and unfit or unprofitable for agricultural purposes, such as mountain and desert land and the like, there remains only about 5,000,000 acres of the public domain open to the poor settler, and this while the public lands are being settled up at the rate of 20,000,000 acres every year. Now, this public domain of ours—what is it? It is the safety-valve of republican institutions. It is the outlet for popular discontent. It is the hope and the heritage of the people of the whole United States, and I, for one, will see to it so long as I am a member of this House that in all land measures that come up here the industrial and deserving people of this land shall be protected by adopting this principle.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word in regard to this bill. Many of these claims, it is fair to presume, have been disposed of to aliens and to alien companies, and therefore I hope they will not be considered by the commission.

Mr. ELY. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ELY. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering House bill No. 2851; and, pending that, I move that debate upon each remaining section of this bill be limited to one minute.

The SPEAKER. That motion can only apply to the section under consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point, as all the amendments that are desired can be made in the House, that the Committee of the Whole be now discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that the bill be considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is to dispose of the amendments which have been agreed upon in Committee of the Whole. Unless a separate vote is demanded upon some one of these amendments the question will be taken upon agreeing to them in gross. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendments which are pending in the House.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it seem to me that my friend did not carefully read the first part of section 7, or he would not have offered this amendment. The bill, it seems to me, can not refer to any persons except those who claim in the way that is now suggested, or sought to be excepted, by the amendment. The amendment seems to me to be entirely unnecessary in the first place, and in the next place if these parties have these rights under the treaties we have no right here by act of Congress to deprive them of those rights.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 7 insert:
"Provided, That no alien, or person who is not a citizen, shall acquire title to any lands subject to the decision of the commission unless his right to the same is clearly provided for by one of the treaties herein referred to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there are some amendments reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims to a subsequent portion of the bill, and I suggest that they had better be acted upon at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments recommended by the Committee on Private Land Claims which have not been acted upon.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I have sent to the desk some formal amendments to which the members of the Committee on Private Land Claims have assented, designed to make section 8 correspond with section 7.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the amendments of the committee, after which the Chair will cause the amendments of the gentleman from Wisconsin to be read.

The following amendment was read:

After the words "Guadalupe Hidalgo," in line 5, section 12, insert "and the treaty with Mexico concluded December 30, 1853, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 20. That section 8 of the act of Congress approved July 22, 1854, entitled "An act to establish the offices of surveyor-general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," and all acts amendatory or in extension thereof or supplementary thereto, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELY. I now move the adoption of certain formal amendments to section 8, to which the Committee on Private Land Claims have assented.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "United States," in line 4, insert "or for any intervener."
After the words "United States," in line 15, insert "by any intervener."
After the words "United States," in line 21, insert "and upon all parties intervening in said cause or proceeding."
In line 23, after the word "attorney," insert "and upon all parties intervening in said cause or proceeding."
After the words "United States," in line 30, insert "and the answer of the intervener."
After the word "claim," in line 31, insert "or any part thereof."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ELY. The Committee on Private Land Claims has also agreed to another amendment, which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 20 the following:
"Provided, That the filing of a claim in good faith, as provided in this act, shall have the effect of lis pendens as to all persons subsequently entering upon the lands or on any portion of them, or acquiring any interest therein embraced within such claim."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SYMES. I desire to offer a somewhat formal amendment to line 13, section 7, to insert before the word "court" the words "or Territorial," so as to read "United States district or Territorial court." In the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico there are no United States district courts; there are Territorial courts. If my amendment be adopted the language of the section will describe the different classes of courts found in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico and the State of Colorado to which the bill applies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SYMES. I also desire to move an amendment to line 27, section 13. The section there speaks of "a petition to the district judge of the United States." In the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico there are no district judges of the United States. There are Territorial courts held by the chief-justice of the Territory or the associate justices, acting as judges of the Territorial district. I therefore move to amend by inserting after the words "United States," in line 27, the words "or Territorial district judge."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SYMES. I also move to amend by inserting after the words "district court," in the first line of section 9, the words "or Territorial district court." The same reasons which I have stated in behalf of the other amendments apply in this case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by adding at the end of section 15 the clause which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in cases in which there are adverse private claimants, the actual occupant, though claiming under a junior claim or title, if he has been in the peaceful, uninterrupted, and adverse possession of the land in controversy for ten years without either actual or constructive notice of the adverse title or claim, shall be held to have the superior title as between the private claimants.

Mr. REAGAN. This amendment is designed to fix a limitation in favor of occupants of land who have been in peaceful, uninterrupted, adverse possession for ten years, without either actual or constructive notice of another outstanding title. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was made thirty-eight years ago. Within the period which has since elapsed claimants under that treaty have had ample time to make known the existence of their claims, to assert title, and to place the evidence of it among the appropriate archives or to have it recorded in the proper office. If they have failed to do this and have thus allowed other parties to occupy and cultivate the lands and build up homes without the knowledge of any opposing title, then justice and equity require that the title should be awarded to the occupant of the land. I beg gentlemen to understand that if the claimant has deposited the evidence of his title in the proper office, if he has recorded it among the proper records, if he has at any time practically asserted his claim, this provision will not affect him; but if he has chosen to hold a title dormant in his hands for nearly forty years without asserting his title or taking any steps to place it on record or to file the evidence of it among the proper archives, he has no right to come in now and claim the benefit of improvements made in good faith by occupants who have had no notice of the existence of any such opposing title. I trust that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ELY. I demand the previous question on the pending amendment and engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. REAGAN's amendment was disagreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. LOWRY. I rise to a question of privilege. I submit a report from the Committee on Elections; and as it is a unanimous report of the Committee on Elections I shall ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Barclay Henley, J. A. Louttit, Joseph McKenna, W. W. Morrow, Charles N. Felton, and H. H. Markham, from the respective Congressional districts of California, were duly elected members from the State of California and are legally entitled to their seats.
Resolved, That Alexander M. McKay, Montague R. Leverson, and Archibald McGrew were not elected as such Representatives and are not entitled to seats in this body.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. LOWRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent the call of committees for reports this morning be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask first for unanimous consent.

Mr. STORM. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with for this morning.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 36.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the motion was disagreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS, ETC.

Several messages in writing were received from the President of the United States by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles, namely:

The SPEAKER. Does this bill make an appropriation or require an appropriation to be made?

Mr. MERRIMAN. No, sir.

The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 5250 and H. Res. 86 were laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. BELMONT. I am compelled to raise the question of consideration against that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not raise the question of consideration. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole can only be defeated by a negative vote.

Mr. BELMONT. Is not the regular order the call of committees for consideration of bills?- The call now rests with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. But the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills has preference over the hour for consideration of bills. It is a motion in order at any time after the morning hour has expired, but the House if it chooses can refuse to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BELMONT. I desired the ruling of the Chair on that point.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the Army appropriation bill. There being no amendment pending, the Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay: For pay of officers in the Corps of Engineers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $66,864.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert after line 77, between lines 77 and 78, the words "pay of staff officers." That is necessary in order to pay these officers as staff officers, because those words were stricken out from another line. I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment. It was understood when the words were stricken out above that they should be inserted here.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not know who understood it. I seriously object to the amendment, for two reasons: First, it is inoperative to produce the result which the gentleman and those whom he represents desire. The insertion of a head-line in an appropriation bill is a mere nullity, and will not be printed in the bill. If the purpose is to declare that the Engineer Corps are not staff officers, then it becomes new legislation, because they have been held to be staff officers by the decisions of the Department ever since 1802.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered on Saturday, and which was adopted by the committee, was that we should strike out the words "staff officers" and substitute the words "pay of the Corps of Engineers," and the RECORD of Saturday shows it. That does not make any new legislation, because it does not use the words "the line." Now, what I wished to do by my amendment was to prevent new legislation; putting in anything that would designate the Corps of Engineers as either staff or line officers, simply leaving them just as the law fixed them.

I do not think it is necessary for me to recapitulate now what I said on Saturday, but I assert that what I then said (giving the pages and dates of the enactments) shows that every law ever enacted with regard to the Corps of Engineers fixes it as a corps of the line of the Army; that no law ever enacted has fixed it as a part of the staff, and that every law ever enacted which has fixed the staff, or sought to designate what the staff should be, omits the Corps of Engineers. Therefore I say there is no law which has ever in any way fixed the engineers as a part of the staff.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, the Revised Statutes in force (paragraph 1158) show that this corps do not belong to the line of the Army. The decision of the Secretary of War made in a special case last season decides that they do not belong to the line of the Army. The statute which is now in force has been in force since 1802, and in every instance where the question has been decided it has been held that these officers do not belong to the line of the Army. The insertion of words which the gentleman says the RECORD shows I was not aware of. I understood the motion to be to strike out the words "for pay of staff corps," not to insert any words in lieu thereof. If it should be "for pay of Engineer Corps," why then at the head of each paragraph we would have to insert "for pay of," whereas at the close we use the general expression "for pay of the Army." As soon as I can get the Revised Statutes I will show the gentleman the law, and he and those whom he represents have been struggling against that law and the decisions of the Departments for nearly eighty years.

The question when it first arose was in relation to a major of engineers who found himself stationed at West Point, and when the superintendent of the institution and the officer next in rank went away this major claimed to control the post upon the ground that he was the ranking officer, but the Secretary of War decided that he could not control because he was not an officer of the line, and that the next officer of the line who was there outranked him. The paragraph of the Revised Statutes to which I have referred is numbered 1158, which reads:

Engineers shall not assume nor be ordered on any duty beyond the line of their immediate profession, except by the special order of the President.

They can assume control of no troops; they can exercise no command; they can do no act outside of their corps, except by special assignment of the President. That has been the law ever since the ruling made by General Dearborn, as Secretary of War, in 1802. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, as I have been spoken of as "representing" somebody in this matter, I desire to say to this House that I represent here nothing on earth and nobody on earth but the people of the eighth district of Alabama, and by their authority, so far as the Constitution and laws provide and the good of the country demands, all the people of the United States. In all that I have said on this subject I have merely sought to have this bill conformed to what I believe to be the best interests of the service. The very paragraph read by the distinguished chairman of my committee shows that the person who issued that order or rendered the decision and the Congress which enacted the law recognized that the Corps of Engineers were not of the staff, because if they had been of the staff such an order or decision or law would not have been necessary. Staff officers do not have a right to command troops, and if these engineer officers were of the staff no order would have to be issued or law enacted saying that they should not command. But that order went on to give the reasons why they should not command, and the reason is this——

Mr. BRAGG. It is a statute, not an order.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, the statute. The reason given was that the scientific pursuits of the Corps of Engineers did not allow time for attention to the details of the care and discipline of troops. That shows that under the law they had a right to command, but that the character of their ordinary duties was so much more important than the commanding of troops, that unless the President so ordered they should not command, but should have time to attend to these more important duties of a scientific character.

There is not, as I say, a single paragraph which in any way designates engineer officers as officers of the staff. These paragraphs in the laws and orders simply designate what duties the officers shall perform, and prescribe that without an order of the President they shall not assume the command of troops.

Mr. BRAGG. Are there any other line officers who can not assume command without an order from the President?

Mr. WHEELER. There would be if there were a law so providing. If there were any other line officers whose duties were recognized as more important than to command troops, it would very probably have been provided by law or by order that they should perform such duties, and should not command troops. The very fact that this order was issued, the very fact that a law was enacted limiting the authority o these officers to command to such periods as the President might direct, shows that they are not officers of the staff. I again call attention to the fact which I mentioned the other day, that during the war of 1812 the President ordered General Bloomfield to assign engineer officers to their appropriate commands, because at that time the exigency was such he thought they were needed to command, and, as he could not be present to designate when they should command, he ordered the commanding generals to assign them to commands when they saw fit. I think this conclusively refutes the suggestion of the gentleman that these officers are to be regarded as officers of the staff.

The question having been taken on the amendment of Mr. WHEELER,

The CHAIRMAN said: In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" have it.

Mr. BRAGG. I shall have to ask for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 41, noes 11.

Mr. BRAGG. I suppose that under the rule prevailing in the English Parliament I ought now properly, after this vote, to tender the charge of this bill to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. I am willing to take the instruction of the House on that point.

Mr. WHEELER. If that point should carry I would cry out, "No quorum!"

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence Department.—For one brigadier-general, two colonels, three lieutenant-colonels, eight majors, twelve captains (mounted), and additional pay for one hundred and forty acting commissaries, $79,500.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read; and I give notice that at the proper times I shall move to strike out the paragraphs beginning respectively on line 100, line 113, line 116, line 120, and line 124.

I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill provides for the pay of officers of the Army $5,261,849.50, and for the pay of all the enlisted men and non-commissioned officers of the Army $4,723,773.25, showing an excess for pay of officers of our Army of something over $538,000. This first paragraph, providing for the pay of the Subsistence Department, appropriates in round numbers $100,000; for the Pay Department there is appropriated $167,000; for the pay of the Judge-Advocate-General's Department more than $31,000; making a total in round numbers of $300,000.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that all the duties of the Commissary Department and of the staff ought to be performed by the Quartermaster's Department. The fact of our having a Commissary Department absolutely increases, in my judgment, the labors that are necessary. For example, as soon as a commissary makes a purchase, we will say, in New York city, he must turn that over to the Quartermaster's Department (a great deal of clerical labor being necessary), in order to have the articles purchased transported, we will say, to the division headquarters in Chicago. On reaching there they are turned back again to the commissary, clerical labor of an extraordinary character being again necessary. Then, if it is desired to send the articles to a department they must be again turned over to the Quartermaster-General for transportation, and on arrival at their destination must be turned over to the commissary. When you want to send them to a post they must again be turned over to the quartermaster, and on reaching their destination turned back again to the commissary. In my judgment all this labor connected with the Subsistence Department might easily be performed by the Quartermaster-General's Department with the clerical force that the commissaries now have.

Again, all the duties of the Pay Department might be performed by the quartermasters of the Army. These quartermasters are everywhere where there is any portion of the Army. It would be a great deal easier, more convenient, and safe, it seems to me, to send money by drafts than in the cumbersome way in which it is sent by our Pay Department, being carried in safes, subject to robbery or spoliation. The Quartermaster's Department, with the clerical force that the Pay Department now has, could perform all these duties easily and without additional expense, thus saving $167,000 a year.

I would like to have any gentleman explain the necessity for eight or ten or a dozen of these law officers for the twenty-five thousand men composing the Army, and especially a class of law officers who never do any regular business. That is a question that should be satisfactorily explained before we consent to keep this provision in the bill.

Now, whenever a judge-advocate is to do anything in the prosecution of a criminal case in connection with the Army some man is detailed from the Army to do the actual work. Yet we have eight of these gentlemen proposed to be set apart and paid to do the legal business for the Army. A public prosecutor in one of our districts will do the criminal legal business for one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand people, while eight of these high-priced men are to be detailed to do the legal business of twenty-five thousand men and that, too, with such assistance as to enable them to shirk absolutely the labors of the trial. They do nothing of that kind, for some one is detailed or the other officers of the Army do it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask: Does your motion include the pay of judge-advocates general of the Army?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not make the motion at this time; but I have just stated that it was my intention to submit that motion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The reason I interrupted the gentleman to ask the question was that I have something to say on that motion when it is presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman withdraw the amendment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not.

Mr. BRAGG. I supposed the gentleman would withdraw it, as I took it for granted that it was only offered for buncombe.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; not by any means. I desire to strike out that provision of the bill, with the expectation that when it is stricken out and we refuse to make an appropriation for these gentlemen, the gentleman from Wisconsin will take that as such a hint of the temper of the House upon the subject that he will introduce a bill from his committee doing away with that branch of the service in the future.

Mr. BRAGG. I thank the gentleman for the hint.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is for the pay of officers who have been created by law, and the officers have been appointed by law. The salary is fixed by law, and if we fail to provide, to appropriate for the payment of the salary, we simply force them to the necessity of instituting proceedings against the United States in the Court of Claims, and thereby recover judgment for what they are entitled to get under the law.

Mr. HEPBURN. What then?

Mr. BRAGG. What then? I doubt very much whether my distinguished friend from Iowa would ask the Committee on Military Affairs to violate the law and neglect to provide for the express contracts of the Government, with the understanding that we are to take the contingencies that may arise thereafter.

These officers must be provided for; that is the law. We can not change the law. We can not in this bill make a new law; we have to take the law as it is given to us. We do not make it ourselves. Gentlemen with whom my friend from Iowa associates, his political associates, made it. They foisted on the Army this Judge-Advocate Department. Such a thing was never heard of until they came into power; never dreamed of until it was necessary to make some safe places to put the "kitchen cabinet" in that had attended some of the Presidential candidates during certain political canvasses. To them we owe this provision. But it comes here as the law, and we are obliged to abide by it and make provision to carry it out, whether it be good or bad.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last word. At the time of the creation of this department there was a necessity for it. There were more than a million of men then in the Army, and it was entirely proper and legitimate that there should be a number of judge-advocates for the purpose of transacting the business necessarily arising in an army of that size. There is no such necessity now.

The gentleman suggests that because the law provides for these officers, therefore necessarily there must be a provision in the appropriation bill for their payment. The gentleman fails to note this fact: that this appropriation bill is to take effect at a day somewhat distant in the future. Long before that day arrives, if this amendment shall be adopted and the gentleman discovers that it is the temper of the House that these officers are necessary, then he can undoubtedly, as the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, frame a law which will fit that condition, and would be swift to bring in a bill here that would provide for the repeal of the statute or its modification.

I do not understand that because there is a statute upon the subject creating these officers, therefore the House is precluded from voting affirmatively on an amendment of this kind. We are doing no harm to anybody. We are simply saying in this act we do not want these officers continued, and simply laying out a line of duty for the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, which I have no doubt he will speedily follow.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to strike out the words which the Clerk will again read.

The paragraph proposed by Mr. HEPBURN to be stricken out was again read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 23.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 63.

The CHAIRMAN. The "noes" have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask if the point of no quorum has been withdrawn?

Mr. BRAGG. I did not make the point of no quorum. I called for tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understood the Chair to say that the point of no quorum was made. Certainly a sufficient number of gentlemen did not vote to authorize the appointment of tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] demanded tellers. The Chair stated that no quorum having voted the Chair would order tellers. The Chair held the gentleman from Wisconsin was entitled to have tellers. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] now make the point as to a quorum?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Additional pay: For pay of the officers of the Subsistence Department for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $22,260.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. BRAGG. I think it is time this House should begin seriously to consider what they are doing. This may be a very clever thing to do. It may be very pleasant to do a thing at one time and very injurious to do the same thing at another time.

We have under consideration a general appropriation bill. We have men who are entitled to receive their pay and can recover it in the courts. We are simply asking to make the regular annual appropriation to provide for their payment, rather than to create litigation on the part of the people who are in our service holding commissions, and whom we have no means just at present under this bill of ousting.

If any of these distinguished reformers desire to make any changes in the Army which will result either in reducing the number of officers or reducing their pay I will ask that the committee rise, in order to give them an opportunity to introduce a bill and have it referred to my committee. I have served several years in this body, and I have never heard any cry come from that side unless it was a cry for more. But here when we reach a class of legislation that we can not interfere with, when no enactment can be adopted, when no change can be made, and when they can be put to their mettle by asking them to vote for the measure, they propose to destroy the operations of the Government, or to block its wheels, by refusing to make appropriation for men who hold their offices by virtue of law and with whom we have contracted to make payment for their services. I hope the amendment will fail.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no proposition here in any manner to interfere with the functions of the Government. This motion I have made may be adopted and still there will be no irreparable harm done to the administration of public affairs. There is already provision made for the pay of the Subsistence Department; until the beginning of the next fiscal year that will be paid.

Now, if this House shall by an affirmative vote say that in their humble judgment the Subsistence Department should no longer exist, before there shall be any deficiency the chairman of the committee can see to the wiping out of these officers. The gentleman suggests the proper way to do it is to bring in a bill to reform this matter. The gentleman knows what the fate of such a bill would be with himself at the head of the committee. If he does not know all the rest of us do, that it would be smothered there and that there would be no opportunity to have a fair, dispassionate, discussion of the whole question in this House. The gentleman would take care of it. This is the only way in which the temper of this House on this question can be ascertained; and it is an entirely legitimate way. There is nothing revolutionary in it. There is nothing which should subject the gentlemen who may vote for the proposition to the sneers of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that if there has been no effort at reform in this direction heretofore it is time now that there should be. No man, in my humble judgment, conversant with the subject will seriously insist that the officers of the Commissary Department are essential to the well-being of the Army. There is no well-informed man but knows that all the duties of these officers can and ought to be performed by the officers of the Quartermaster's Department; that instead of increasing the labors of the Quartermaster's Department it would actually diminish their labors. Instead of increasing the necessity for clerical force it would do away with the necessity for a large portion of it. The fact of having the two staffs creates labor, creates trouble, creates confusion; and we would be minifying the expense and labor by changing the statute upon that subject.

I have not made this motion for the purpose, as the gentleman from Wisconsin states, of buncombe. That was the word he used. He does not always opportunely use his words. He does not always select them as they ought to be selected.

Mr. BRAGG. I got the right one that time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think the gentleman got the right word. There is no buncombe in this. It is a right and proper reform. And if there was any sincerity whatever in the professions of gentlemen on that side with reference to reform, if they meant anything when they talked about economy, they would be glad to seize upon this opportunity of saving $300,000 of the people's money. But the efforts of the gentlemen and the vote they have given show the utter falsity and untruthfulness of all these continual pretenses that are made on that side of the body-politic with regard to reform and with regard to economy. You do not mean it, gentlemen. You simply made use of that talk as a lever to help you to get into place. You have got there, and now you like the expenditures—I was going to say, as well as any one—I will say better than any one.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the last word. I had sincerely hoped that the pot from Iowa had boiled and effervesced so much and that so much gas had escaped from it on the river and harbor bill that the people of Iowa had become satisfied that one of their distinguished Representatives was here as a champion of reform, and that he would rest on his laurels and give us an opportunity to go on with legislation.

I withdraw my formal amendment and call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 55, noes 69.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay Department: For one brigadier-general, two colonels, three lieutenant-colonels, and forty-three majors, $129,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 23, noes 58.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Judge-Advocate-General's Department: For one brigadier-general, one colonel, three lieutenant-colonels, three majors, and for additional pay for acting judge-advocates, in all $24,250.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I support the motion to strike out this paragraph because in my judgment there is not in all the laws of the United States a more fruitful source of the violation of all principles of law, constitutional and statutory, than the machinery of this Judge-Advocate-General's Office. Here is a paragraph of the bill which, after you have added the average expenses which are incurred for the employment of lawyers to carry on the business of this department in important cases, makes an annual outlay of something like $60,000. We have an army of perhaps twenty thousand soldiers, and it costs us $60,000 annually to pay for the reviewing officers who review the judgments of courts-martial.

I undertake to say, sir, that I can point to a half-dozen records in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department where, by the advice of the Judge-Advocate-General and by the solemn judgment of the courts-martial acting under that advice, every principle of legal protection guaranteed to us by the Constitution, every principle which is taught in the books as pertaining to the great law of evidence has been overruled and trodden under foot. I can show you a record there where a judge-advocate of high rank solemnly declared to a court-martial that it was perfectly competent to prove the price at which commodities had been sold in the city of New York on given days by producing the telegrams of people who said that they had had the report by telephone from the fellow who said that he had contracted to sell the property.

The same officer said that it was perfectly competent to explain by parol evidence a written contract and to vary its terms and modify them materially. And the way he came to find that out was this: He said that in the circuit court in New York he was allowed to prove by parol evidence that a deed, absolute upon its face, was in fact only a mortgage, and he cited that as an authority to show that he had a right to vary the terms of a written contract by oral evidence!

Mr. STEELE. What officer was that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is hardly worth while to be personal. There are so many of these records that I can put my hand upon a hundred of them such as I have described inside of twenty-four hours in which the most absurd rulings appear.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Under what administration were the men appointed who committed those violations of law?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It makes no sort of difference under what administration they were appointed. I condemn the system under which this Bureau of Military Justice has been organized and the whole system by which military law is administered; I condemn the system which permits the organization of the courts, by which the Secretary of War (not the one now in office) can pack a court to execute his personal vengeance; and I condemn a system of law which permits the President of the United States to send back to a court-martial twice over their finding and judgment and to demand that they shall set aside their finding and make another one to conform to his ideas of proper punishment. I do not care who does it, it is an outrage. I care not when it was done, it was an invasion of liberty in this country, and I condemn it. I care not who invented it, the system is pernicious and outrageous. I care not who was the author of it, I am opposing it, and I would oppose it as quickly as I would oppose the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus; I would oppose it as zealously as I would oppose any other invasion of the rights of man in this country under the forms of law.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, we have all heard the expression, "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity." I do not know but that this expression is applicable to one episode in the history of the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, and I therefore concur very much with what has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and as something has been said here about the origin of this department, and as I have examined the matter, I want to add a word about that.

By act of March 2, 1849, Thirtieth Congress, volume 9, page 351, section 4, it was provided:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a suitable person as judge-advocate for the Army, to be taken from the captains in the Army, who shall have the brevet rank, pay, and emoluments of a major of cavalry.

Capt. John F. Lee, a most excellent officer, was that day appointed, and while still creditably performing the duties of the position the law of July 17, 1862, was enacted. This law will be found in volume 12, page 598, Statutes at Large, Thirty-seventh Congress, second session, and is in these words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a judge-advocate-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel of cavalry, to whose office shall be returned for revision the record and proceedings of all the courts-martial and military commissions, and where a record shall be kept of all proceedings had thereupon. And no sentence of death or imprisonment in the penitentiary shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by the President.

Gentlemen will all recollect that in the summer of 1862 there were, as a gentleman has said upon this floor, a million of men under arms. We all remember that at that time there was a great political quarrel between McClellan on the one side and influential officials connected with the Republican administration on the other side, and means had to be devised to strike down McClellan. During that summer, while troubles were brewing in the Army in front of Washington, a law was enacted providing for the appointment of a Judge-Advocate-General. The idea was to appoint Joseph Holt to be Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, not, as history tells us, for the purpose of administering justice, but in order to use the intricacies of the law to strike down McClellan; and after the disasters of August, 1862, in the month of September, Joseph Holt was appointed. His first official act was to attempt to strike at McClellan and Fitz-John Porter, and the only apparent reason why they did not strike McClellan was that the exigencies of the service demanded that he should be placed in command of the Army. Being reinstated in command, he won the battle of Antietam, which placed him so high in the estimation of the people that they dared not strike at the head, and therefore they struck at the man next to the head.

Now, I fully concur with much that the gentleman from Ohio has said about courts-martial; but I insist it is necessary for us to have a Judge-Advocate-General's Department in order that we may have uniformity in the system of our military courts.

Mr. STEELE. One question; would the gentleman like to extend his remarks on Fitz-John Porter? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I do not believe I will this time; we have said enough on that.

The President of the United States in his first message to Congress used this expression with regard to courts-martial:

If some of the proceedings of courts-martial which I have had occasion to examine present the ideas of justice which generally prevail in these tribunals I am satisfied they should be much reformed if the honor and honesty of the Army and Navy are by their instrumentality to be vindicated and protected.

Now, I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that all the inefficiency, all the evils and wrongs of which they complain, arose under Republican administration; and now, as ten million of people have seen fit to intrust the power of this Government to the Democratic party they will see that these abuses are remedied. Mr. Cleveland, our President, took the first opportunity to express his views on this subject; and I think we can depend upon his rectifying these and all other abuses. Therefore I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the amendment, but will trust to the Democratic party to rectify, as they well can, every wrong which has been brought upon this Government during the twenty-five years of Republican administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I have not offered my amendment with a view of precipitating a political debate. If the Democratic party desires upon every question of appropriation of money to discuss any of the blunders the Republican party has made, I am willing. The greatest blunder the Democratic party has made during the last twenty-five years was to keep on living—to go about the country cheating the political undertaker out of his just dues for their burial. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to engage in any political discussion. I suppose the gentleman from Alabama will do me the justice to believe that I have not made this motion for any other purpose than to express honestly my views on this important question. I am in favor of remitting the questions of law which now go to the Judge-Advocate-General's Department in all important cases to some other branch of the Government, where one of the conditions precedent to eminence as an officer shall be some knowledge of the elementary principles of law. There has been no great controversy before a court-martial in this country for years past in which the Government did not employ outside counsel; and this has been done in violation of law, or rather without any justification in law.

Away back in 1814, when Mr. Monroe was President and Martin Van Buren was a leading lawyer in the State of New York, the Secretary of War detailed Mr. Van Buren to go up to Troy and assist as a Government attorney in the prosecution of the case of The United States vs. General Wilkinson. That court-martial sent back to the Secretary of War a statement that there was no law authorizing the appearance of Mr. Van Buren, and it would not and did not permit him to appear. From that day to this there has been no change in the statute; and Judge Holt, at the time of the Surratt case in this city, decided that there was no law which authorized the employment of outside counsel; hence it was that Judge Bingham, of Ohio, was compelled to take a commission in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department before the military court would permit his appearance. But now we have reached a point when all the great controversies before courts-martial are tried by outside lawyers. Last year $3,000 was paid in one case in this city to a lawyer. I did not begrudge him his money; he earned it; he was a most capable lawyer, and conducted the case in a most lawyerlike manner; conducted it as well as he could do in view of the surroundings by which he was environed all the way through the progress of the case.

But I insist that these reviews which go to questions affecting men's property, men's honor, men's liberty, ought to be made by some branch of the Government other than the Army. The small courts-martial which are held at the different posts—the garrison courts-martial—may well enough be run by judge-advocates detailed from the line for that purpose; and then let the other records, records involving important questions of law, go for review to some officer of the Attorney-General's Department or some other officer of this Government, who is clear of the traditions of the court-martial, clear of the traditions of the regular Army, clear of all the controversies, jealousies, and ambitions which inhere in the organization of the Army, men who will base their judgment upon the principles of law which we hold dear in this country.

I say this Judge-Advocate-General's Department is an excrescence upon the Army. It is totally unnecessary, and ought not to be continued. It costs $60,000 a year, and adds to the Army nothing of grace, nothing of justice, nothing of martial efficiency, but in all respects the reverse. Therefore I have made the motion to strike out this paragraph; and I venture to say that if this paragraph were to be stricken out to-day, never to be revived, there would be, one year from now, no one who would remember it except to point to it as a monument of the greatest error we have ever committed in the organization of the Army.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] did not think—I hope I was not so unfortunate in my remarks as to convey any such intimation—that I designed any personal reflection in regard to the gentleman's motives.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no!

Mr. WHEELER. I did not intend anything of that kind.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, one suggestion which might be made in connection with this matter has not been made. Under a sentence passed by a court-martial the chief of this corps is entirely incapacitated from serving in the corps; and the duration of his incapacity under the sentence passes beyond the period when he will be retired under the law. So we have at the head of a department a man who is entirely incapable of serving in that department.

Mr. BRAGG. His incapacity commenced at an earlier day than trial by court-martial.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am speaking of his incapacity as the result of the judgment of a court. I do not know this question ought to be disposed of by the insulting and sneering methods of the chairman of this committee. The fact he sees something in his disordered imagination that assimilates the gentleman who made that motion to a boiling pot ought not in my judgment to dispose of this question. The fact the gentleman indulged himself in that way perhaps he is not to be censured for. There seems to be a vein of ill-natured manifestation resulting from everything the gentleman does that would indicate the difficulty with him is congenital, and therefore he ought not to be censured for it. But when he ventures on the domain of the blackguard, if he does, he ought to be forgiven by all of those who feel a sympathy for others who are not amenable to criticism or to harsh judgment because of the unfortunate manifestations of Providence toward him. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, in regard to my friend from Alabama.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, which announced that that body had disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. VANCE as managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced the passage of the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of entry at Lewes, Del.; in which concurrence was requested.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HEPBURN. My friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is undoubtedly correct in his history of the formation of this department so far as the date is concerned. It was created in 1862, I believe. But when he goes further than that, trusting to his memory, he is liable to fall into egregious error; and on this occasion I am sorry he did go to the length he did. It seems to me the gentleman hardly considered the weight of the words he indulged in. He took upon himself, unwittingly, perhaps, the rôle of slanderer when he made the charge he did upon Abraham Lincoln, who appointed Judge Holt to the office he held. Judge Holt was not appointed to that high office for any purpose that was inimical to justice and to right-dealing. When he was appointed there was no such condition existing as the gentleman imagined existed later.

There was no purpose of assaulting General McClellan, or any other general of the Army, let me tell him. If he had not been engaged just where he was at that time, if there had not been difficulty of communication from where he was to the men who were well informed on the subject, he would have known better than to have made the charge he did. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It ill becomes that gentleman, it ill becomes any man situated as he was in those days, to assume, in my humble judgment, the rôle of slanderer of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. BRAGG. I regret exceedingly the economist from Iowa should be a little economical in his knowledge of history. If I recollect rightly, Lieutenant-Colonel Lee was judge-advocate until about the 4th of September, 1862, and the change in the head of that department was not made until after General Pope made his report here and sought to prefer charges against the Army of the Potomac. Then the decks were cleared for action, and the hangman was selected.

It is not a slur upon Mr. Lincoln, but as I had occasion to state substantially once before in this House, the gentlemen who are fearful to have the drapery of the garment drawn aside for fear of showing the leprosy, political and moral, which exists, always dodge behind Mr. Lincoln's great coat. [Laughter.] It was Mr. Stanton and not Mr. Lincoln of whom it was said by Mr. Lincoln he had but little influence with his administration. [Laughter.]

Now, as to the personal allusion to myself, all I have to say to him is this: It took him so long to get into action, out of compassion for him just now I will not stir him up any more, for I want him to have time to get ready. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. I move to strike out the last word. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] should see fit to make the personal allusions that he did to myself. I want to say to him and to this House that in all matters of legislation I never have been in the habit of looking behind, but I only look before, and every act of mine is prompted by the purpose of adding my feeble efforts to contribute to the greatness and grandeur, to the weight and power, of this the greatest country that ever did or ever can exist, except in its own future possibilities.

Mr. HEPBURN. When did you begin?

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to say that if the gentleman will examine every word that I have ever uttered he can not find that I used a word or even a syllable against the President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, to whom he alluded. It has become my duty in this House during two Congresses to defend Abraham Lincoln and General Grant against the assaults made upon them by Republicans in their efforts to crush down and destroy one of the bravest men that ever led armies to victory. It has become my duty and my pleasure to stand here and defend that great general, Ulysses S. Grant, from charges brought against him on this floor; from charges impugning his motives, impugning his integrity, impugning his capacity, impugning his ability as a soldier, and impugning him in his duties to this great Republic.

It has become my duty to investigate reports, to investigate facts, and to investigate history to hurl back charges and insinuations against General and ex-President Ulysses S. Grant, and no gentleman can point to one word ever uttered by me reflecting upon him or upon his ability as a general or a statesman. That has been reserved to gentlemen in this and the last Congress on the other side of the House, who have, when it suited their purposes, been found among his detractors.

But another word and I have done. The gentleman spoke of the time of the appointment of Judge Holt. He was appointed in September, and the first act of his official life was to proceed to do what has been stated. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] for the suggestion that the statements refer to the conspirator Edwin M. Stanton [hisses on the Republican side], who sought to conspire to drag down officers of the Army who did not conform to his views or sustain the line of policy that he had inaugurated.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this "arch conspirator" the gentleman names was a man who was at the head of the Federal armies. He was the man who directed, as no other living man could, all of the maneuvers and operations of the Federal Army. He is the man that brought your banner down into the dust, that destroyed your "lost cause"——

Mr. WHEELER (from his seat). No, it was Grant.

Mr. HEPBURN. That whipped you back into your allegiance to the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] He was the man who made it possible for you to be here in this exalted place to be his maligner and slanderer. [Applause on the Republican side.] He is dead now and can not answer you, but notwithstanding you try to blacken his memory, although you live to-day because that man was willing, among others, that you might live and not have the halter around your neck that you had won. [Applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened here more than once to aspersions upon the character as well as charges against the motives and services of Edwin M. Stanton. He was our able War Secretary; he organized victory. Under his advice and administration, even admitting he committed some errors, the Union triumphed over the rebellion. [Applause.]

Now, these small men [laughter], as was said by the gentleman from Iowa, some of whom are here by grace alone, avail themselves of the opportunity to slander his memory. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, Ohio has given many able men to the public service of this country, but none braver, none more true, none who did more for the Union than our great War Secretary, Edwin M. Stanton, who came to us from within its borders. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have dragged into this discussion the Fitz-John Porter case. I remember it was discussed while the war was in progress, and I do not forget there was nowhere a man who sympathized with the rebellion who did not sustain Fitz-John Porter and applaud McClellan and denounce Stanton, and thus sought to paralyze the energies of the Union forces. I care not, for one, if Porter would have been technically acquitted by a civil court.

We believed—I believe it now—the people everywhere in the North believed there was a powerful conspiracy to compel arbitrament of the issue between the North and South by other means than the sword.

As Edwin M. Stanton had the power and the vigor to defeat the cabal of conspirators that was seeking to bring about a peaceful solution by inactivity, I am willing for one again and here to indorse what he did. The country approved him then and has continued to approve. I am ready to discuss this Army bill upon its merits, but I am not willing to be silent when it is made the occasion to defame one of the ablest, one of the purest, one of the most patriotic men ever given to the service of his country; to hear him unjustly assailed and his memory maligned, either by those who were in arms against him and his country at that time or by those who belonged to the party that is to-day in political fellowship with them.

It is not for me to write Secretary Stanton's biography. You gentlemen may not do him justice. Those who felt his iron hand and knew his strong will may be reluctant to do him justice. Those who were not in sympathy with him, who met in convention to adopt resolutions that the prosecution of the war was a failure, those whose places were south of the line drawn between the two armies—they may assail him here, and question his motives and acts; they may indulge in these little denunciations against him; but I deem it now and shall hereafter a great pleasure to honor his memory. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire, before the vote is taken on this proposition, to ask the chairman of the committee whether, if the motion to strike out shall be adopted, it abolishes any of the system that has been spoken of so severely?

Mr. BRAGG. Not at all.

Mr. HAMMOND. I think we are ready to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the clause which the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk again read the pending amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 93.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. WHEELER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 92.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The clerk read the following paragraph:

For mileage to officers, when authorized by law, $130,000: Provided, That in disbursing this allowance the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order against the proviso contained in this clause:

Provided, That in disbursing this allowance the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare.

I desire to call attention to section 1273 of the Revised Statutes. I will read the statute in support of my position. I am encouraged to make the point of order at this time for the reason that, notwithstanding the Chair a few days ago overruled the decision of the Supreme Court and our own rules—and the proposition was so flagrant a breach of the rules that the gentleman in charge of the bill himself by an amendment afterward struck it out—I have now a distinct and square statute on this subject, which must be existing law even in the opinion of the chairman of this committee.

I read section 1273 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

SEC. 1273. When an officer travels under orders, and is not furnished transportation by the Quartermaster's Department, or on a conveyance belonging to or chartered by the United States, he shall be allowed 10 cents a mile, and no more, for each mile actually traveled under such order, distances to be calculated according to the nearest post-routes; and no payment shall be made to any officer except by a paymaster of the Army.

That fixes it at 10 cents. Now the Army appropriation bill of 1877, passed July 24, 1876, provides that the rate shall be 8 cents per mile. That law changed it from 10 to 8 cents.

Now I make the assertion, and it is a correct one, if I am not mistaken, that that is the last provision of law governing the mileage for the distance that officers travel. That distinctly states it is 8 cents. That stands bound in this book as existing law; and yet this provision of the bill reads that the sum allowed shall be 4 cents per mile instead of 8, and adds thereto the additional cost of transportation under certain circumstances.

Now, that is not only objectionable as being squarely in contravention of an express statute, but it increases expenditure, I think; that, however, is a matter of computation, and I may be mistaken. But I make the point without arguing it further that that provision is squarely in contravention of this section of the Revised Statutes, which stands as the law of the land.

I raise the point of order also on subdivision 3 of Rule XXI. The last clause of that rule provides:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

I think that is plain enough. If it is not, I will be ready to tear up my copy of the rules and bury the statute, for I do think that an express statute constituting existing law which stands there unrepealed ought to guide us; and I venture the suggestion that outside the Military Committee there is not a committee of this House that would have the audacity, in view of the existing facts, to place a provision of law in an appropriation bill and then ask us, because it comes from that high and mighty committee—"my" committee, as the gentleman from Wisconsin called it a few moments ago—and has the stamp of authority on it of the Committee on Military Affairs, that therefore we must accept it. I ask the Committee of the Whole to take together that law, that rule, and that provision in this bill, and then let them sustain or overrule my objection as they will.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, my answer to the point of order is that the paragraph does not change existing law. The difference between this clause and a clause changing existing law is easily illustrated. I will read from a previous Army appropriation bill a clause which did change existing law:

Provided, That hereafter any paymaster of the rank of major, who has served twenty years, may upon his own application be placed upon the retired-list.

To change existing law the provision must either repeal a law or be an affirmative enactment. The difference between such a provision and this proviso may be stated in a few words. This is a limitation upon the use of the money appropriated by this bill without affecting any existing law whatever. The hand that gives directs how the gift shall be used. This proviso was inserted for the purpose of sustaining the Paymaster-General in his distribution of the fund for the payment of mileage, and to carry out his wishes in that regard. He made the request specially of the committee, and we prepared that section, and he himself prepared the proviso limiting the use of the money.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on this point of order. A few paragraphs back the gentleman from Wisconsin was fast and furious to appropriate according to existing law.

Mr. PRICE. What gentleman from Wisconsin? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. PRICE. That will do.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman admits that there is a law fixing the mileage of these officers, and he seeks to amend it. I do not care to say anything now about the merits of that amendment. I doubt very much whether it would be a wise one, even if it were in order, and I doubt also whether it is an economical amendment; but I will not discuss that question now. The gentleman says that because the words "Provided, that hereafter," &c., are not in there the proviso does not amount to legislation which changes existing law, but is a mere limitation upon the expenditure of the money hereby appropriated. If it be true that these rules of ours, positive in their terms, can be frittered away by merely juggling with words, then I suppose the point of order is not well taken. Given, however, a positive statute upon any subject, and Rule XXI as it exists, I undertake to say, that a provision of this kind does change existing law, at least by construction if not in words, and if the gentleman can avoid the force of the rule and the force of the statute by such a provision as this in an appropriation bill, why then the rule amounts to nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to decide the point of order raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. One word further, Mr. Chairman. I did not know but my positions were wrongly taken and my authorities good for nothing, so I waited to hear something which would break the force of the rule and of the statute which I have read and which I say should control the action of this House. I want to call the attention now of gentlemen who failed to hear what I said a while ago to the fact that the whole defense made for this indefensible action is based upon two statements: First, that there was a similar provision to this in a bill of last year, and that, it having passed there without the point of order being raised upon it, we may with propriety pass a similar provision now; and second, that some one (I did not catch the name) advised the committee to put this provision in this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask again, can we permit the Committee on Military Affairs to override the rules adopted for the government of this House merely because some gentleman, I do not know who, has recommended that this provision shall go into this bill? Or will you justify yourselves by keeping that proposition in the bill because, forsooth, a similar one was in an appropriation bill one year ago? I am perfectly willing to concede that if the point of order were not raised against this provision and it were passed as a portion of this bill, it would then be a law to govern us, but the point of order being raised at this stage, there is but one thing to do, and that is to expunge it from the bill as an attempt on the part of this committee to exercise authority not delegated to them, to legislate about a matter over which they have no control, and not binding upon this House even as a recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the paragraph on which the point of order is made.

Provided, That in disbursing this allowance the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin on the left [Mr. PRICE], makes a point of order against this proviso that it changes existing law and, therefore, is not in order upon an appropriation bill. A similar point of order was made upon another provision on Saturday last when this bill was under consideration. The provision against which the point of order was then made was declared to be in contravention of the Army regulations and therefore in contravention of existing law. This proviso is said to be in conflict with a provision in a statute which allows a greater amount per mile than is here fixed. It will be observed that the proviso against which the point of order has been made states that in disbursing this allowance—the allowance appropriated in this paragraph—there shall be paid the rates specified. That does not change the existing law. It only directs the manner in which this appropriation shall be expended and the objects to which this money shall be applied. The law stands as it was before, but this appropriation is directed to be expended in a particular way for a particular purpose. The Chair does not understand that the House is obliged to appropriate the sum which the law has fixed as the full salary for any public officer. If it were so obliged the discretion of Congress would be in great measure taken away.

But Congress may in its discretion appropriate for a particular service a less amount than the law designates, or it may fail to make any appropriation whatever. The House is now engaged in making appropriations of money for a particular purpose, and in doing so it may determine to appropriate less than the law prescribes for the full payment of this service. The law is not changed thereby; Congress merely fails to make full appropriation for the service. For these reasons——

Mr. PRICE. Before the Chair gives his decision will he allow me to call attention to two facts which appear in this controversy? First, the existing law provides that the person required to travel under a military order shall be compensated at the rate of 8 cents per mile and shall receive no allowance for transportation. This bill provides that he shall receive compensation at the rate of 4 cents per mile, and such transportation as may occur under different contingencies. Now, is not this a new provision of law fixing the compensation for a person who is required to travel under a military order? And can we under our rules adopt such a provision upon an appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If the provision to which the gentleman refers made a permanent appropriation for compensation the gentleman's point would be well taken; but it is not a permanent appropriation. Though existing law may provide 8 cents a mile as the compensation for a person traveling under these circumstances, he can not receive a cent of money for such service unless Congress makes the appropriation.

Mr. PRICE. But this provision of the bill allows transportation and the existing law does not. Is not this then a new provision of law?

The CHAIRMAN. The officer would not be entitled to take any money out of the Treasury on account of the existing law unless there were an appropriation. The House is now making appropriations for this service, and Congress may, if it sees fit, appropriate a less sum than the existing law provides for.

Mr. PRICE. But we are undertaking to say by this bill that the person shall be furnished with transportation.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a point of order. I understand the Chair to have decided this question, and I submit that we should proceed with the bill unless an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to say that for the reasons stated the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the Chair will allow me a single moment. I think the Chair does not understand the point of the gentleman from Wisconsin. If the Chair will examine the bill he will find in the paragraph now under discussion these words, "and in addition thereto the cost of transportation actually paid." Now, in the general law there is not one word about "the cost of transportation actually paid," but there is the allowance of a lump sum of 8 cents a mile. This bill proposes to allow a lump sum not exceeding 4 cents a mile "and in addition thereto the cost of transportation actually paid." How can the Chair tell how much more than 8 cents a mile this bill may allow? I apprehend the actual allowance in many instances under this bill would be 10 cents or 12 cents a mile. So that the effect of this so-called "limitation" is to change the law and authorize a greater compensation than that fixed by existing law, which in no case can exceed 8 cents a mile. That is the point, as I understand.

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question of order.

Mr. PRICE. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he does not recognize the difference between limiting the expenditure of a particular sum of money and making a general provision for expenditure which shall become a permanent law? A limitation in an appropriation bill does not make any positive continuing enactment, but dies with the disbursement of the funds appropriated in that bill——

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. But a positive affirmative provision of law becomes embodied in the statutes, and stands as a continuing law on the subject for the future.

Mr. CANNON. I hope I may be allowed to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. STEELE. I make a point of order. The Chair has decided this question.

Mr. PRICE. And I have appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. I think I am entitled to answer the point of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin to be that the clause in this bill is a limitation upon the expenditure of this money. I tried to make my position plain when I maintained that it is such a limitation as will make this mileage for the coming year more than the existing law authorizes, namely, 8 cents a mile. That is the point.

The CHAIRMAN. With reference to the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair is of opinion that this Committee of the Whole might provide for extraordinary expenses of the Army not provided for under any general law, and that therefore, even if this clause is new legislation, the House under the rules has the right, as this is one of the established departments of the Government, to provide for the expenditure. For these reasons the Chair has overruled the point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin appeals from the decision. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 46.

The CHAIRMAN. So the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. I move the following amendment:

Strike out the following words:

"In addition thereto the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare."

Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I will not claim it longer than one minute. The present law gives 8 cents a mile when an officer is traveling under orders and by the shortest route. This change in the law, or limitation, or whatever you may choose to call it, for the coming year gives officers traveling under orders 4 cents a mile and in addition thereto the cost of transportation actually paid. Now, I undertake to say the average cost of travel in this country does not exceed 4 cents a mile, including subsistence. Yet in the name of economy I see they have decreased the appropriation upon the estimates some $30,000. Now they come in and seek to enlarge the existing law. For what? The cost of transportation actually paid is to be added to the 4 cents a mile. No man can tell until the accounts are rendered just how much will be required to be paid out of the Treasury.

I appeal to my friend from Wisconsin, so long as this limitation is to be placed on officers while traveling under orders, we ought to stop with the allowance of 4 cents a mile and not add the cost of transportation actually paid. Take the case of an officer ordered from San Francisco to New York, 3,000 miles at 4 cents a mile would be $120 in the pocket of the officer after he gets to New York in addition to the actual cost of transportation.

I want to be fair with the Army. It serves its purpose in the Government and ought to be fairly and liberally dealt with; but while we are seeking to make reform, in my judgment we should only provide for the actual expenses of travel, and there stop.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I had intended, Mr. Chairman, to offer an amendment to strike out all after "provided," in line 164, and to insert "only actual expenses of transportation shall be paid," which is precisely the reverse of the amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois, who proposes to strike out the cost of transportation actually paid exclusive of sleeping and parlor car fare, and to leave the allowance of 4 cents a mile.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the limitation should be "not exceeding 4 cents a mile."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Four cents a mile is not enough in some parts of America. I speak with some little knowledge of this matter, because some who are near to me have been engaged in that part of the Army and required to travel on both sides of the continent. Four cents a mile is ordinarily paid in the populous States, but I have known as high as 30 and 40 cents a mile paid for actual transportation of an officer in the Inspector-General's Department through the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado, California, Washington Territory, and other places where there are posts which have to be inspected. Therefore, 4 cents a mile would be but a small proportion of what is actually paid by officers on inspecting tours.

If we have in the public service those whose integrity and honor can be safely trusted, upon whose fidelity to duty we may safely rely, they are officers of the regular Army. It occurs to me the best course for us to pursue is to allow for the actual expenses of transportation when officers are traveling under orders. That is the object of my amendment.

Undoubtedly it does allow some latitude, but as I said before, in my judgment we can safely trust in these small matters the officers of the regular Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not add "over the shortest traveled routes?"

Mr. OATES. The word "necessary" covers that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My idea was, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, that the word "necessary" covers it. But I accept the modification.

Mr. BRAGG. The law as provided in the bill as first reported from the committee was the result of careful computation and estimates made by the Paymaster-General, in which he arrived at this clause as being a proper amount to equalize expenditures between travel on this side of the Rocky Mountains and on the other side of it, and was enacted to guard against precisely the objection that the gentleman from Kentucky has urged as the reason for his amendment.

It is, however, a matter of entire indifference to me, although I think the amendment will increase the expenditures.

Mr. HAMMOND. It will reduce it enormously, in my opinion.

Mr. BRAGG. I think not. The reason the Paymaster-General called our attention to the fact was this, let me state: That there are certain gentlemen in the Army who like very much to ride upon railway passes. Of course there is a very small number, and perhaps the number is still smaller who are able always to procure them. But the records of the Department show that in several months of the year certain officers are so situated that they must unquestionably travel on passes though they draw more for mileage than the full salary, longevity pay included.

To guard against that the proviso was enacted. For instance, let me suggest a case.

Mr. HAMMOND. Before the gentleman leaves this point will he permit a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. The proviso would allow, as you put it, only 4 cents per mile?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky would allow the officer traveling upon a free pass to draw nothing.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; but it does not prevent him from riding in a parlor car. It does not check him from stopping any length of time at expensive hotels, paying $5 a day, and using all the porters and servants about the establishment.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understand that this applies only to mileage, not their other expenses.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. The section itself is on the subject of mileage.

Mr. BRAGG. But the amendment does not so restrict it.

Mr. HAMMOND. It speaks of his expenses for "necessary travel."

Mr. BRAGG. But it does not limit it to mileage.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then it should be restricted to mileage, so as to limit that.

Mr. BRAGG. The amendment does not do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to amend by striking out the word "expenses" and inserting the word "mileage;" so that it will read "necessary mileage."

Mr. BRAGG. Then, if that be done, there is another part of it that must be made to conform.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think if the gentleman will look at the bill before him he will see that that is unnecessary. The bill reads "for mileage to officers when authorized by law," and sets apart a fund of $130,000 for the payment of this class of expenditures. Now, the proviso is to the effect that this mileage is not to be paid except in a certain manner, and the amendment relates to that payment. I think it is perfectly clear.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I propose to add the words at the end of line 169, or rather at the end of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, "not to exceed the amount now authorized by law."

The fact is, a change of the law is necessary. The chairman of the committee has so informed us. He has stated that west of the Rocky Mountains one rate prevails while east of it another rate prevails. The existing law, as I am informed, is uniformly 8 cents per mile. It is right that only the actual traveling expenses shall be paid. It is wrong to allow the existing law to be violated. It is right to inaugurate a change in the law, and that is my motive in proposing the amendment. It may operate with some degree of harshness in some parts of the country for a short time, but undoubtedly some change in the statute will be made which will rectify it; and hence I propose to add the words I have suggested.

Mr. HOLMAN. Should not the word "rate" be inserted instead of "amount?" I think it would be better.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have no objection to that, and will so modify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] to submit an amendment?

Mr. HAMMOND. I suggested an amendment to the gentleman from Kentucky for the purpose of confining his amendment to mileage, out of abundant caution; but on an examination I think it unnecessary and shall not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. Let the amendment be reported as it will stand if adopted, including the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "provided," in line 164, and insert in lieu thereof: "That necessary expenses actually paid shall only be allowed, to be computed over the shortest usually traveled route, not to exceed the rate now authorized by law."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is an incongruity there surely. As the amendment now stands mileage is intended to cover and is made to cover not only railroad fare but hotel expenses as well. That is the practice.

Now, the last part of this amendment limits it to a rate of 8 cents a mile, while the other part of the amendment relates to expenses which include both fare and hotel expenses. I think the provision as contained in this bill is better than the amendment as last read. The limitation then is the actual fare and 4 cents a mile allowance for other expenses, or not exceeding 4 cents a mile. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is adopted, then it leaves open an indefinite charge for hotel expenses. It has been found necessary in all departments to place some limit on these expenses.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. After the explanation of the chairman of the Military Committee, that this has been made a matter of estimate, and is supposed to be a fair mode of making this allowance, I beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not now withdraw his amendment, as an amendment to the amendment is pending.

Mr. PRICE. I offer as a substitute for the amendment what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "4 cents" and inserting "8 cents," in line 166; and strike out all after the word "routes," in line 167; so that it will read:

"Provided, That in disbursing this allowance the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 8 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes."

Mr. PRICE. I desire to state that if the amendment is adopted it will simply neutralize the provision in the bill which I have opposed, and leave the law for next year just where it was last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer that as a substitute. But he may offer it simply as an amendment, because it is in order to perfect what is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. PRICE. Very well.

Mr. SKINNER. I move that all after the word "dollars" be stricken out. I do that because I think none of the amendments that have been offered are any improvement on the existing law. That will leave the law precisely as it is to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin takes precedence of that.

Mr. PRICE. And covers that ground.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PRICE, there were—ayes 67, noes 75.

Mr. PRICE. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. PRICE, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes, 90.

Mr. PRICE. I do not insist further on the point as to a quorum.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] announced a desire to withdraw his amendment, and I understood the Chair to say that he could not, because an amendment had been offered to that amendment. I offered the amendment to the amendment, and am willing to withdraw it, so as to allow the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment to the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. And now, if there be no objection, the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following:
"But in no case shall the amount paid exceed 8 cents a mile."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is the existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to call the attention of the committee to two provisions of the Revised Statutes. Section 3623 provides:

All officers, agents, or other persons receiving public moneys shall render distinct accounts of the application thereof according to the appropriation under which the same may have been advanced to them.

And section 3678 reads:

The sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

The provision of this bill to which I take exception is as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund.

Now, this kind of legislation sought to be obtained under this clause might be good. I am not fighting the principle embodied in it. I only say, hitherto in our Indian Department, in this department, in the Agricultural Department, in every Department of the Government, we distinctly give so much money for such a division and so much for another division, and we distinctly require them to keep those sums separate; not to draw, for example, on the statistical division to pay for the publication of documents or vice versa; but each must be kept separate under the head for which it was appropriated. That is the rule which governs the disbursement of funds under this appropriation bill. But this appropriation bill provides that that rule shall be set aside and "the money hereinbefore appropriated" "shall be considered but one fund." I do not know but the Committee of the Whole will be prepared to do as in the other case and allow the Committee on Military Affairs to make laws. But, in the name of common sense, if you do so, wipe out the rule we have adopted.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems strange to me there are so many ghosts seen through the fog. The appropriation for the Army has always been kept under the account "the pay of the Army," between the paymasters and the Treasury. In all former bills it reads in this wise: "Pay Department: For pay of the Army;" and then the act recites the officers and purposes, and concludes, "in all, $12,500,000."

Now, instead of putting it at the head of the bill, we have put it in this case at the foot of the bill, and the use of the words "shall be considered but one fund," and of the words "accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army" (as it has always been) was to guard against the contingency that by some accident somebody in the Treasury with a crotchety mind might insist that it was the intention of Congress to change the rule from what it has heretofore been. Therefore we use the language of the previous bill, and go further and say, "but one fund;" so that it leaves it precisely as it has always been and always will be.

There never was such a thing as making a draft on the Treasury to pay brigadier-generals, major-generals, colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and captains. It is all drawn together, and the account is kept separately so far as the disbursement or payment of the money is concerned; but as between the Department and the Treasury it stands as "Pay of the Army. In accounting to the accounting officers the vouchers show in detail how the disbursements have been made. There is no change at all, and there is no difference between this bill and any other Army appropriation bill, except what I am about to state, which is not in this clause. In the draft of the bill which I submitted to the committee and which received their indorsement, I dissected the different component parts of the Army, to the end that the people might know what each cost. I have made the appropriation in the bill precisely as it was before—"for the pay of the Army," but I show in the bill how it is disbursed, and that disbursement is not fixed by the Pay Department, but by law.

Mr. PRICE. One word, Mr. Chairman. It will be observed that no better defense can be made of this violation of law than was made of the other violation passed upon a while ago. We are told that this has always been so, and that is the only justification offered except that the important announcement is made to us that it always will be so. Now I admit that all through this bill the appropriation is broken up, so much for a certain purpose, so much for another purpose, and so much for another. The gentleman correctly states the plan of the bill when he makes that statement. But, sir, it is because these different appropriations for different objects have always been kept separate (if they have been kept lawfully) that I oppose this proposition to say now that they shall be all considered as but one fund.

You remember, Mr. Chairman, and every gentleman here remembers that a short time ago the Commissioner of Agriculture, having used in some other division $1,800 which belonged to the laboratory fund, came to Congress and asked us to justify that expenditure. We did justify it by a bill, and the same thing might be done again; but that case shows the importance of applying each fund to its own particular purpose for which it was appropriated, for certainly if the point were not deemed very important this Congress would not have been asked to legalize that act of the Commissioner of Agriculture, an act which he recognized and we recognized as clearly in contravention of existing law.

Now this proposition in this bill says that all the money hereinbefore appropriated for all these different objects shall be considered as but one fund to pay everybody and anybody, and that is the objection that I make to this provision. I do not know that we had not better change our rules on this point; I do not know that we had not better say that a committee of this House shall have power to do certain things that we have said they shall not have power to do. But the fact remains that we have said they shall not do it and they have done it. I call upon this House, then, to respond to this point of order, and to say that this committee have done that which they could not legitimately do under the power conferred upon them by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The section of the statute which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] read is section 2678, and is the existing law upon that subject. It provides that all sums appropriated for the various branches of the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively appropriated, and to no other objects. If the object of the provision of the pending bill which has just been read by the Clerk and against which the point of order is made is to authorize any of the specific amounts provided in the several clauses of the bill to be used for other objects or purposes than those there designated, then it does change existing law and the point of order is well taken. The object of the provision is a question about which there may be some doubt. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] expresses the opinion that the effect of this provision of the bill would not be to authorize the diversion to other objects of any of the sums appropriated in the bill for particular purposes. It seems to the Chair, however, that the object of this clause is to provide that sums appropriated in the bill for one purpose if not used for that purpose may be used for another; and, with that view of its meaning, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the next paragraph on the bill, when

Mr. BRAGG said: I did not catch perfectly the decision of the Chair. Does the Chair hold that this appropriation is not to be considered as properly for pay of the Army?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair held that in so far as this clause authorized any specific amount heretofore stated in the bill to be used for another purpose than that mentioned in the bill it was a change of existing law, and therefore the point of order was sustained.

Mr. BRAGG. There is no such provision here.

The CHAIRMAN. That was just the question which the Chair asked.

Mr. BRAGG. There is no such provision.

Mr. PRICE. I call for the regular order. The paragraph has been ruled upon and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this provision of the bill to authorize accounting officers of the Treasury to use all the sums appropriated in the bill up to this point as pay of the Army, and if in so doing the appropriation in any clause is found to be in excess, the money may be used for another purpose. If that is not the purpose of the clause——

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, no, sir; that is not the purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it was. He would be glad to have the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] explain the provision.

Mr. PRICE. I call for the regular order. That paragraph has been ruled upon and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to have this matter thoroughly understood. The gentleman from Wisconsin states that the meaning which the Chair put upon the clause is not the proper construction.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If I did not misunderstand, the Chair has stricken out the clause—

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund.

Now, does the Chair mean to strike out that entire clause, or only to strike out the words "and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund?"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled the whole clause out of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understood the objection of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] to apply only to the latter portion of the paragraph—"and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the point of order to be made against the whole clause.

Mr. PRICE. That is it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest, then, that omitting these concluding words, the remainder of the clause might be reinstated on motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin. But if the clause should embrace these words, "and for that purpose shall be considered but one fund," it seems to me it would have to be construed as allowing the fund to be applied for any purpose connected with the pay of the Army.

Mr. BRAGG. I am not particular about those concluding words. They were inserted only for the purpose of having it understood that we did not undertake to change the existing method of keeping the accounts.

Mr. HAMMOND. Of course, if the words mean what the gentleman from Indiana construes them to mean, the ruling of the Chair is right, and those words ought to go out. But the remainder of the paragraph ought to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the clause is somewhat obscure and is subject to two constructions. The Chair put upon it the construction which first occurred to him and the one which evidently was put upon it by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] who made the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I care nothing about those concluding words. I move to reinstate the paragraph in this form:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated shall be disbursed and accounted for by the Pay Department as pay of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is put on this motion I wish to make an inquiry on a single point of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] who has charge of this bill. The appropriations for the pay of the Army for the current fiscal year are $12,205,000. If my calculations are correct, the appropriations embraced in this bill for the pay of the Army are $12,466,358.26, which would show an excess of $261,358.46 in the appropriations made by this bill for the pay of the Army over those made in the law for the current fiscal year; and inasmuch as one change has been made in this bill involving an increase of $76,340, the aggregate excess of the appropriations in this bill for the pay of the Army over the appropriations for the same object for the present year would be $337,698. If my computations are correct, I do not understand how this excess could occur—how there could be so large an increase of appropriation in this bill for the pay of the Army for the coming year over the appropriations for the present year.

Mr. BRAGG. I will endeavor to explain——

Mr. HOLMAN. Before my friend answers that point I wish to call his attention to another fact (because the occasion may not arise for me to refer to this matter again), that the reductions contemplated in this bill are not up to the expectations of those who have had occasion to consider these measures heretofore. I have never been familiar with the Army appropriation bill; so I speak of the opinions of others, not my own. The present bill does not provide any material reduction; yet there has been a steady reduction from year to year for a number of years, and it was supposed that the reduction could be continued.

In 1884 the appropriation for the support of the Army was $24,681,250. In 1885, $24,454,450, or a reduction of $240,000. In 1886, the present year, $24,014,052.50, a reduction on the preceding year of nearly half a million of dollars, while the reduction by this bill for the present year, as it stood as reported, was only $121,464.04, and as amended up to this time of $45,124.40.

And my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will discover, notwithstanding his mild remarks about the economical Appropriations Committee, that it was reducing appropriations for the Army at the rate of from $200,000 to $440,000 a year, while the bill he has prepared with great care and ability shows only a reduction of a little over $45,000.

I may have possibly made a mistake as to the increase of appropriations proposed in this bill for the Army proper; but if my figures are correct my friend will see that some explanation is necessary.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, having heard that statement from three different members of the Appropriations Committee I had declined to reply to it until the close of the bill. The bill for this purpose in the last Congress appropriated $24,434,052.50. The reduction which they speak of was not made by this House nor by the economical committee that usually takes care of the Treasury. The bill they reported, the bill they passed, was over a half a million more than the bill of the committee that was to open the door of the Treasury and shovel out the money of the people to everybody who came along. They are seeking to protect their reputation for economy by sheltering themselves under the skirt of the Senate, which forced them to come down.

The reason I stated at the foot of the bill the sum appropriated was to show to the House the hypocritical pretensions to economy this committee set forth when they sought to retain the power to control all the appropriation bills. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I concede the amount of money appropriated for the support of the Army is $200,000 more in the present bill than in the last bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Three hundred thousand dollars more.

Mr. BRAGG. Well, $300,000 more; and I will explain that. If you will go to your deficiency committee you will find a deficiency of $200,000 which has to be supplied. Why? Because you did not investigate and see what the Army pay was. You voted it in a lump. You did not have time to drive your knife into every part of the bill; and you made a blunder of $200,000 when you were preparing your bill in the pay of the Army [laughter and applause]; and I will tell you where the balance comes from. If you will turn to page 275 of the Book of Estimates you will find the net increase to the Army is $194,417.31, which more than makes up the difference. That is all I have to say on that subject. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of any hypocritical pretenses on the part of any committee of this House. I have never known of any committee making unfair pretenses, I think, and however complimentary the gentleman may be to individual members I do not think it is respectful to a committee of this House to speak of its hypocritical methods. Nor have I ever heard, up to this time, of any committee boasting of its achievements.

Mr. BRAGG. That was in reply to the Appropriations Committee wanting to know whether it was the purpose of the Military Committee to deceive the people by reporting such a bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I never heard of it before.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; on the floor yesterday, or the last time this bill was up for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have never heard of that committee making any display of its methods or desires to accomplish economical legislation on any occasion. I have never known it to parade itself in this House, nor have I ever known it to twit other committees with the manner of considering or introducing legislation into this House.

If I wanted to retaliate upon the subject of blundering, as referred to by my friend, I would simply call the attention of my friend to the fact that by this very bill there is an appropriation of $29,160 for the payment of enlisted men serving as general service clerks and messengers, one hundred and thirty-five in all, when at the very last moment the committee was informed that a mistake was made in that item of $76,340, which amount had to be added, making $105,500 in all instead of $29,160.

If there was any mistake in the Army appropriation bill for the last year it was simply a mistake in the Senate, as the gentleman is well aware, in the amount which had been amended.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; the Senate did not reduce your appropriation for pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. And resulted from the economical action of the Senate; and if, as the gentleman says, there is a deficiency even as large as he fixes it, this bill is still over $240,000 in excess of the bill for the current year.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, if the friends of this bill desire to correct the paragraph against which the point of order is made and strike out the words to which I have excepted, I have no objection to withdrawing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the Army appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRADY: Papers in the claim of Charles F. Livesay, Dinwiddie County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers in the claim of John W. Eppes, of Prince George County, Virginia—to the same committee.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR JOHN F. MILLER.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, I give notice that on the 27th of the present month I shall submit for the consideration of the Senate memorial resolutions in regard to the death of my late colleague, JOHN F. MILLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice will be entered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of captains and owners of steam-vessels on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1718 and House bill No. 6047, providing for a bridge across the Ohio River at Cairo, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lansing, Mich., praying for appropriate legislation for the protection of young girls in the District of Columbia and other localities within the jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of West Chester, Pa., praying for such enactments and appropriations as will enable the National Board of Health to take measures for the prevention of epidemics, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

He also presented memorials of Granges No. 291, No. 786, and No. 593, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of all agricultural raw materials; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Granges No. 593 and No. 291, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MAXEY. I present a petition of citizens of Cameron County, Texas, praying for the enactment of such laws and the making of such appropriations as will enable the National Board of Health to employ all the power and resources of the Government which can be lawfully exercised in the prevention of epidemics to which the country is now exposed, and to prosecute investigations, &c. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition signed by many citizens of African descent of the county of Riley, in the State of Kansas, praying for such legislation as will enable them to return to Liberia. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of N. Lehman & Brother and other firms and citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of a law providing for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STANFORD presented a memorial of wool-growers of California, remonstrating against the placing of wool on the free-list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4163) granting a pension to Dr. William H. Sheffield;
A bill (H. R. 4199) granting a pension to William B. Jacobs;
A bill (H. R. 3614) granting a pension to Charlotte Buck;
A bill (H. R. 4882) granting a pension to Washington T. Otey;
A bill (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Ferdinand Koehler;
A bill (H. R. 1818) granting a pension to H. L. Kyler;
A bill (H. R. 7074) granting a pension to William P. Carleton;
A bill (H. R. 2800) granting a pension to Mary Manes;
A bill (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins;
A bill (H. R. 6453) granting a pension to Martin J. Reynolds;
A bill (H. R. 6774) granting a pension to Bruno Schultz;
A bill (H. R. 6117) granting a pension to James D. Cotton; and
A bill (H. R. 1997) granting a pension to Nancy R. Brown.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 11) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Select Committee to Investigate the Condition of the Potomac River front of Washington, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMDEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2940) granting a pension to John T. Pennington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 381) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo., moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to; and he submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2415) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College, of Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1576) for the relief of Col. James C. Dunne, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1651) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make final adjustment of claims of certain foreign steamship companies arising from the illegal exaction of tonnage dues, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 33) for the relief of Alexander K. Shepard, to report it with an amendment. I submit the report of the majority of the committee, and also present the views of the minority [Mr. DOLPH], which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 306) for the relief of Alexander K. Shepard, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 363) granting a pension to Edward Ayers;
A bill (S. 483) to restore Sidney B. Tullar to the pension-roll;
A bill (S. 612) granting a pension to William Weightman;
A bill (S. 843) granting a pension to Elise Burki;
A bill (S. 857) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch;
A bill (S. 963) granting a pension to Harriet M. Rider;
A bill (S. 977) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barker;
A bill (S. 1152) granting a pension to Sarah E. Bassett;
A bill (S. 1290) granting a pension to David W. Hamilton;
A bill (S. 1438) granting a pension to Isom Wilkerson;
A bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler;
A bill (S. 1998) for the relief of John D. Ham;
A bill (S. 2134) granting a pension to Patrick A. Callanan;
A bill (S. 2185) for the relief of George Titus;
A bill (S. 2186) granting a pension to Louis Melcher;
A bill (S. 2188) granting a pension to Ann Smith;
A bill (S. 1065) granting a pension to Emeline J. Babson;
A bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.;
A bill (S. 2187) for the relief of Rebecca E. Haskin; and
A bill (S. 1020) authorizing the District of Columbia to convey the alley, 15 feet wide, running east and west between lots 6 and 7, in square 635, comprising an area of 3,480 square feet of land, to the owner of said lots.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2407) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2408) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2409) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2410) for the relief of W. H. Tibbits; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2411) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2412) to amend "An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2413) for the relief of R. R. Tinsley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2414) for the relief of Miss Eula E. Henry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BLAIR, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. HARRIS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Whereas the experience of the past has fully demonstrated the fact, viewed from whatever standpoint, that further Chinese immigration to the United States is undesirable, and that the best interests of this country, of modern civilization, of the Chinese themselves, the vindication and integrity of free labor, and its just protection from the degrading labor of Asiatic coolyism, the preservation of domestic peace, and the promotion of the general welfare, demand the absolute prohibition in the future of the coming of Chinese to the United States, excepting only duly commissioned diplomats and other Government officials, and their necessary body servants and attendants: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That it is the sense of the American Congress that it is advisable that negotiation should be entered into with the Chinese Government without delay by the proper executive officers of the United States Government with a view of securing such modification of the existing treaties with China as will either in terms absolutely prohibit, or authorize the United States to absolutely prohibit, in the future the coming of Chinese to any port or place within the United States, excepting only duly accredited diplomatic, consular, and other government officials, and their necessary body servants, and excepting further only those driven into or seeking any port or place of shelter within the United States by or on account of storm or shipwreck.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, yesterday, approved and signed the act (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on concurring in the second reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of section 4, after the words "passengers or," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the words "of the like class and quantity of;" so as to read:

That it shall unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of the like class and quantity of property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

Mr. CAMDEN. That is the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] gave notice that he would move to amend or to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment, which is the converse proposition.

Mr. CAMDEN. It is in order, after the notice given by the Senator from Kentucky, to move to amend the amendment, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order to move to amend it, or the question of agreeing to it will, as a matter of course, present the same question as the question of striking it out. It is in order to amend it, however.

Mr. CAMDEN. Would it be in order, if the clause is not stricken out, then to move to amend it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is now agreed to, it can not be amended, except by adding other words.

Mr. CAMDEN. But if it fails to be amended, then a vote could be taken on striking it out entirely?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Pending the question, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole? it is competent to amend the amendment, if the Senate chooses so to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Clearly.

Mr. CAMDEN. Under the notice given by the Senator from Kentucky I will move to strike out the word "quantity" and insert the word "quality."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. CAMDEN. The amendment as it stands now, confining it to the "like class and quantity of property," would place the section in a position in which it could not be carried out, and would entirely destroy the value of the provision. It would limit it to the exact quantity or would leave it liable to the interpretation that a shipper of one car-load of property might be charged more than a shipper of fifty or five hundred car-loads of property. In other words, it limits it to the same quantity of shipment. If a car-load of freight of the same kind contains a thousand pounds less than another car-load of the same kind it opens the question of discrimination between the two cars containing a different quantity. If one shipper ships one car-load and another shipper ships fifty car-loads it allows the large shipper to be discriminated in favor of against the shipper of only one car-load.

When the amendment was offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] I sat by the side of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and I thought that it would apply to the same class and quality. That would be a proper amendment, and to that amendment I should have no objection. When the Senator from Kentucky asked me what it was, I replied to him that it was for the same class or quality of goods. That would mean that the companies may charge, as provided by this section, the same rate for car-loads of cattle, for car-loads of grain, or for car-loads of the like quality of goods; and that would be a proper amendment.

The Senate will understand the question, no doubt. I move to strike out "quantity" and insert "quality."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what he understands by the word "quantity." Does it not have reference to transportation, for instance, by car-load as distinguished from transportation in single packages or parcels? I think that is the understanding in the several State statutes. For example, most railways, I think, charge less for a keg of nails in a car-load of nails transported from Wheeling to Chicago than they do for a single keg of nails mixed up with other freight. I suppose the amendment simply relates to car-load quantities as distinguished from smaller parcels which are taken from station to station.

Mr. HARRIS. It is certainly very clear, the Senator from Iowa will allow me to say, that if the amendment stands as it now is incorporated in the bill, the fourth section will not be operative wherever there is a difference in the quantity of goods shipped, however small that difference. If the Senator desires that it shall apply to the car-load unit, that idea had better be incorporated into the amendment; but I would prefer the adoption of the amendment suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, striking out the word "quantity" altogether and letting it apply to the same class, character, and quality of freight.

Mr. ALLISON. That is substantially the same thing.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Iowa will let me answer the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee I will state that these words are now in the statutes of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and a large number of other States, and have received judicial construction, and that construction has not been at all of the nature suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if his amendment remains in the bill and one man ships of grain, if you choose, a car-load of so many tons and another ships a car-load of one ton less, would the rule apply?

Mr. ALDRICH. It certainly would; that is, it would allow the car-loads to be carried at the same rate.

Mr. HARRIS. If one man shipped 100 car-loads and another 50 car-loads, would not his amendment exempt that shipment from the operations of this section?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it would.

Mr. HARRIS. Because they have not shipped the same quantity?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it would, and very properly. That was the intention of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; we understand the amendment alike, then. If they differ in quantity, the rule prescribed by the fourth section does not apply to the shipment. Therefore I want to strike out the word "quantity" and let it refer to "quality."

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the pending amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to be to insert the word "quality" in place of the word "quantity." I take it for granted that the Senators upon that side of the Chamber are desirous that some intelligent and sensible bill shall be passed on this subject. For one, I hope the Senate will not make the bill ridiculous by inserting the word "quality."

I should like the Senator from West Virginia or any other Senator to say what he means by the "quality" of the freight. Does he mean to say that coal worth $4 a ton is to be transported at a different rate from coal worth $5 a ton, or that coal which is to be used for domestic purposes is to be transported at a different rate from that which is to be used for manufacturing purposes, or that cotton cloth worth 4 cents a yard is to be charged a different rate from cotton cloth worth 8 cents a yard, or that pig-iron is to be charged a different rate according to the quality of the iron?

It seems to me that the amendment is perfectly absurd, with due respect to the Senator from West Virginia who offers it. I do not think that any railroad company ever has varied or ever could vary its rates for the transportation of freight on account of the quality of the goods transported. Every railroad company would be compelled to have an appraiser to determine the quality of the goods upon inspection before the rate could be fixed.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia to modify his amendment and move to strike out the words "and quantity" without inserting the word "quality." "Of the like class" is quite specific enough, without putting in the word "quality" at all.

Mr. CAMDEN. I accept that.

Mr. HARRIS. Hence I suggest to him to modify his amendment so as to move merely to strike out the words "and quantity."

Mr. CAMDEN. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. My object is to get at the same result aimed at by the Senator from Tennessee, and I think that his suggestion completely covers it.

In this connection I will say, however, in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island, that "quality" can not be construed to embrace the definition he gives to it. The word "quality" here would mean "the like kind and character." It does not refer to the degree of fineness or the difference between the quality of the goods, but it refers to the same classification of goods. That is the idea of my amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. The word "class" is already in the amendment.

Mr. CAMDEN. But "class" is not classification. Classification rates are divided into first, second, third, and fourth class rates. The quality is the classification of the rate; but the word "class" embraces the whole thing, and I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PLATT. The necessity of some amendment of this kind, I suppose, arises from the fact that there is fear that unless something of the nature of this amendment is put into this section it will prevent a railroad from charging for a small quantity of goods any more than for a large quantity of goods under the short-haul provision. For instance, if there was nothing of the kind suggested by the amendment in the bill, it is supposed by some Senators that a railroad company would have no right to charge any greater amount for one horse when shipped alone than was charged for one horse when shipped by the car-load a greater distance. I think it would be wrong to bind a railroad company to any such rule as that. It would not be right to allow a person who wanted to ship 10 bushels of grain for 900 miles to say, "I must have the same rate on those 10 bushels of grain when shipped alone that a large shipper has for 950 miles when the grain is shipped by the car-load or by many car-loads."

If the section is open to that construction, there ought to be some amendment here to relieve it from that construction, for Senators will see that that would not be right or just. It would not be right or just for the Senator from West Virginia to go to the depot at Parkersburg with a single horse and say, "I must have the same rate, or at least no higher rate, for this horse which is to occupy an entire car than for a horse when shipped in a car-load of horses from Chicago to New York.

If the section is open to that construction, it should have something in the nature of this amendment; but the difficulty, I apprehend, is in the language employed. It is the language of the Massachusetts statute, but Mr. Russell, the chairman of the Massachusetts railroad commission, says that "class" is an unfortunate word in that statute. "Class" is used certainly at times with a technical significance, meaning "classification." The railroad commissioners of Massachusetts have held, however, that "class" in the statute means "kind," but they admit that it is open to misconstruction. "Kind" is a very much better word than "class," in my judgment. Let me read from the testimony of Mr. Russell, chairman of the railroad commission of Massachusetts. He says:

> The law applies to freight of the same kind.

Mr. CAMDEN. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAMDEN. If the Senator prefers the word "kind" I have no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I would suggest to the Senator from Connecticut if he wants to change the word "class," that the technical railroad word is "classification." We all know that all railroads divide their freight into from one to five different classifications.

Mr. PLATT. That is just what I want to avoid.

Mr. MILLER. You can not run any railroad without classification.

Mr. PLATT. The classification throughout the country is not uniform. That is one of the difficulties of the railroad problem. The classification west of the Mississippi River is entirely different from the classification east of the Mississippi River; and if this word "class" or "classification" is in here and the word "class" means "classification," then you immediately get into trouble with freight which crosses the Mississippi River either east or west, because the classification is entirely different.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will permit me for a moment. There is not any possible doubt that this word "class" as used in the Massachusetts law means precisely "classification" as used by all railroads throughout the country. Furthermore this bill provides that the railroads are to report to the commissioners their rates and their classifications, and those rates and classifications of course will come under the cognizance of the commission, and through the operations of the commission the classifications of the different railroads of the country, or the through lines at least, will be made the same. That is one of the principal objects to be arrived at by having a commission, that the railroads on the long trunk lines shall be brought to have the same classification of goods. That is one of the objects to be arrived at by the passage of this bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think so. I want to answer the Senator from New York when he says that the word "class" in the Massachusetts statute is interpreted to mean "classification." I was reading from what Commissioner Russell said:

> The law applies to freight of the same kind. The word used in our statute is "class," but that word is a mistake. "Class" is a word used technically in railroad phraseology which does not mean "kind," but means a great deal more than that. In order to come under the short-haul law the goods must be of the same kind.

So that the Massachusetts commission interpreted the word "class" there not to mean class in its technical sense, in the sense of "classification," but to mean "kind," and I think it is easy to show that there should be a discrimination oftentimes between goods of the same class or classification. All the articles of the country are put into four or five classifications. In those classifications a great number of different articles are included in a single classification, and articles which ought not, I think, to be the subject of this short-haul law.

I do not know that I am correct, but for illustration I will suppose that feathers and cotton goods are in the same classification. I do not know whether they are or not, but it simply illustrates the point that I am making. If they were there should be a distinction; and whether that be true or not, goods which go into a single classification are so diverse in their nature and so diverse in their character that a short-haul law ought not to apply to classifications, in my judgment. As I said before, there is nothing in this bill, I think, which makes it imperative upon the railroads to have the same classification in all parts of the country. Now they have different classifications not only as between east and west of the Mississippi River, but as between other sections of the country.

I want to say one thing more. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] is a little mistaken in supposing that his language has gone further than the statute of Massachusetts. It is not the language of the short-haul law in the State of Connecticut. That language is this:

> No railroad corporation shall charge or receive for the transportation of freight to any station on its road a greater sum than is at the time charged or received for the transportation of the like kind and quantity of freight from the same original point of departure and under similar circumstances to a station at a greater distance on its road in the same direction.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the language he has read. There are the very identical words, so far as they apply to this limitation "of the kind and quantity of freight," of the Massachusetts statute and of the amendment I have offered. Not a word or a letter is changed.

Mr. PLATT. The Massachusetts statute says "class" instead of "kind," and does not embrace the words "under similar circumstances." That is the distinction between the two statutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be glad to cover that.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps because it is the law of the State of Connecticut I am partial to it, but it seems to me those words "under similar circumstances" are good words to be used in a short-haul law. I do not suggest anything with relation to this amendment; I merely wanted to make these explanations.

Mr. ALDRICH. When my attention was first drawn to this clause of the fourth section I supposed that these words had been left out of the bill, as the committee followed the language of the various State statutes almost entirely, by inadvertence or by an oversight; and when I called the attention of the various members of the committee to it they said that the words ought to be inserted. Without these words a railroad company would have been obliged to carry a ton of artificial flowers from Philadelphia to New York or vice versa for the same rate, or not a greater rate than they would carry a ton of coal from, say, some point on the Pennsylvania Railroad west of Philadelphia to New York. There was absolutely no discrimination or distinction between any class or kind of freight or any quality of freight. They would have been obliged to carry a half ton of coal for the same rate they carry 50,000 tons. I take it for granted that there is no member of the Senate who believes that a law of that kind would be reasonable or could be enforced. It would make a farce of the bill. I do not suppose it was intended to do that; but it certainly would do that.

Railroad companies are obliged, as the Senator from New York has well said—and this bill makes it imperative that they shall do so—to divide the various kinds of property they transport into classes. I use the language of the Massachusetts law because it has stood the test of the courts and it is a broader and a better word in my opinion than the word "kind." The word "class" means classification of course, and it means the classification which the railroad companies put upon their freight. I do not know what the word "kind" does mean. I have no special objection to the use of the word "kind;" but I believe it is a narrower word and would practically restrict the operations of this fourth section. With my manner of thinking I am perfectly willing that every limitation possible shall be put upon it.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to allow me to interrupt him a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator is correct to a certain extent. I agree with him that the word "class" would be construed the same as "kind;" coal is a class, grain is a class; and "quantity" would unquestionably include a car-load. That is one of the great troubles of the railroad problem to-day; 10,000 tons of grain or 10,000 tons of coal are charged at a less rate than 500 tons. What the Senator from Rhode Island desires is that there shall be some equality. I suggest to the Senator that he strike out the words "and quantity" and insert the word "car-load," making the car-load the unit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to the Senator from Maryland that that would be very unjust to a large class of shippers who never under any circumstances ship a car-load of freight. It would be extremely unjust to the poor people of the country and to the small dealers of the country. There are certainly a very large number of people in this country who never in the course of their lives or their business experience would ship a car-load of freight at any one time, and to say that they shall not have the benefit of this bill is, it seems to me, to put into the bill a discrimination against a large class of people and in favor of a very small class. We are thereby establishing a monopoly, which I understand the Senator from Maryland is anxious to avoid.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. It is unquestionably admitted on all sides that it costs a railroad company equally as much to transport 5 tons in a car as it does 20 tons. It is a great hardship on the common carrier to compel him to carry at the same rate per ton 5 tons as he does an entire car-load. The car-load is recognized by all the railroads and by all transporters to be the unit; and if we can make the rate per car-load for all shippers it will be satisfactory.

Mr. ALDRICH. What the Senator states in regard to a car-load being the unit is undoubtedly true with the trunk lines and in the heavy transactions of the West, but upon local roads in the East doing an interstate commerce business the car-load as a unit is an exception; very little freight is ever transported at the car-load rate. It is always so much by the pound or the ton, or some classification of that kind.

Now, in regard to the necessity of this provision, I have already stated that the bill without it is an absurdity, and the Legislatures of the various States have recognized that in their legislation. The Massachusetts law provides that carriers shall not charge or receive more "for the transportation of the like class and quantity of freight," using exactly the same words as I have used here. The Senator from Connecticut has read the language of the statute of his State, which is practically in the same terms. The statute of South Carolina provides that no greater charge shall be made for the transportation of goods of the same class and in like quantity. The statute of the State of Vermont provides for the transportation of the like class and quantity of freight, using the same identical words. Oregon, Ohio, Nevada, New Hampshire, Minnesota, Kansas, Iowa, Texas, Wisconsin, Missouri, and Colorado all have statutes in which these or similar words of like import are contained, and New York has the same provision by regulation of her commission.

It is this universality of legislation, this recognition on the part of the Legislatures of all the States who have undertaken to legislate by a commission on this question of the correctness and necessity of this principle, which led me to offer the amendment. If the Senate want to make this bill absolutely inoperative they will leave the section as it is, providing that railroad companies shall charge the same rate for 1 pound as for 10,000, and for carrying feathers as they do for carrying pig-iron or coal.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island referred to the statute of Massachusetts. Will the Senator state what construction has been given to that expression in other States?

Mr. ALDRICH. In the case of Pittsfield vs. The Boston and Albany Railroad Company—I have not the book here, but if the Senator will send to the Law Library I presume he can get it—the interpretation, as I understand, given to these words is the usual common interpretation which the words import, that "like" shall mean a similar quantity—not precisely the same, but a similar quantity. For instance, if one man was shipping 4 pounds of freight and another 5, that would be a like quantity; but if one man was shipping 50 pounds and another 50 tons, that would not be a like quantity. If we propose to equalize rates, as this section does propose, for carrying merchandise, the proposition must be applied to merchandise of similar quantity, of a similar class, and under similar circumstances, or else the bill will certainly be inoperative.

Mr. CAMDEN. I think we are all aiming to get at about the same thing. All that I desire in changing this amendment is to make it apply to like carriage. The Senator suggested an amendment a while ago that he was willing to accept, which I think was "of the like kind."

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to using the word "kind" instead of "class."

Mr. HARRIS, Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that I think he misconstrues the bill as it would stand if this amendment was agreed to. The railroad companies in fixing their tariff of rates will fix one rate for packages and a different rate for car-loads. All I desire is that the rule prescribed by the fourth section shall apply to the packages, to the car-loads, and to every shipment. The company having fixed its rates, the rates for packages is one thing. Very different rates may be fixed for shipments by the car-load, and by the greater or smaller number of car-loads; but when these rates are fixed, let the rule prescribed by the fourth section apply—that is, that no greater sum shall be charged in the aggregate for the short than the long haul over the same road and in the same direction.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would be perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned myself, to modify this amendment so that it should apply to the like kind of property under similar circumstances, leaving the word "quantity" out entirely.

Mr. CAMDEN. I think that covers the idea I want to get at, that it shall not be limited to a specific quantity. Will the Senator put the amendment in the form just suggested?

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator from West Virginia is going to consent to that sort of an amendment, he had better consent to take out the fourth section at once and be done with it, because when you undertake to say it shall only operate under absolutely like circumstances, those never happen in the shipment of any two articles.

Mr. PALMER. I would ask the Senator from Rhode Island who is to decide what are similar circumstances?

Mr. ALDRICH. The same tribunal that will decide on a violation of the section in any case, the commission in the beginning and the courts afterward. The Senator from Michigan knows as well as I who decides on all violations of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. PALMER. It gives a tremendous latitude to whoever has the determination.

Mr. ALDRICH. You propose in this very first section to give the commission a chance to fix it entirely.

Mr. CAMDEN. I would suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island to adopt this amendment "of the like class and kind of property."

Mr. ALLISON. That will not do.

Mr. CAMDEN. Leave out "class," then, and say "like kind of property."

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment I suggested, which I understood was agreeable to the Senator from West Virginia, was "of the like quantity of property under similar circumstances."

Mr. CAMDEN. No; I do not want "quantity" in.

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, "the like kind of property under similar circumstances."

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that I think his object will be better accomplished by moving to strike out the fourth section altogether, because if either of the amendments he has suggested remains in the fourth section it makes the fourth section inoperative and utterly prevents it having any effect whatever. His object will be very much better accomplished by moving to strike it out.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will move to strike out the words "class and quantity" and insert "kind;" so as to read:

For the transportation of passengers, or of the like kind of property subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear that read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "class and quantity" and insert in lieu thereof the word "kind;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of the like kind of property subject to the provisions of this act, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMDEN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the amendment as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia the same price will be charged per hundred pounds for a single keg of nails as will be charged for a car-load. That, I think, is manifestly unjust.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to assure the Senator from Iowa that no such construction is possible. The railroad companies under this bill have the right to fix their own tariffs on freight; they will fix one tariff for packages, one tariff for the car-load, and perhaps a totally different tariff for a larger than a smaller number of car-loads.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let me ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. This proposes to regulate the rate according to the kind of property. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if a keg of nails and 500 kegs of nails are not property of the same kind?

Mr. HARRIS. Absolutely so; and I will ask the Senator from Iowa that where the common carrier has the right to fix his rate for carrying 1 keg of nails and a different rate for carrying 500 kegs of nails, if such construction as he puts upon the bill is possible?

Mr. ALLISON. That is true if the carrier would have that right under this section; but the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is to preclude that right as applied to the carrier.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to assure the Senator that the only effect of this section is to declare that no larger sum in the aggregate shall be charged. It does not fix rates at all, but it does declare that no larger sum shall be charged by the carrier for the shorter than the longer haul over the same line in the same direction.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this section appears to me to be getting up into the region of metaphysics. The atmosphere is very rarefied in its neighborhood. It is rapidly reaching a point where nobody will pretend to understand what it means and what its effect will be, and I venture to say that it will be very difficult for anybody to give an intelligent and comprehensive statement of its effects as it now stands.

The Senator from Tennessee last upon the floor [Mr. HARRIS] said that this section proposed to legislate with regard to rates of freight.

Mr. HARRIS. On the contrary, I said it did not propose to fix rates at all.

Mr. INGALLS. But it does fix rates nevertheless, and I should like the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to explain in connection with the amendments that have been offered by the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from West Virginia, and agreed to, what the words "in the aggregate" now mean as they stand in this section:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of the like class and quantity of property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction.

What is "greater compensation in the aggregate" for hauling a passenger over a given line of road? Will not the Senator who is in charge of this bill be good enough to explain now what the words "in the aggregate" mean when relating to the compensation for hauling a passenger over a line of railroad?

Mr. CULLOM. As the Senator appeals to me to explain what the provisions of the fourth section mean as it now stands, I can only say to him that I am not responsible for the present condition of the section. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], and I think that that amendment and the words inserted on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] ought both to go out of the bill. That is my judgment about it, and I have become convinced that the more the Senate undertakes to amend the bill the nearer the bill gets up into the region that the Senator describes, where nobody will be able to understand it.

The words "in the aggregate" in the section, as it was reported by the committee, meant exactly what they say, that there should not be a greater charge for a shorter distance than for a longer one for carrying any given quantity over the same line in the same direction.

Mr. INGALLS. How do the words "in the aggregate" change that? Suppose this section read this way: "That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation for the transportation of passengers or of the like class and quantity of property subject to the provisions," &c. How do the words "in the aggregate" change the meaning of the section from what its significance would be if they were omitted?

Mr. CULLOM. It is possible that they do not change it?

Mr. INGALLS. Why are they there?

Mr. CULLOM. The words "in the aggregate" were inserted to preclude the idea that this section was to be considered or construed as a mileage provision.

Mr. HARRIS. Prorating.

Mr. CULLOM. Prorating the distance, so much for the whole length in the aggregate of the haul, instead of so much per mile.

Mr. INGALLS. How does the use of the words change the meaning of the section as it would be without them?

Mr. CULLOM. I have just stated.

Mr. INGALLS. It says:

It shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation, &c.

Mr. CULLOM. In the conduct of the examination of witnesses by the committee during the vacation it was found on asking questions in reference to the long and short haul that almost every man seemed to answer with the idea that we wanted to know whether they wished to charge the same rate per mile for the long and the shorter distance. It appeared that the only way we could get them to understand what we wanted to know was by using the word "aggregate," asking whether they should be allowed to charge more in the aggregate for a thousand miles, for instance, than for 100 or for 500 miles. Hence we put in the words "in the aggregate" in order that there could be no question as to what the meaning was; and I do not think there is any question.

Mr. SEWELL. The term is a proper one. The word "aggregate" means the summing up of so much a mile. It is customary to give either a mileage rate or an aggregate rate to cover the whole. Take a class of freight from New York to Chicago, say a thousand miles. You give a rate of so much a mile, or you give an aggregate rate of say 25 cents a ton, or whatever it may be. That is the distinction between a mileage rate and an aggregate rate.

Mr. INGALLS. That is a little mystical, Mr. President, not to a practical railroad man, as the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] suggests; and the great difficulty that is apparent and obvious every moment is that we are dealing with this subject, which is a practical subject, and that we are not practical railroad men, and therefore we do not understand it, we do not comprehend it.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator think that we ought not to undertake to do anything with it?

Mr. INGALLS. I think that if we intend to deal with certain evils and propose to place this subject under the control of a commission to deal with them we should not limit or impose restrictions upon their power, but leave it with them to determine in the light of circumstances as they arise. I am entirely willing to say in general terms what shall be the duties of this commission; but the more we deal with the subject mentioned in this fourth section the more inextricably we are befogged, the more apparent it is that pobody understands or can comprehend the result of the various provisions that have been up to this time introduced in that section.

Not being a practical man, it would occur to me that the words "compensation in the aggregate" might refer to the entire amount of compensation that any one man would pay for shipping a certain quantity of freight, so as to be immensely to the advantage of a man who was engaged in making large shipments over a line of railroad.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator has a specific amount of goods to be shipped from his town to New York, the aggregate would mean exactly the whole amount he has to pay between his town and New York; and if he ships it half way from his town to New York, the aggregate of what he would have to pay there would be the whole amount that he would pay.

Mr. INGALLS. It would be exactly the same if those words were left out of the bill, would it not?

Mr. CULLOM. It might, as I said a while ago.

Mr. INGALLS. That is to say, the carrier shall not charge or receive any greater compensation for the transportation. That is the plain English; but when you have put in these words "in the aggregate" you have put in there something which has a significance that I do not comprehend but that I very shrewdly suspect means something.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator——

Mr. INGALLS. I very shrewdly suspect that means something, because what we want to accomplish would be just as absolutely effectuated if those words were left out; and therefore when they are put in by some interpolation that I do not understand I very shrewdly suspect that they were put in there for a purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. They were put in there for no sinister object.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not impute anything to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I know that; but the Senator makes remarks as though there was some scheme about this that was covered up.

Mr. INGALLS. I suspect that the practical railroad men, who have been pretty tolerably planted around this committee for the last eight or ten months, whose testimony has been taken and who know exactly what they want to accomplish, have succeeded by some means or other in getting into this bill here those little words "in the aggregate" for a purpose. I suspect that. I cast no imputation upon the candor, the sincerity, the intelligence, or the good faith of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that the committee intended those words to mean something.

Mr. INGALLS. What do they mean?

Mr. HARRIS. They were intended to mean this, no more and no less——

Mr. INGALLS. Would the section not mean exactly the same if they were left out?

Mr. HARRIS. It would not, according to the opinion of the present exponent of the bill. Those words were intended to mean this, that this bill shall not be construed by any tribunal to mean that the railroad company should be compelled to charge the same rate or as low a rate per mile for the short as it charges for the longer haul.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, no, not that.

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly it.

Mr. INGALLS. No, because that was put in by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] afterwards.

Mr. HARRIS. I say they were intended to exclude the construction that the companies should charge the same rate per mile for the short as for the long haul.

Mr. INGALLS. They are allowed to charge the same rate by the bill. That was put in by the Senator from Iowa afterwards, that they should not charge as much.

Mr. HARRIS. That is an amendment upon which I have asked a separate vote; but I am speaking of the text of the bill, and the idea that I have of it is that when you offer to ship freights from Washington to New York, suppose the railroad company charges 50 cents a ton from Washington to New York. Under the provisions of this bill the company shall not charge a greater sum than 50 cents a ton from Washington to Baltimore or from Washington to Philadelphia, or to any other intermediate point, than it charges to New York—the terminal point.

Mr. INGALLS. Not a greater sum, a greater compensation.

Mr. HARRIS. They shall not charge more than 50 cents per ton from here to Philadelphia; they shall not charge more than 50 cents per ton from here to Baltimore; but under the provisions of this bill before the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was incorporated the company could charge as much in the aggregate; not the same price per mile, not prorating by the mile, but the aggregate sum of compensation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What the committee then means, if I understand the Senator from Tennessee, by the words "in the aggregate," is that that language means exactly the same as if it read, "shall not charge or receive any greater total compensation."

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I understand it to mean, including terminal charge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be very easy to make that reasonably clear by striking out "in the aggregate" and inserting "total" before "compensation."

Mr. INGALLS. Does "compensation" mean total compensation or partial compensation? Suppose the sentence stands exactly as it does now, when we say compensation, do we mean compensation or do we mean partial compensation? Why is it necessary to put in the word "total" before "compensation" when you have said "compensation?" Can you make "compensation" mean less than total? That is gilding refined gold; that is throwing perfume on the violet; and I still remain in the most profound and Cimmerian darkness even after the lucid explanation of the Senator from Tennessee as to the meaning of the words "in the aggregate" in this section, and I have sought carefully and with tears for information on that subject. I appeal again to the eminent chairman of this committee, to his lieutenant and coadjutor, the Senator from Tennessee, to advise me, even still after what he has said, how this bill means anything less or how it means anything more than it would if those words were omitted, how greater compensation in the aggregate means any more than greater compensation. And if the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Tennessee can not give us the information, I shall still feel called upon to suspect that in the mind of practical railroad men, to whose subtle analysis this is in the last event to be submitted, we shall find that there is a very considerable feline animal under the pulverized corn.

We seem also to have become inextricably entangled through the efforts of the Senator from West Virginia to assure what he intends to accomplish by his modification of the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. He wants to strike out the word "quantity." Now that is exactly the word that ought to be in there if you are going to keep in "in the aggregate." What has "in the aggregate" to do except with quantity? What has "in the aggregate" to do with quality, whether it is a silk-worm, or coal, or salt in barrels, or tea from the Orient? It seems to me that "quantity" is exactly the word you want to retain if you retain the words "in the aggregate," because they can not apply to anything but quantity. It is not "quality;" and so far as "class" is concerned, that is obviously the word to retain there, because the word "kind" means "class" in the language of what we are told is the vernacular of practical railroad men.

I should venture to hope, therefore, that the Senate would feel called upon to retain the words that have been proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island as an amendment to this bill, and that if we are dealing with "compensation in the aggregate" we should allow that to apply rather to the quantity of material that is to be transported than to the quality.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, to return to the pending amendment, if the interpretation sought to be put upon this bill by the Senator from Tennessee, who is a member of this committee, and I suppose speaks by authority, as to its effect, it is obviously and monstrously defective. The Senator from Tennessee says that railroad companies under this bill can not only fix upon classes, but they can fix upon different rates of freight for carrying different quantities of merchandise, as I understood him, without the supervision of the commission and without going outside of the law. Now let us see what the effect of that will be.

Suppose the Pennsylvania Railroad or the Erie road fixes compensation for transporting oil in barrels from Cleveland or Pittsburgh to New York at a certain rate if a man ships 10,000 barrels, at another certain rate if a man ships 200,000 barrels a month, and in one case they fix it at one-fourth or one-tenth of what they fix in the other, the result is to allow a monopoly like the Standard Oil Company, to have one rate of freight, 10 cents a barrel perhaps, while all other shippers by the very terms of the classification which may be fixed under the provisions of this bill, according to the Senator from Tennessee, are excluded from shipping their oil at all. It was that class of discrimination which this bill was intended to obviate, if it had any purpose or intention at all. I was surprised to hear the Senator from Illinois say that if my amendment was out the bill would be better than it is now. Leave that amendment out, and what does the bill say in plain English? I will read from the fourth section:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property, &c.

How much property and what kind of property I should like to know? Have you got to charge the same for shipping a jackknife that you would for a ton of coal or 10,000 tons of coal? It says the carriers shall not receive a greater compensation for the transportation of property a shorter than a longer distance. I should like to know how it is possible to say how much property or of what kind, and it is absolutely necessary, to make the bill intelligible, that it shall be of like class and quantity of property transported under similar circumstances and in similar quantities.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, gentlemen have become very technical recently. The bill as reported by the committee, it seems to me, is subject to but one construction, and when the Senator from Rhode Island says that it becomes monstrous when the provision is recited that more shall not be charged in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property——

Mr. ALDRICH. I used the word "monstrous" in connection with the assertion made by the Senator from Tennessee as to the provision allowing different rates to be fixed for carrying different quantities.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought the Senator was pronouncing the provision monstrous. The truth about it is that the language of that section of the bill as reported is perfectly plain. And when the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Rhode Island undertake to mystify the language of the bill, they are simply doing it because they do not believe in the bill so far as that section is concerned.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. CULLOM. I will.

Mr. ALDRICH. How much property, or what kind of property is meant?

Mr. CULLOM. It is perfectly absurd for the Senator to stand here and say because the exact amount is not designated, therefore a railroad company would have the right to charge as much for shipping a jackknife as one hundred car-loads of grain. It simply means if I ship a given quantity of grain or any kind of property over a given line of road, say a thousand miles, and another given quantity for 500 miles, the railroad company shall not be allowed to charge any more for shipping the 500 miles that given quantity of property than the thousand miles.

Mr. ALDRICH. Referring to a similar kind of freight and to a similar quantity, I want an explanation of the Senator's own statement. Does he refer to a similar kind of freight or a similar quantity?

Mr. CULLOM. The railroad companies are allowed to make their own classifications as far as this bill is concerned. The bill does not undertake to say that they shall charge as much or less for shipping a car-load or any other given quantity of grain. We do not undertake to regulate the question of amount at all, but we leave the subject in the hands of the commission, so that if a man is charged as much for shipping a jackknife as he does for shipping a car-load of grain it is extortion, and it is for the commission to see what is being done and to prosecute the railroad company, if it is proper to do so in such a case. The bill does not interfere with that.

The bill simply provides, so far as this section is concerned, in the first portion of it, that you shall be governed by the provisions of the law, and you shall not charge more for the short than you do for the long distance. As to the quantity, there is nothing said about it in the section, and there is not any necessity for anything being said about it to make any court or anybody else understand what the provision means.

When the Senator from Kansas intimates that there has been some sort of following of this committee by railroad men and the procuring of the insertion of words in this bill that will protect the railroads in some way or other in the framing of the provisions of the section, I undertake to say that any insinuation of that sort is utterly groundless, because those words were inserted in the section as a matter of fact on the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who was simply desiring to get the section in such shape as that it could be construed to mean what it says in contradistinction of the idea that they should not be allowed to charge so much per mile. In other words, that it should not be a prorate provision, but it should be in the aggregate as to the whole distance.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. I understand the section to be intended to deal with gross amounts and not with rates.

Mr. ALLISON. If the fourth section was out that would be exactly true.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the effect of the fourth section.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I can contribute anything to the debate on this subject, but after carefully looking at the second section of this bill it seems to me that the true amendment to be inserted in lines 3 and 4 of section 4 would be to put in a substantial reference to the second section of the bill. The second section of the bill provides:

That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of the act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

It seems to me plain that the second section does recognize the right of the railway company to charge different rates for the same class of property, if you please, where the conditions and circumstances are dissimilar; so that I think a railway can make a classification of so much per car, so much per parcel, or can make a classification which shall include pig-iron and crude oil, and another classification which shall include nails by the keg and refined oil, and so on; and under those classifications, if the conditions are similar and the circumstances alike, they may make the same rate. If they are not alike, they can make different rates.

So it seems to me it would be better to insert here "that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property, as provided by the second section of this act," which clearly indicates the conditions and circumstances, &c., which will regulate the different classes. Would not that cover the suggestion of the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island? Unless some such provision is already understood to be in this bill, I am entirely in favor of the insertion of it in the fourth section, as the Senator from Rhode Island has proposed, and if anything is to be inserted the language that is there now is the precise language that ought to be inserted, and no other.

Mr. PLATT. Of course I do not suppose that any member of this committee can compete with the Senator from Kansas in the critical examination of the language of this bill, but I want to assure the Senator from Kansas, without any feeling in reference to the charges or insinuations which he has made with regard to the object of this word "aggregate" in the bill, that he is entirely mistaken so far as the committee is concerned, though I understand he does not impute anything to the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I made not the slightest imputation by the remotest inference on any member of the committee.

Mr. PLATT. I so understood the Senator, and I have no feeling about it. The committee put that word in there as I understand—it was not a favorite word of mine; I think it was rather a favorite word of the Senator from Tennessee—so that there should be no opportunity for a railroad company or a railroad manager to evade this provision as to not charging more for a short than for a long haul; and I will illustrate what it was for. If that word was not in there, what might a railroad officer do under a given set of circumstances? For instance, we will say it is 90 miles from New York to Philadelphia. That is the long haul. We will say it is 80 miles from New York to Germantown. That is the short haul. A railroad officer in New York might give a rate to Philadelphia of half a cent per mile, which would be 45 cents per ton, and for 10 tons would be $4.50 to Philadelphia. A man comes and says: "I want to ship some goods to Germantown," which we will say is 80 miles—these are not the exact distances. He says: "I charge you half a cent a ton per mile, which is 40 cents per ton, which is $4 for 10 tons, and I charge you $2 for terminal charges at New York," which makes $6 from New York to Germantown as against $4.50 he charged from New York to Philadelphia. The committee may have got befogged about that, but that and similar things were what the committee intended to prevent.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, it is said that in a multitude of counselors there is safety, at least for the counselors if for nobody else. This discussion, to which I have listened with a great deal of interest since its beginning, has satisfied me that the amendment made by the committee in the fourth line should not be there. The true object of the fourth section is to prevent the unjust discrimination of the overcharge on the short haul. That is the whole object; and it seems to me that if that is the object of the section, the purpose is sufficiently and explicitly answered as the original language of the bill was with the exception of the amendment which was made in lines 6 and 7:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property.

Leaving the classification of property and all the details of it to the discretion of the railroad companies. Whenever we have said that there shall be no more charged for the short haul of passengers or property than for the long haul, we have answered what is intended by the section, no matter what kind of property may be affected. The language now of the amendment, "of the like class and quantity of property," would by implication say that there may be a kind of property and is a kind of property on which a carrier may rightfully charge more for the short haul than for the long haul. That can not be, because if the proposition is correct that the short haul shall not be charged more than the long one, it applies to one kind of property as well as another. I hope that the Senator from West Virginia will agree to the striking out of the words inserted in Committee of the Whole, and will stand square in behalf of the fourth section without any further amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, it would simplify the matter very much if it were in order at this stage of the discussion of the bill to move to strike out the entire fourth section and present a substitute for it. I rise to inquire if I should be in order at this time in doing that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be in order at this time to move to strike out the whole fourth section. The amendments of the Committee of the Whole must first be acted upon. After they are acted on it will be in order to move to strike out the section.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask that unanimous consent be given me at this stage——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well, then; I will wait.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey and to the Chair that the Senator from New Jersey proposes to strike out the whole section and offer a substitute for it. His amendment may be offered at this time, and both the substitute he offers and the text of the section proposed to be stricken out will be open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not be in order now to offer to amend the fourth section of the bill further than to amend the amendments already proposed. At a later stage it will be in order.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would like to state while I am on my feet and in the line of discussion touching the amendments now being considered by the Senate, that I think if there is any question which has come before the Senate during my service in this body which the Senate has demonstrated its inability to cope with or meet intelligently it is the question now before the Senate. What I proposed to do, and what I shall do at some future time, is to eliminate from this discussion and from this bill this entire section, and leave the whole matter where it is proposed to leave the pooling question in the nineteenth section of the bill, with the commission itself, to examine and report to Congress exactly what legislation can be made and safely made. That is my purpose.

The nineteenth section of the bill proposes that the commission shall deal with the pooling question. I shall take part of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], for I do not agree with all his amendment; neither do I agree with the committee's fourth section of the bill; but I shall take the last half of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, which places the whole question of the long and short haul and of pooling entirely in the hands of the commission and requires it to report to Congress. That seems to me to be the intelligent way of dealing with it. The commission in other sections of the bill are required in every case to see that the rates from any part or section of the country, whether for a long or short haul, are reasonable and just; but as to the question involved in the fourth section of the bill, it properly belongs to the commission for examination and report.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I believe the question presented to the Senate now is upon concurrence in the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole as to "the like class and quantity of property."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment is proposed to that amendment by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. CALL. After that the question will come up on concurrence in this amendment.

I quite agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] that this part of the original section was in proper form and is better without this amendment. I think, therefore, that neither the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia nor this amendment should be adopted, but that the Senate should non-concur in both.

The section is intended to reach and does reach alone the question of the long and short haul and the compensation for it. It is pertinent to nothing else; it can not affect anything else. It is perfectly clear that it only relates to the question of a greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance, and by no possibility, unless you interpolate this language in it, can it have any kind of relation to or effect on any other thing.

As to the discussion in reference to the word "aggregate," adopted by the committee, that is very plain. Suppose there are two companies, common carriers in interstate transportation, using two lines of road. One line of road may charge twice as much as the other. This bill does not prohibit it. It simply requires that the aggregate on both roads, including their terminal charges, shall be the same. There is no difficulty about that; it is perfectly plain. The language adopted by the committee is appropriate, and you can not find a better term than the term "aggregate" to express that idea that two roads, each charging different rates, shall not to the interstate transporter charge more in the aggregate, in the total, including their terminal facilities. The language is perfectly plain.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to ask him a question, as I am not sure that I understand him?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Do you mean that we should disagree to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia which was adopted some days since, and the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, both, and leave the section as it came from the committee?

Mr. CALL. No, sir, I mean this: In the text of section 4 you will see the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island in italics, "of the like class and quantity of."

Mr. BROWN. Then you do not propose to leave the section as it was reported by the committee, but you propose to take the section with the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, which was adopted some time since, and treat that as the section?

Mr. CALL. That question is not now before the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that, but I wanted to understand your position.

Mr. CALL. That is my position; but the question before the Senate now is upon amending the words which are now in the bill "of the like class and quantity of" by striking out the word "quantity" and inserting the word "quality."

Mr. BROWN. Then, by the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia you mean his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CALL. Yet, sir, that is what I am speaking of.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Florida will allow me to make a suggestion to him, the Senator from West Virginia is ready to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to withdraw the amendment he has heretofore offered and to offer this, which is satisfactory to the committee and also to the Senator from Rhode Island who moved the amendment:

Of like kind of property under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

Adopting the language of the second section instead of the language adopted by the Senator from Rhode Island in his amendment.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to that, though I do not think that has anything to do with that section.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia not being present——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from West Virginia is right at my elbow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs pardon. The Senator from Virginia was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I do not like the way this bill is being managed. There are too many amendments proposed and adopted without a vote. If the Senator from Rhode Island has any amendment to make to the bill it would be well to suggest it to the Senate and not to the Senator from Tennessee.

Sir, I do not represent a terminal State as the Senator from Rhode Island possibly does, but I do know the difference between a terminal State and terminal points of railroads. Therefore, I suggest again to the Senator from Tennessee that every Senator on this floor shall know exactly what is going in the bill and what is being taken out of it. I asked that an amendment be read a while ago and I could not have it done, because the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Kansas insisted upon holding the floor and discussing the amendment.

I undertake to say that the bill is argued only from the constituent standpoint; that every Senator here is trying to do something that will give his own people an advantage over those somebody else represents. If I am mistaken in that, then I do not understand the debate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then you disclaim it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not disclaim it, and if I excel the Senator from Rhode Island in making a frank statement he will excuse me for it. I do not mean to cast my vote for a bill that is to give Rhode Island an advantage over any other State unless she is entitled to it and unless she can assert here to-day that she labors under some disadvantage.

The bill ought never to pass Congress unless it is meant to say that we intend to take charge of the railroads and the telegraph lines of the country. Then we should say it all at once, take charge of everything that is identified with the transmission of mail matter and of freight, and let every man be patriotic enough to come up and vote for it. But when the Senator from New Jersey suggests the amendment he does I know what it means, and I should be unfit to represent the people who sent me here if I did not know it. Representing an Atlantic coast State simply, fighting on the same line that he has been for the three years I have known him here, he asks that there shall be free trade for all that labor produces everywhere else than in the State of New Jersey and that they shall have protection there.

I know that it is not in order after having made a speech to make a motion which will in itself not be debatable, but there seems to be so much in the bill that so many gentleman have an interest in that I now move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves that the amendment do lie on the table.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir, the bill, I beg pardon; and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virgina moves that the bill lie on the table, and on that motion he demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). If my colleague [Mr. CONGER] were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from Maine that if my colleague [Mr. BECK] were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Then I shall vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will assume to vote in the face of my pair, and ask to record my vote "nay."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but I feel sure that if he were present he would vote "nay." So I record my vote "nay."

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague [Mr. MANDERSON], who is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], is only temporarily absent from the Chamber. He would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have already recorded my vote in the negative.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I merely desired to state the position of my colleague.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have stated as much, and voted.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I do not know how he would vote, and I do not see his colleague [Mr. INGALLS] here to instruct me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yea 1, nays 54; as follows:

YEA—1.

Riddleberger.

NAYS—54.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia to give me just one moment?

Mr. CAMDEN. Certainly.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to call attention to the fact that the vote just taken settles the whole constitutional question, and certainly resolves all that we would call a Democratic States rights party into the one general proposition that the Federal Government has a right to control the railroads. I ask pardon, but I wanted to solve the proposition. I do not want any more gentlemen to come and talk to me and to the people whom I in part represent about States rights. We have now determined that question with one single vote against it, that the Federal Government has a right to fix the status of the railroads and to control them, and that includes telegraphs and everything else.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am very heartily in favor of the bill, and I do not seek to throw any obstructions in the way of it. My sole object is to so restrict and modify the language used in the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island as to make it in harmony with the bill. It has been suggested to strike out after the word "or," in line 3, the words "of the like class and quantity of property," and to insert "of like kind of property under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia withdraw his former amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to withdraw my former amendment, and to offer the amendment I have just stated, as it meets the point fully I was aiming at in offering the former amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 3, after the word "or," it is proposed to strike out the words "of the like class and quantity of property," and insert in lieu thereof the words:

Of like kind of property under substantially similar circumstances and conditions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLER. I am very glad to see that the Senator from West Virginia has repented of his amendment which was adopted some days ago, and that he is now willing to restore section 4 to its condition as it was originally reported by the committee. Of course, while agreeing to the amendment which he has suggested, and I shall be very glad to agree to it, it leaves nothing of his other amendment, and I have no doubt when we reach line 6 he will vote to non-concur in it.

Mr. CAMDEN. I could not understand what the Senator from New York said, though I should have liked to have done so.

Mr. VANCE. If the object of the friends of this portion of the bill is sincerely to relieve the discrimination upon the individual whose shipment is called the short haul, I can not see why they are not content to let well enough alone. The language employed in the fourth section, "that it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than a longer haul over the same line in the same direction," is just as explicit as language can be made. Everybody would understand it, and there could be no mistaking it by courts or railroad companies.

But when you come to insert "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions," you simply open a gap through which, in less time than we have taken in the passage of this bill, the railroad companies will drive not only a coach and six, but an engine with forty cars. That would be the effect of it.

How can the conditions be substantially similar, if one lot of freight is shipped 500 miles and another is shipped 1,000 miles? What do you mean by that? How can the circumstances be similar when the articles are dissimilar, when the distance is dissimilar, and when the amount of service rendered by the carrier is dissimilar?

I do not impugn men's motives; I am not in the habit of doing so; but it seems to me that if we are in dead earnest, if we are not trying to deceive the people by throwing a tub to the whale, when we have incorporated language which serves our purpose we should stop and not put in any language that would enable somebody to hang a doubt upon it, or by perverting the interpretation avoid the true intent and meaning of the act. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia and adopted as in Committee of the Whole was perfectly plain to my mind, and was a positive command of law. The law proposed directed; it left nothing on that point to the commission, nothing to the discretion of anybody. But the expression used now in the proposed amendment takes from the power of the law the settlement of this question and transfers it to the commission. That is the effect of it. It leaves to the discretion of the commission to determine whether there are substantialty like conditions and circumstances, whereas the measure settled the matter without leaving it to the commissioners or anybody else.

If the question came into court, all the courts could do would be to take the law as written and say whether the law has been complied with; but when you put in these words of discretion (and they are words of discretion), "substantially similar conditions and circumstances," then the courts would have to determine by their own discretion or by that of the commissioners whether the circumstances were substantially the same.

So to my mind there is an essential difference between the amendment as now proposed and that adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the proposed amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. Probably it would be well to transpose the words in lines 4 and 5 of the fourth section, "subject to the provisions of this act," and insert the same words after the word "carrier," in line 2 of the same section, so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words will be transposed if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 6, after the word "direction," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole agreed to strike out the words:

And from the same original point of departure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this reserved amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out by adding after the word "departure" and before the semicolon, in line 7 of the reprinted bill, the words "or to the same point of arrival."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 7, after the word "direction," insert the words "or to the same point of arrival;" so as to read:

For a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, or to the same point of arrival.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the reserved amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The object of that is to have the clause retained in the bill and made complete.

Mr. HARRIS. The Chief Clerk did not read the part stricken out as in Committee of the Whole—the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I refer to the clause as it stands in the original bill. The Committee of the Whole recommends that it be stricken out, but it is still part of the bill; it is merely a recommendation of the Committee of the Whole. If my amendment be agreed to with the clause proposed to be stricken out it would read:

And from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival.

That makes a whole clause. I am amending the clause proposed to be stricken out. If my amendment should be agreed to then the bill would read:

For a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, and from the same original point of departure, or to the same point of arrival.

The bill as it stands only covers that evil from the point of departure, and therefore, while you could not ship from Chicago to Pittsburgh at a less rate than you could from Pittsburgh to New York, for instance, you could ship at a less rate than you could from Pittsburgh to New York, because Pittsburgh is not the same original point of departure that Chicago is. Therefore, to complement it, and make that proposition complete, you have got to have it work both ways, so that shipping from Chicago to New York (I take that as an illustration), being the original point of departure, the bill would forbid the Chicago shipper, the railroad, to make a greater rate from Chicago to Pittsburgh, for illustration, than from Chicago to New York. But when you come to the other part of the same proposition, the shipper, without my amendment, would still be at liberty to make a greater rate from Pittsburgh to New York than from Chicago to New York, because Pittsburgh and Chicago are not the same original points of departure.

In order to make this thing just, it is proper to add "or to the same point of arrival," so that a shipper from Pittsburgh to New York could not be charged more than a shipper from Chicago to New York. As the bill has it, he could be charged more from Chicago to Pittsburgh than he could from Chicago to New York, and from Pittsburgh to New York he could be charged any sum that the company chose to impose upon him.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Vermont if his amendment is agreed to and his idea is carried out in respect to this section, whether the railroad company could not charge one rate from Chicago to New York and charge a different rate from a depot 50 miles east of Chicago, and a higher rate to New York?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; that is exactly what my amendment forbids, and exactly what may be done now under the bill as it stands.

Mr. KENNA. Not as it stands.

Mr. HARRIS. Not as it stands amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As it stands; because the amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole is not yet finally agreed to, and so I say the words are still in the bill "from the same original point of departure."

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will allow me a word just at that point. Suppose a car-load or a number of car-loads started 50 miles east of Chicago and stopped 5 miles west of New York, then the provision which the Senator proposes would not affect the right to charge there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would not affect it either way; neither would the original proposition.

Mr. KENNA. But as proposed to be amended by my colleague it would be affected in that way as in every other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true, but in respect of the provision as it stands in the bill it is obviously incomplete, with great respect to the opinions of others, in the very particular that the Senator from Tennessee stated, that a shipper from Chicago to New York might get one rate and a man 10 miles or 50 miles east of Chicago, or 100 or 200 miles anywhere west of New York, might get a much higher rate, because Chicago is the original point of departure.

Mr. HARRIS. That I understand, but if the language stricken out by the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole remains out of the bill, would not the effect of the section as it would then stand be, that no matter what the point of departure is nor the point of destination anywhere on the same line and in the same direction, no matter from what depot to what depot, the railroad company is restrained from charging a higher rate for that shorter haul than it would charge from Chicago to New York?

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it is. That is perfectly true. I did not vote on the original proposition at all, as I came in just as the yeas and nays were being taken in Committee of the Whole. I am afraid that that is going too far, and that you are going to interfere with the purely local traffic of these lines in States and merely across a river, which is a nominal line for all business purposes between one State and another, and that you are going to carry your great objects so far as to hamper and interfere with the operations of these local affairs to the injury not only of the general public but of the local public, because their interests are really interests in common, for all that they pay goes to make up the mass of money necessary to carry on the operations of the railroads and give a reasonable profit to those who invested their money in them.

While I agree that striking it all out and not amending it at all goes much further than my amendment proposes, I think it is going too far, and that it is safer for the objects of the bill and for what is truly interstate commerce not to undertake to carry the principle of equality of distance, and equality of haul, and equality of price into regions where we have no constitutional power to arrange it, as between the western and the eastern borders of Ohio, and then say that from the eastern side of Ohio to Pittsburgh, a distance of only 25 miles, if you please, or less, the railway shall be under a compulsion to make one charge, while from the eastern border of Ohio to the western border you can not touch it at all, and thus discriminate by the operation of an act of Congress between citizens of the same State engaged in the same business.

Therefore by such a provision, which carries it down to its utmost detail that we can, you are creating a division and a discordance and an injustice between the local traffic that is wholly within the State and that local traffic which happens to be a little out of the State and into it which only we can touch. If Congress had the power to regulate the whole thing in States as well as between States, then I should agree with the principle contained in the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, that there ought to be equality of substantial distance and weight and that sort of thing everywhere; but we have not that power.

Mr. HARRIS. I quite understand the position of the Senator from Vermont, and desire simply to ask him this additional question, if he thinks there is any serious danger to the local traffic or to the common carrier by the provision as it stands, the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole being agreed to and his amendment not agreed to?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I do. That is the reason why I offer the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator if he thinks there is any serious danger in view of the fact that this section gives the railroad commission the discretionary power to relieve the common carrier from the provisions of the section whenever appealed to and in its opinion justice demands that it shall be relieved?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but having been born and brought up a real Jeffersonian Democrat, I have always been opposed to giving a discretion when I could possibly avoid it to any set of men or officers. I am in favor, therefore, when we are making laws, of making laws which declare things instead of leaving discretions. If we can lay down a rule and we are to lay it down at all, we ought to lay down that rule as positively as we may, so as to relieve the commission from the responsibility and the danger which the Senator from Virginia pointed out the other day, of their soon being the charms on the watch-chain of the railroad president, from the danger of being tempted or persuaded or misled into granting special and favorite exceptions to this company and that company and under these circumstances and those circumstances. I would not do it any further than I could help it.

On the face I should have liked the bill better if it had adopted the English plan of having one general first section which declared that all railroads over whom we may have any constitutional control and the particular traffic over which we may have constitutional control should be conducted upon principles of justice and equality under all circumstances and conditions to which it could be applied, and then make a tribunal that should settle, as the English people did, the application of the rule to every particular case as it arose. The committee has thought it better to lay down these positive principles and limitations and rules, and having thought so, I am disposed to stand by them and make it as perfect and as safe as I can.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HALE in the chair). Mr. President, either the Senator from Vermont understands this differently from what I do or else the amendment substantially confines the benefit of the fourth section of the bill as to the long haul and the short haul exclusively to the voyage between Chicago and New York or between New York and Chicago. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it is exactly the other way.

Mr. SHERMAN. From any intermediate point?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From every point between those two points.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, take this case: Suppose goods are shipped from New York to Chicago and the rate fixed there by the common carrier which would be subject to the operations of this proposed law is a dollar a ton, or $10 a ton, whatever it may be. We will say $10 a ton, and for a thousand miles the rate would be about a cent a mile. Under the operations of this bill that rule of $10 a ton from New York to Chicago would bind the company, and they could not charge anybody else higher than that rate for a shipment between those two points. But if the shipment was made from New York to Pittsburgh they might charge $20, $30, $40, or $50 a ton, so far as this section is concerned, and so on at every point of the line until they reach within 10 miles of Chicago they might charge any rate they choose.

Not only that, but the fourth section would expressly give them that right. In the absence of the fourth section the shipment would be restrained somewhat by the first and second sections, because this would be a discrimination which might be pronounced against by the commission; but here in the fourth section they are expressly authorized by necessary implication to make a discrimination to any extent they choose where the shipment is not between one point and another point, both of which are extreme points. It seems to me that would reverse the whole object of this measure.

However, the report of the committee did give to the shipper from intermediate points an advantage. It did declare that from a common point of departure they should not charge more to an intermediate point than to an ultimate point. That is, under the operations of the bill as it was reported to us, if they charge $10 a ton from New York to Chicago they could not charge more than $10 a ton from New York to Pittsburgh, or from New York to Mansfield, or from New York to Fort Wayne, or other points on the line. So with Cleveland. To that extent the bill was a benefit to intermediate points, but now that is practically abrogated by this other provision as I understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will pardon me for interrupting him——

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me tell him that it is to prevent exactly the thing he fears that I propose this amendment. The bill does prevent you from charging more from New York to Pittsburgh than from New York to Chicago, but when a man wants to ship from Pittsburgh to Chicago and appeals to this bill for protection it does not protect him, because Pittsburgh is not New York, and he only gets fair play from any point west of Pittsburgh. Now, if you put in the words "or the same point of arrival," when he offers freight at Pittsburgh, probably on the very first train that started from New York, they can not charge him any more for taking it from Pittsburgh to Chicago than they charge from New York there. But leaving those words out and taking the print as it stands, Pittsburgh does not fall within the category at all; they may charge what they like from Pittsburgh to Chicago, because Pittsburgh is not the point of original departure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Both these phrases are words of limitation which limit the operation of the section of the bill. Both the phrases "and from the original point of departure" and the phrase proposed by the Senator from Vermont are words limiting the operation of the fourth section of the bill and plainly so.

If the fourth section is to be retained at all, as I said in the few remarks I made the other day, it ought to operate fairly on all the intermediate points, because the effect of the measure as it now stands will be to discriminate against all the moderate cities of the United States in favor of three or four of the great overcrowded cities which will be the places of vast shipment.

If the discrimination can be made against intermediate points it does just exactly what neither the Senator from Vermont nor I desire to do, it destroys the smaller towns or communities, where vice does not prevail so largely as in great cities, and builds up the great centers of population where corruption naturally grows and breeds. The better part of our population, as we all know, is in the farming communities, in the smaller towns, in the flourishing manufacturing towns of ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty thousand inhabitants, where public opinion to a certain extent controls vice and controls all the habits of mankind. Corruption breeds in cities.

It seems to me, therefore, that the provisions of the bill ought to operate equally and justly, so that every town or community which is trying to build up a local trade in its neighborhood shall be protected in having the benefit of this general rule.

If you are in favor of striking out the fourth section, so as to give our country a broader commerce with a view to building up our foreign commerce and better facilities to the grain-growing States to carry their freight to Europe at a lower rate so as to compete with India, that I can understand. In that event you do not want the fourth section at all. But if you have this rule of the long and short haul, you must apply it not only in favor of the extreme points of shipment but of all the intermediate points.

It seems to me, therefore, that the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia ought to be retained, and that it should not be restricted either by the clause proposed by the Senator from Vermont or by the clause reported from the committee, but in other words that there should be that general rule of equity and equality which is manifest to every one however plain he may be, and which every railroad man admits to be the correct one, and which by the laws of several of the States is enforced against their own railroads where they have the jurisdiction, that while you need not charge pro rata per mile, you never shall charge a man for hauling the less distance over his road more than you would charge for hauling a greater distance over the same road. That is a fair and universal rule which ought to be applied.

I believe that if the fourth section was retained in the bill, and I shall vote to retain it in the bill, it would bring about that kind of healthy competition which would be beneficial to the roads themselves and would not interfere with our foreign commerce. I do not myself want to vote for any bill which will prevent us from competing sharply with India, with Russia, or with any part of the world for feeding the great population of Europe. That is the problem of the age. Who shall feed Europe? Who shall supply their markets with food? The population is overgrown; they can not feed themselves; and therefore Russia, India, and America are called upon to furnish them the necessary supply. By their accumulated wealth and labor they restore to us a value in kind in their products, largely in luxuries.

I do not want to interfere with that commerce, and although I should like to protect the people of Ohio, I do not want at all to interfere with that broader commerce which is for the benefit of the whole country.

It seems to me if the principle of the long haul and the short haul is retained in the fourth section of the bill, competition by water at points like Chicago and Saint Louis—I think more markedly at Saint Louis than at Chicago—will enable the railroads at times and the water at other times to carry on this commerce cheaper than it can be done either in India or Russia. Ever since my inspection of the Eads jetties I have had the idea that from Saint Louis and all points along the Mississippi they can transport wheat and other cereals from anywhere along the mighty Mississippi and the Missouri River to New Orleans, there to be transshipped into vessels of great bulk, of four, five, or six thousand tons, as the case may be, and they may ship wheat and produce to Liverpool and to other countries in Europe, and there compete even with the advantages the English now derive from the Suez Canal and with the new improvements which have been made in the building of railroads in Russia, and the like. That is my impression, and also as to the enlargement of the canal between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

To come back to the point, I am afraid if you should adopt in the bill the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and should non-concur in the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia discriminations against smaller interior points will be made from time to time, and will bring back the same discontent that we have had to contend with heretofore; but if you have this universal rule, and apply it to all our people without respect to their locality, they will see that it is right, the railroad companies will enforce that rule, as we have only copied the wisdom of different States so far as their jurisdiction goes, and this problem will work out its own solution.

If you stop short of that and leave it possible for railroads to discriminate against local towns and local communities, you will have this trouble brought back upon you, and probably a more extreme measure will be adopted. There is a universal feeling in our country that the question of interstate commerce should be dealt with in a broad and liberal spirit. I believe the feeling exists in every State that no State and no community should have any advantage over the other; that no man should have any advantage over another; that such a thing should not be allowed as has occurred in the last few years, where a great corporation has had the benefit of a rate of 10 cents a barrel on their products, while the smaller producers in the same line of business had to pay 40 cents, supplemented by the fact that that great corporation not only demanded the right to transport at 10 cents, but demanded the 30 cents collected from their competitors in order to enable them to crush all who operated in the same line of business. Although that is an extreme case, yet it has occurred to my certain knowledge over several of the railroads running from the city of Chicago and many other places where shippers, on account of the discrimination between a five-car and a ten-car within a certain time, or between a ten-car and a twenty-car within a certain period of time where great operators were speculating, actually crushed out all the intermediate operators.

I have seen enough of railroad business to know that that has been done in all parts of the country. It could not be very well avoided, because in the struggle of the railroads to get the benefit of traffic they have been competing with each other, and in a sharp struggle they have made special contracts with these great shippers in order to get the benefit of their business, and they have got it in this way. All these things are broken down, so far as a law can do it, by the first and second sections of the bill.

Now, in the smaller towns and communities it applies as well to Illinois and Iowa as any other States; if they want to make a rate they can take Omaha and make a rate through to New York, which will crush out everybody in Iowa, or they can make a rate between Saint Louis and crush out the farming and business men in Illinois, or make a rate between Chicago and New York and crush out our people in Ohio.

To my certain knowledge this mode of doing business has destroyed a great many towns which were once flourishing and active, and has built up other towns which have had some advantages as to competition. The town in which I live has been largely benefited by this operation, because they there have three railroads competing with each other, while another town east or west is charged more for the freight to New York or to Chicago than the town in which I live, simply because we have the advantage of local competing through traffic.

Now, that is not just or right, and therefore the rule ought to apply universally that where a man puts his property on a railroad to go 300 miles it shall not be charged more than when it is transferred over that same railroad 1,000 miles. In the case which has been put here, where they have the benefit of a sharp competition to Chicago, we ought not by our law give these railroads the power of breaking down all the farmers between Chicago and New York merely to give an advantage to the farmers around Chicago. Nor do the farmers in Illinois get the benefit of this, because for the short distance between their homes and Chicago they are charged a very large local rate, and in that way the farmers even of Illinois in the great markets of Saint Louis and Chicago do not get the benefits because the excessive local rates are put upon their products before they reach the great marts of Saint Louis and Chicago.

I hope therefore, without detaining the Senate about this matter, that the Senator from Vermont will see that it is better for us to try this experiment, better to give what the people have demanded, fair rates and equal rates for a short haul and a long haul, so that no discrimination shall be made against them, and if it does not work well, or if it operates to destroy our foreign commerce, I shall be as ready to make the necessary changes as any man in the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Ohio a question before he concludes. He says he is in favor of foreign commerce, and he is in favor of competition. I ask him how under those circumstances can he vote for the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, which shuts out four or five roads from competing for the freight between Chicago and New York?

As I remarked the other day, under the pressure of slack times a couple of years ago they carried freight by rail from Chicago to New York at 10 cents a hundred, or 2 mills per ton per mile. There is not a Senator upon this floor who supposes that any railroad could live upon any such rate as that, if it was general and if it was to be applied to all the intermediate points.

I should like to ask the Senator, when he speaks of competition by water, how under the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia the railroads can compete? They only get 10 per cent. of their freight at this very low rate. It is carried possibly for little or nothing, because the cars otherwise would go back to tide water empty; but if they have got to graduate all of their intermediate freights upon the basis of 2 mills per ton per mile, the result will be that those roads will be out of the ring of competition and everything will go by the lake or by foreign corporations or by the River Saint Lawrence.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there is any difficulty. I think these abnormally low rates are injurious not only to the railroads but to the people of the United States. What is the object now of these great railroads carrying freight for an abnormally low rate? I suppose simply to destroy steamboat navigation so as to make vessel-owners lay up their boats as they did one or two years. These railroads owned by the people of the United States actually destroyed all their earning capacity to their stockholders and sometimes could not pay dividends; some of them became bankrupt in the process, merely for the purpose of destroying the competition they had on the lakes. That was not a healthy process. When they destroyed competition on the lakes or with each other, then they put up the rates abnormally high, and made a pretty fair general average, taking an average of two or three years together. That ought to be prevented. To prevent that is one of the objects of this bill, as I understand it. But, on the other hand, if this is left to an ordinary and fair competition, if these railroads are not allowed to put down their rates to such a degree that they will drive off the steamers from the lakes, then, as a matter of course, steamboats can be readily built.

Railroads can not be readily built, but steamboats can; and the Senator from Michigan knows very well the energy of those people up there, that if they can make 5 or 6 cents a bushel from Chicago to Buffalo on their new-modeled propellers, they would make a very good business, and if they have that business in the summer season, when the lakes are open, they can give as cheap transportation from Chicago to New York over the Erie Canal as can be found in any place in the world except only on the Mississippi River from Saint Louis to New Orleans. What is the actual cost by these modern propellers per bushel?

Mr. PALMER. I do not think they can live at the hundredth part of 1 per cent. under 2 cents a bushel. That would be equivalent, I believe, to 5 or 6 cents a bushel to New York, but the railroads have carried for 10 cents a hundred, which would be equivalent to 6 cents a bushel.

I appreciate what the Senator says in regard to the attempt of the railroads to annihilate the commerce of the lakes. That is the intent undoubtedly. I have felt it very severely myself; and I am arguing now against my own interest, because I believe the proposition is sound to throw this competition open to the railroads as well as the lake traffic. But as to 5 or 6 cents a bushel being charged for lake transportation that is a thing unheard-of as long as the railroads compete. They brought the rates down to 2 cents a bushel from Chicago to Buffalo; and when they carry for 10 cents a hundred to New York or 6 cents a bushel vessels can not get, unless there is a glut in the elevators, over 2 or 2½ cents to Buffalo, which is not a living rate.

But I would say right there, in answer to one remark the Senator made in regard to the annihilation of the lake commerce, that I have wondered time and again why it is not annihilated; but it seems not to be, and vessel craft are being built to replace those lost by accidents on the lakes and by fires, and now probably the tonnage of the lakes is greater than it ever was, notwithstanding all these adverse circumstances of competition. Selfishly I should like to see the whole of the traffic of the Northwest confined to the lakes during the six months of navigation, but at the same time I imagine that you would find that rates would go up very materially and the farmers of the Northwest would suffer.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan agrees with the information I have received that shippers by lake would cheerfully take a contract for any period of time or for any amount to carry wheat from Chicago to New York and place it on shipboard at 5 cents a bushel.

Mr. PALMER. I do not agree to that extent. We should be very glad to take freights from Chicago to Buffalo for the season for 3½ or 4 cents, but I do not think any shipments are ever made from Chicago direct to New York by what we call the general craft on the lake that are running wild, that are out of any line. They take freights from Chicago to Buffalo, but freights are not classified in any other way than from Chicago to Buffalo or Chicago to Ogdensburg, or some other lake port.

Mr. SHERMAN. It only shows that we have now from these great central points, Saint Louis and Chicago, the dominating points in the geography of the West, the cheapest transportation that is to be found in the world, because even in India and in Russia and in other countries they can not bring their productions to market at any such rate, say 5 cents a bushel to carry wheat from Chicago to New York and place it on shipboard. Suppose it is 6 cents. That is very low.

Mr. PALMER. Six cents, I think, is the lowest.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is very low indeed. Take the cost of transporting from Saint Louis to New Orleans and placing it on shipboard, and that is only 1 or 2 cents. If the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] knows about the cost of that shipment I should like to have him state it.

Mr. EUSTIS. About 4 cents.

Mr. SHERMAN. From Saint Louis loaded from the barge on shipboard 4 cents.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio please explain to me a statement I heard him make, that railroad competition had absolutely destroyed the business of the lakes?

Mr. SHERMAN. For a time.

Mr. McPHERSON. Notwithstanding he says that the rate of transportation between New York and Chicago is 6 cents a bushel.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is one of those things that ought never to have happened, but the railroads did at one time by combined low rates, which they maintained at the cost of their stockholders—wrongfully maintained, as they think——

Mr. McPHERSON. For whose benefit, then?

Mr. SHERMAN. Nobody's benefit at all. They in that way sought to drive out all competition of boats on the lakes, and to a certain extent they did it. They destroyed the ability of these boats to run; and remember it is quite a different thing between the owner of a boat and the owner of a railroad. The railroads do not care how much they sacrifice the interest of their stockholders. They can run anything out of the water, and they did impair the boating interests of the great Northwest, and actually laid up boats that would otherwise have been running at abnormally low rates; and then when they drove the boats out of the business they resumed operations again. It is to prevent that that I desire to see the railroads compelled by the rule of equity to maintain a reasonable rate.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then, if I understand aright the Senator from Ohio, his vote and his position upon this bill is in the interest of higher rates for the railroad?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, let me question the Senator a little further.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must protest against this mode of conducting debate.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well. I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am through now.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, if the Senator will give me his attention a moment, I should like to ask him a question which I think is very important and very proper in this connection. The Senator has stated that the water rate is a very low one, which we all admit; that the railroads by an equally low rate have taken the business away from the water at Chicago, Chicago being the shipping point. Who has received the benefit of that low rate except the Western producer? This bill proposes what? It proposes to fix a rate for all railroads to work on east of Chicago. A railroad company has the power to make its rates from Chicago, but it has no other power whatever left it. The bill says that whatever rate you make from Chicago shall govern rates at all other points on the line. Now unless a railroad manager is an idiot, what will be the natural result? He will fix a rate from Chicago that will give him a living price from every station east of Chicago. If he fixes that rate from Chicago it is at the expense of the Western producer. There can be no alternative. Either the railroads must consent to go into bankruptcy or they must fix a rate from Chicago which will enable them to have a living rate east of Chicago.

Now, sir, the competition that we meet to-day, that the Western producer meets, is found where? It is found in the London market in the India productions. The Indian producer during the past year has furnished England 44,000,000 bushels of grain. The 44,000,000 bushels which India now produces have heretofore been furnished by the people of the United States upon the low rate which the Senator from Ohio says enabled them to ship their products from the West to Liverpool. Now we are not to get rid of that competition of India by reason of any sort of a contrivance which we make here in the shape of a short-haul or long-haul bill. That competition is there. India will continue to raise wheat. She has the lands, and the product will be raised. The great West also has the land; it does not propose to give up the raising of products or abandon the farms; but the question for the Western man to consider is a question of transportation. What is left after transportation is paid the producer gets, and no more. That is exactly the state of the case. Very well. The committee report a bill here that establishes a commission, and to that commission you propose to give all power to provide against unreasonable rates, to declare what rates shall be reasonable and just. But it goes further.

The committee then say that they will adopt the principle of the short haul and the long haul in their bill, which to my mind had no business there whatever, for after leaving it to the commission to determine as to the reasonableness and unreasonableness of rates, it should have stopped right there.

In my opinion if inventive men were paid at public cost to determine some method by which railroads could more completely oppress the people of this country they could not devise a system better than that afforded in the fourth section of this bill, and why? Simply for the reason that the very trouble that railroad companies have had for years has been the cutting of rates from the through stations like Chicago and elsewhere. If this bill shall pass how can there be a cutting of rates by a competing line of railroad? How is it possible for a railroad that does not mean to go into bankruptcy to compete with another line of railroad from Chicago when this bill declares that whatever rate is fixed for that through business shall fix the rate from every other point? In short, the through rate under this bill determines and fixes the local rate.

Now, when you say to competing railroads, "You may fix your rate from Chicago, but take notice that when that rate is fixed from Chicago you can not charge a higher rate from any other station east of Chicago," what is the meaning of it? The meaning is bankruptcy to the railroads, or it means that they will fix a rate from Chicago which will enable them to live and make money. I say to you that every intelligent railroad man in this country will adopt that alternative. No legislation ever was devised by mortal man which placed so absolutely in the power of railroads the legal right to oppress the people as this proposed bill. Self-defense will demand an increase in through rates, and hence local rates will be correspondingly high.

Mr. CAMDEN. The Senator will allow me to ask him if the whole country is not injured by allowing railroads which compete with each other from Chicago to charge less than cost on through business and make it upon the local business? Do they not oppress the whole country by charging a higher rate for local hauls?

Mr. McPHERSON. Your bill proposes to appoint a commission, and upon that commission you confer the absolute power of determining the question whether a rate is reasonable and just or unreasonable and unjust. When from a station between here and Chicago complaint is made to the commission, I say under the power conferred on the commission by the bill they could change that rate and make a different rate and more reasonable rate without affecting the Chicago rate at all.

Mr. CAMDEN. I want to say to the Senator that unless the amendment offered by me is adopted the commission have no discretion whatever on that subject; and whenever a complaint is made to that commission by a shipper for a shorter distance claiming that he is charged more than a shipper for a longer distance, they will refer to this statute and say "Congress has recognized that principle by law and we can not change it." They have to carry out the law and they can not fix any rule correcting that evil.

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend from New Jersey allow me to utter one sentence in reply to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from West Virginia might as well say that it was not proper that a manufacturer should never sell his goods in the ordinary course of business at a less price wholesale than that at which he sells by retail as to say that a railroad can not charge on the ordinary local traffic a price larger than it charges for the through traffic, which it would not get at all if it charged the same price.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. Is there any equity or justice in charging the shippers from the sea to the Mississippi River 10 cents a bushel and charging the shipper from the extreme West 5 cents a bushel for shipping the same thing?

Mr. HOAR. To state an extreme case of double the price does not test this rule. There may be the greatest equity and justice, and often is great equity and justice, in permitting a carrier to charge more for a short haul than a long haul. It is often not only equity and justice but absolute necessity to charge more for a short haul than a long haul.

Mr. CAMDEN. I ask the Senator to name a case where there would be justice and equity in charging a shipper 10 cents a bushel for carrying a thousand bushels of wheat from Ohio to New York and charging a shipper of the same commodity 5 cents from Chicago to New York.

Mr. HOAR. In the one case he would not get the Chicago haul at all unless he took it at the lower rate; and it is very often true, I believe it is true as a matter of fact at this moment, that while in many cases the short haul is charged more than the long, the short haul is made cheaper by the railroads in consequence of the fact that the long business is also done, although done at a less rate.

Mr. McPHERSON. I would like to illustrate the whole matter in dispute to the Senator from West Virginia. Within one year I have transported or caused to be transported from Chicago to New York twenty car-loads of freight. I am so unfortunate as to own a farm in the vicinity of New York. The railroad passes my door. Those twenty car-loads of freight on a certain road passed my farm. On the same train I loaded five cars of freight from my farm. All went to the same destination, being hitched to the same train; and the cost of transporting the freight 28 miles from my farm to New York was greater than the cost from Chicago to New York, but the rate from my farm to New York was reasonable. The whole twenty-five car-loads of freight were put on board ship for London. If it had not been for the low rate given from Chicago I could not have exported the five car-loads raised upon my farm. I again say that the rate from my farm to New York was a reasonable rate.

Mr. CAMDEN. The Senator must have raised something on his farm that was raised by no other person in this country or he would not have recognized that principle.

Mr. McPHERSON. How could I help but recognize that principle? The State of New Jersey under its laws says that no railroad company shall charge an unreasonable rate of freight. The charter granted by the State fixes the rate beyond which they shall not charge per mile, and in addition to that competition steps in and reduces that limit fixed in the charter to more than 50 per cent. below that, and in addition to that, as I say, I paid a reasonable rate upon the five car-loads of merchandise which were to be exported from my farm. I found no fault with that rate; it was reasonable; but twenty car-loads came from Chicago——

Mr. CAMDEN. Others of the same kind?

Mr. McPHERSON. The same kind of freight and the same quantity in each car.

Mr. CAMDEN. Do you recognize the principle that it was fair to charge more for twenty-eight miles than for a thousand?

Mr. McPHERSON. I recognize this: I say that the proposition presented by the Senator from West Virginia, that it is not right to charge more for a short haul than for a long one, as an abstract principle is correct; but when you undertake to apply any such principle to conditions that are dissimilar, that can not be made alike, and when you undertake to incorporate that in an iron-bound rule of procedure which must govern a commission, that very moment you so disturb the relations of labor and capital and enterprise and transportation that it is impossible for any community of citizens to get on at all. That I say, and I say, moreover, when you undertake to establish the principle in your bill, as you have, you confer on railroads by enactment the power to oppress the people of this country to a greater extent than they are now doing.

I repeat, and I want any Senator on this floor to contradict the proposition if he can, that no measure was ever devised which will help railroads so much as this will if the railroads see fit to help themselves. How? By simply electing whether they will rob the Western country of the power to export their goods, or whether they will consent to go into bankruptcy. There are the two propositions. If they continue the low rate from Chicago, and if they permit goods to be exported, bankruptcy pure and simple is inevitable, because it fixes all local rates. If they decide, on the other hand, to protect themselves they will raise the rate from Chicago, and what becomes of the export trade? There is the whole proposition in a nutshell. That is the common sense of the whole question, and there is no other view to take of it. It admits of no other.

I have no objection, as far as I am concerned, to dealing with this question; but I do object most positively to making a statute and placing it upon the statute-books of the United States in the interest of low transportation, a principle which must needs have a contrary effect.

I am in favor of water transportation, and the time will never come in this country when we can control railroads except by the water routes of the country. Take a map of this country and consider for a moment the geography of the whole question. Chicago is the key to-day to the entire Western world by reason of railroad concentration reaching to all parts of the West. It stands at the head of the water transportation of the country, at the head of the great lakes, connected with the seashore. How? First, by the Erie Canal of very limited proportions, unable to do anything like the amount of business that must necessarily be thrown upon it if the railroads do not enter into the Chicago competition. What else is there? The Welland Canal, the Canadian route of transportation, capable of floating immense quantities to the seaboard, with almost unlimited capacity for transportation. What must be the result? Inevitably a large proportion of the products that we send to-day to the seashore will go to Montreal, and from thence by steamer to Liverpool. What does not go there will go to New York. It will tend to build up the great ports of New York and Montreal at the expense of Philadelphia and Baltimore and every other seaport city.

Let us follow the illustration further. The New York Central Railroad is not within the jurisdiction of this law. It begins and ends in the State of New York. All its competitors from Buffalo to New York are interstate roads, and by reason of this exemption it can bankrupt all its rivals.

Mr. CAMDEN. Is it not already governed by the law of New York?

Mr. McPHERSON. There is no such law as this on the statute-books of the State of New York and never will be, let me tell my friend, because the people of New York will find it not to their advantage if Congress passes this bill.

Mr. CAMDEN. Is not that the rule which the New York railroad commission applies to the New York Central?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know about that. The railroad commission of the State of New York unquestionably has a great influence, but, as I read the law, no absolute power on these matters; but as to the long and short haul business, you will not find a law on the statute-book of New York to-day, neither will you ever find it if by so doing it will cripple the commerce of the State and city of New York.

Mr. CAMDEN. The New York Legislature appointed a railroad commission and that railroad commission has established the rule that no greater sum shall be charged for a shorter than for a longer haul, and the New York Central Railroad is now operating under that rule.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very true. They may give their implied sanction to the work of the commission; perhaps it is for their interest to do it; but when their interest becomes different, what then?

Mr. GEORGE. Has it bankrupted that corporation?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not say that it has. That does not necessarily follow.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to say it would bankrupt the companies.

Mr. McPHERSON. I simply said if the railroad companies from Chicago did not abandon the low rates which to-day do not pay the cost of transportation it would bankrupt railroad companies that engaged in it after being made subject to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Did it bankrupt the railroad from Buffalo?

Mr. McPHERSON. The reason they have not been bankrupted is because there is no provision of law which requires them to make the low rates for all their business.

Mr. GEORGE. The statute which is binding on all of them is the rule laid down by the railroad commission of the State of New York, which they are bound to obey.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know that I understand exactly the purpose the Senator has in view in proposing the question.

Mr. GEORGE. My purpose is to show that the necessary effect of the obligatory law on these railroad companies to charge no more for a shorter distance than for a longer one is not to destroy them, as I understood the argument of the Senator from New Jersey to be.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now I catch the Senator's idea. Simply because the railroad companies have a pool by which they agree to maintain rates from Buffalo. The New York Central Railroad is to-day charging reasonably high rates from Buffalo in order to maintain local rates if the long and short haul principle of this bill is operating in that State.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I understand that the result of the law which compels them to charge no more for a shorter haul than for a longer one is obviated by the fact that they have gone into a pool. There is nothing in this bill which prohibits a pool.

Mr. McPHERSON. Why do you not provide in the bill for prohibiting pools? You propose to establish a short haul and long haul system, and you do not propose in the bill to prohibit pooling.

Let me now ask the Senator a question. If, for instance, the rate of freight for a car-load of wheat from Chicago to New York was fixed at $20, and the rate is often as low as this, and that did not represent the cost of moving it, and it does not to New York, and under existing conditions the railroad company could charge from the next station east of Chicago $50, would you not alter the situation if they were compelled to ship from Chicago at $20 a car, with no power to charge more from local stations? Would it not lessen the earning power of the road?

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer that question by asking the Senator another. Will he tell me by what standard of morals or justice he can justify the imposition on the man he has just named 10 miles this side of Chicago a charge of $50 on his freight, when only $10 is imposed upon the man who lives in Chicago? I should like to ask him also by what rule of morals or justice he can justify the practice of any railroad company in making up its loss, as the Senator said the other day it did, on the through freights from Chicago by overcharging upon customers who live along the line and have no other means of getting their freight to market than by the road. In other words, I would like to know by what rule of right and justice you can justify upon individuals, upon communities that have no competition, the loss sustained by railroads in a war of rates that they make upon each other in carrying freights for less than the actual cost from other points?

It seems to me that the interests of somebody else but the railroads ought to be consulted in the matter. If the railroads of their own will (because there is no law to regulate them now) at certain points where they come in competition, in order to destroy each other, put rates so low as to cause an actual loss to the companies, then I ask how it is right or just that all these railroad companies who have thus entered into war shall make up their losses by extraordinary charges upon those who live along the line of the roads and who have no competition?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not undertake to justify anything of the kind. As a distinct proposition, standing alone, certainly the Senator is right when he says that a service is entitled to certain consideration and compensation. If that service is increased either in length of route, or by whatever process it is increased, most assuredly it would seem to honest and common minds that the compensation ought to be increased. That is a proposition which is an axiom. It is a self-evident truth.

Mr. GEORGE. Put that proposition as an axiom in the law, and then it can not be violated.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, the Senator proposes to apply that to what? He proposes to apply it to a system of railroads. The railroads were built in the first place for the purpose of developing the country. You will find when a railroad is located it takes a position somewhat remote from existing lines in order that the country may be developed and local trade may be developed. The railroad very naturally expects to get a fair compensation for the local business over its line. But you find a great point of distribution like Chicago, where there is competition on the lake, where, as the Senator from Ohio said, you carry grain for 6 cents a bushel between Chicago and New York, then the railroad will abandon the field of competition and leave it to the lakes, provided you make a rule for railroads which you can control, and no rule for lake or water transportation which you can not control. The lake transit has no local stations.

Let us go further. The lakes furnish transportation six months in the year, and if the railroads abandon the field what will the lakes charge? Will it be more or less than they now charge? The natural effect of that is to double the cost of transportation by the lakes. When the lakes are frozen up, the railroads step in and they make their own rate from Chicago, and your bill makes it from every other station. Now, taken together, adding if you please the increased lake transportation and the increased rail transportation in winter, and how much more have you paid for the privilege of putting in your bill this absurd idea?

Mr. GEORGE. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand him now, in answer to the proposition which I made, to say that the effect of competition by railroad is to lessen the water carriage by lake and let the water carriers charge what they please, but when the lake is frozen up, then, having no lake competition, the railroads can charge what they please to New York and make more money than they do now. I understand that to be the position.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In reply to the Senator's question, I stated that the railroads would abandon the business to the lakes. Naturally the lakes, having the business without competition with railroads, would then increase the price. The lakes can run but six months in the year. Then step in the railroads, and they take the business for the other six months at higher rates, and the Senator makes it necessary that the railroad should charge a higher rate, because by his bill he has made every other rate conditioned upon the rate from Chicago.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to say that they frequently carry freight from Chicago to New York at a loss. What is the reason of that proposition?

Mr. MCPHERSON. A railroad company, as I said before, depending on local business for all their profit, find a great distributing station in the West. Lines of railroad radiate from that to all points of the West. The connection is valuable to them. They are forever expecting that some time in the history of railroads the business from that point may be made profitable. They are waiting in expectation of getting something out of it. Unless a railroad line has a connection with some great distributing point, it would be nothing in the world but a local road and a road of no importance.

I want to add here that I think the railroad lines, say from New York to Chicago, can afford to carry freight for less compensation per mile upon long lines than upon short ones. Therefore as to what motives control them I can not say. I am not a railroad man; never have been engaged in railroad business. I only know the common sense of this bill as applied to them purely from a business standpoint. I think I understand that.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey if I understood him correctly to say that from the competing point railroad companies carried freight at less than the cost of transportation?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think it safe to say 50 per cent. of all the freight shipped from Chicago to New York is to-day transported for less than it costs to haul it over the road.

Mr. HARRIS. Then do I understand the Senator from New Jersey that it is just and proper that railroads should be permitted to carry through freights at a loss and recoup for that loss on the local traffic of the people who live on the road and do not live at a competing point? That seems to involve the whole question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not at all; that does not necessarily follow. If the railroad at a point which is not competitive exacts only a fair compensation for doing the business, who can object? Certainly a railroad like any other business enterprise is entitled to pay its fixed charges, the interest upon its bonds, and to give a fair margin of profit to its stockholders. Nobody will deny that to a railroad if properly managed and if its stock properly represents the amount of money the stockholders have in the line. If it represents three or four times that amount it is a different question. But suppose the railroad did not run to Chicago at all; suppose it stopped 20 miles this side of Chicago where there was no competition, I want to ask the Senator if it would be an unreasonable rate to charge from that station enough to compensate the railroad for the work done the public?

Mr. HARRIS. Conceding all the Senator says as to the justice of allowing a railroad corporation to earn money enough to pay its fixed charges and a reasonable profit upon its stock, according to what he has just admitted the railroad company takes upon itself additional burdens by taking through freights at an actual loss, rendering itself therefore less able to pay these charges than it would otherwise be. And if I understand his argument he justifies the railroad companies in doing that in respect to through freights, and justifies their making up that loss and securing the profits that they are to earn on their capital by charging the local traffic that has no competition an extra charge. Does he justify them in doing that in order to pay them a profit and to enable them to carry through shipments at less than the actual cost of transportation?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have already denied the statement in toto, and I can see no reason whatever for the Senator from Tennessee insisting upon it. Suppose a railroad—this local road of which I have spoken—desires to reach the city of Chicago, a great distributing point; this railroad, if you please, is connected with steamship transportation across the water. They are required to furnish loads for the steamships. They can not get freights outside of Chicago to load the ships. Unless they send loads one way they can not get return loads. The steamship arrives from Liverpool loaded with goods to be transported over the line, not all perhaps to Chicago but to local stations along the line. Reasonably and fairly they would expect to get sufficient compensation to compensate them for doing the work, and as I said before, if they take goods to and from Chicago very low in order to maintain their shipment across the ocean it would be justifiable.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator states that 90 per cent. of the business between New York and Chicago is done at less than cost. If a railroad can not make and does not make a reasonable profit on the investment, necessarily that must be made up on the intermediate points, the result of which is absolutely that those intermediate points are charged more than they ought to be charged if the terminal points paid fair and reasonable charges. In other words, every dollar of that loss which occurs at terminal points must in the nature of things be made up by the intermediate points.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am somewhat surprised in this discussion to hear the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Tennessee combating a proposition which they already put in this bill in the fourth section. You find it here in the proviso, "that upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act such common carrier may in special cases" be excepted. In other words, the commission consenting, all competitive points are excepted. In one line you make an arbitrary rule, and in the next line you consent to its violation.

Mr. MAXEY. I hardly think that answer of the Senator from New Jersey will quite do. The fourth section absolutely requires that there shall not be a greater charge for a short haul than a long haul. Then there is an exception allowed to the commissioners. The principle is laid down that there shall be no more charged for a short haul than a long haul; and yet the Senator says that 90 per cent. of the long haul is at a loss. If that be the case, and we say "You shall not charge more for the short haul than the long haul," the short haul must come down correspondingly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The section allows the commission to permit exceptions to your long and short haul rule. Now, then, it remains for us to determine whether the railroad companies will consent to go into bankruptcy or whether they will demand that they may be made rich, and the Senate has given them the power to choose. That is the complaint I make of the bill, and I do not agree with the statement that I have heard on the other side of the Chamber that it was injurious to railroads. I say it is beneficial to railroads. I do not agree with the statement on this side of the Chamber that it will have a tendency to prevent extortion. It legalizes higher rates, call it extortion or what you please.

I approve of the amendment to the original bill as made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. When the committee come here with a bill acknowledging the principle of the long and the short haul and then undertake to limit it to special cases, I say the Senator from West Virginia is right when he undertakes to make general the very thing which the committee wanted to make special. Therefore I indorse the action of the Senator from West Virginia in making general a principle which the committee insist shall be injected into this bill.

But then the Senator from West Virginia and the committee together proceed further. They proceed to put in this bill as a proviso that which gives the commission full power over this whole affair.

I am opposed to the fourth section because it is not understood, and if anything can better demonstrate to reasonable minds that it is not understood than the debates that have occurred here I think it would be very hard to find it. I am opposed to it because I think that in a commission bill, conferring on a commission absolute power to adjudge grievances, the true policy of the Senate is to leave it with that commission, and if it can not find it possible under the power given to do away with the abuses that are complained of, then I propose to offer an amendment which will make it necessary for that commission to report at the next session of Congress whether it is practicable in their view of the case, after considering the whole subject, to have Congress pass a law acknowledging and recognizing the short-haul system, and let us incorporate it in intelligent legislation. I am too conservative in my mind and in my action to undertake to ingraft an iron-bound provision of law to regulate a commission to do a certain thing when you have given them the absolute power to regulate it themselves. I do not wish to burden the labor interest of the country or the transportation interest unnecessarily, arbitrarily, and foolishly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate is in response to a popular demand for some control over interstate commerce. Whatever may have been the original idea about the power of the General Government over interstate commerce as provided for in the Constitution, the courts have so enlarged it and amplified it that I suppose it may be assumed that over matters pertaining to interstate commerce the Government of the United States is pretty nearly or quite absolute in its jurisdiction. So there need be no controversy, I suppose, as to the power of the General Government. The question for us to determine is simply one of policy, and then having determined that, one of detail.

In this bill as it came from the committee the distinguishing feature in it from other bills which have from time to time been presented was the provision for a commission. The commission is given extraordinary powers, powers which I venture to say were never given to any other commission in any other bill. After having given this commission these extraordinary powers, as if afraid that the commission would not exercise them with proper discretion, in a proper manner, the committee insert section 4 of the bill.

The whole bill is an experiment. There is not a Senator on the floor who does not know it is a very doubtful question whether we ought to interfere with the commerce of the country in this way. I venture to say also that but for the very fact, which is recognized by the Senators on this floor, that there is a popular demand back among the people, who believe they have not been properly treated by the railroads, there would be no legislation proposed upon this subject.

What will be the effect of the whole bill nobody can determine. What will be the effect of the fourth section? We have a variety of opinions expressed on this floor. One Senator says it will absolutely destroy the commerce between the Atlantic seaboard and the Northwest and the Western States. Another Senator declares that it will do equity between the people and compel the railroads to do that which they are by the common law obliged to do. It seems to me that we have lost sight of the fact that there is great danger that that which stimulates commerce and trade, that which has built up the great West, the center, and the East alike, competition will be destroyed.

This bill has been discussed, and especially the provision to which I allude in the fourth section, as if all the competing points in this country were Chicago, Milwaukee, Saint Louis, with a few other places of considerable importance. Mr. President, I have here a list of the competitive points in some of the States, not a full list, but a list showing at least that there is more to be considered than the welfare of Chicago, more to be considered than the welfare of Saint Louis, more than a question of how this will affect the people of Milwaukee and the surrounding country. I find that in the State of Michigan there are twenty-two competitive points, railroad competitive points, twenty-two points to be affected by the provisions of this bill. In the State of Ohio I find there are eighty-three competitive points, in the State of Indiana eighty-two competitive points, in the State of Illinois forty competitive points, in the State of Virginia twenty-two, Kentucky twenty-six, North Carolina twenty, Tennessee eighteen, South Carolina sixteen, Georgia sixteen, Alabama eighteen, Florida sixteen, Louisiana twelve. No calculation is here made for the State of Missouri, or the State of Minnesota, the State of Iowa, the State of Nebraska, or the State of Colorado, or the Territory of Dakota, and other sections of the country where competition prevails.

Mr. SPOONER. There are thirty-nine competitive points in Wisconsin, forty-four in Iowa, and twenty-six in Illinois.

Mr. TELLER. And a great many other points besides those I have mentioned, and I presume it would not be an exaggeration to say that this bill affects a thousand points in the United States—a thousand places at least where competition is active, created by railroads either because of the hostility of one with the other, or of antagonism one with the other, or because of water ways or other reasons. There, where competition is sharp and active, it is to be destroyed by the fourth section of this bill.

I have supposed, as I have stated, that this bill was in response to a popular demand of the people and not of the railroads. I have supposed this legislation was to be based upon the supposition that it was the people of the United States who were being benefited and not the railroads. I have heard here to-day what I consider conclusive to my mind that it is the railroads that are to be benefited by the destruction of the competition all over the land, and they will be enabled to put up the prices according to their own terms. We have an illustration of it which the Senator from Ohio gave us. He said that the competition had destroyed the lake freight. It is proposed by this to prevent that competition, as I understand. If you can prevent competition between the lakes and the railroads you must prevent competition between the railroads themselves. I know upon the first blush it seems difficult to say that you may haul a car of freight from the city of Chicago to the city of New York for the same price that you haul it from Columbus, in Ohio, or Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania. I know that the people who live on the Atlantic border, who were fortunate enough to get there early and to locate themselves there and to maintain their status and to be there, contend that they ought not to be brought in competition with the great Northwest. But we are not legislating for any section of the country; we are legislating for the interest of the whole broad land. We are not legislating for the railroads of New England or New York, or the railroad lines between Chicago and New York, or any other cities; we are legislating for the protection of commerce; and it is our duty to legislate in such a way as to build it up, increase it, and not hamper it and destroy it.

Mr. President, it is said that there is but a little through traffic on these roads and that they might not make much by it; but you must remember that while from the city of Chicago they may bring but a small amount of grain to New York city, they take back in return vast quantities of supplies used by the people in the West.

The honorable Senator from Ohio said it was a question how this would affect the foreign commerce of the country, it was a question whether we should not by this kind of legislation put our hands upon the producers of the Northwest in such a way that they would be compelled to suspend shipments to the seaboard and thus the export abroad would be curtailed and cut short. Why, Mr. President, if you will look over the reports of the Government you will find that 72 per cent. of all the exports are the products of the farm and the forest. From whence do they come? Where do you raise the cattle, and where do you raise the corn, and where do you raise the wheat exported but in the Northwest? How will the people of Massachusetts be fed, with very nearly 2,000,000 people and yet raising less than 40,000 bushels of wheat in that State in 1880—how will they be fed in such a manner that they may create in their mills subjects for exportation unless they can be fed with the cheap food brought from the West by virtue of the long haul?

I wish to call attention to the fallacy that has been repeated over and over again on this floor during this debate. It is not a question whether you are paying too little from Chicago to New York, but it is a question whether you are paying too much from Pittsburgh to New York; and when the railroad company carries from Pittsburgh to New York at a reasonable rate no man has a right to say that it may not carry from Chicago at the same rate or even less. It has been assumed in this debate that whenever a railroad company made a long haul for less than it charged for a short haul it was an extortion on the man who paid for the short haul. That is not the logical sequence; that is not true as a general rule.

I need not say to the Senate that every railroad company that is managed as it should be managed has a variety of ways in which to use the surplus that comes into its treasury. It has its mortgage upon which it pays interest. It has its stock upon which it pays dividends. It has its collateral branches to support and keep alive. It has its cars to support and keep up; it has its track to keep in order. A railroad company properly managed and properly officered divides all of these upon its books. The railroad company is offered in a Western city freight, and the officer looks at it and says, "I can make upon that a certain amount, not a percentage large enough, not enough money on that alone, or if I could do all the business the line could do at that rate it would not be enough to pay all my expenses, but the profit on that will be enough to meet the interest on my mortgage; the profit on that will be enough to meet some other specific fund provided for by the railroad company." So he takes it; it goes to Pittsburgh or somewhere else, and there he says to freight offered, "I can get for this freight more," in the first place because the product that it finds at Pittsburgh is of a character that will stand and bear a higher rate than the product at a place in the far West will.

Mr. President, a few years ago in the State which I in part represent we had a surplus of wheat. That may seem strange from "the American Desert," but we had a surplus of wheat. There was no market for it, and it would not bear the price that the Illinois farmer paid for transporting his wheat. It could not bear a price proportionate to that paid by the citizen of Ohio on his wheat; but the railroad companies said: "Here, we will take your wheat and we will carry it at a certain figure to the seaboard;" and they carried it not without profit to the railroad companies, but with a divided profit, small as it was, to the farmer. He had raised enough for his own use, and this was the surplus; and although the money was little that he obtained for it, yet it went to swell the aggregate of the earnings of the people and enabled the people of that State to purchase of the manufactured articles of New England, of the fruits of the South and of the West and all that goes to make life comfortable in this country. Everybody participated in that profit. It was not a profit alone to Colorado. It was a profit to the railroad companies; it was a profit to the manfacturers in New England; it was a profit to the fruit-raisers in California and in Florida and other regions of the country, because it was divided out among the people.

The honorable Senator from Ohio said that there was danger that it would interfere with our exports. I think he is right, and yet he said he thought, as I understand him, that this provision ought to be left in the bill. I think there is danger that it will interfere with our exports. Our export of wheat last year fell off. As the Senator from New Jersey said, the import into Great Britain of wheat from India has practically destroyed the market there for American wheat. With the falling price of wheat in Great Britain we are to seek cheaper transportation to the Old World and not dearer. In November last wheat was selling in the city of Liverpool within half a cent of the market price in the city of Chicago.

We have produced in the United States vast quantities of corn; we have sent that corn from Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas to the East, either to be fed to their stock or to the people; and we have shipped it abroad. It is a great crop; nearly 2,000,000,000 bushels; it can not be used in the country where it is raised. Iowa raises 250,000,000 bushels of corn in a year. It must seek in some form a foreign market, either in the shape of alcohol or in the shape of meats or as human food or as food for the stock of Great Britain or some other portion of the world. We have had practically up to this hour no competitor in the production of corn. To-day there appears a competitor of the corn-raisers of the Northwest. India, until recently not a raiser of wheat, until recently raising no corn or wheat, has commenced to plant and has planted this year vast fields of corn.

We are not only coming in competition with India as a wheat-raiser or she coming in competition with us, but also as the raiser of corn and as the raiser of cotton. All these things indicate that to the seaboard from the extreme West you have got to have cheap freights, and if you do not you will lose your export trade, and that means simply a condition of affairs such as we have seen heretofore when we were steadily running in debt to foreign countries, buying what we could not pay for and sending abroad our bonds and other evidences of indebtedness.

I said a few moments since that it was not a question of Chicago or New York; it was a question of all the competing points that I have mentioned. It is a question that interests the people of all parts of the country, for competition at Atlanta, in Georgia, is competition to all the people who live in that region of country as much as it is at Peoria, as much as it is at Chicago or any other city. All the people thereabouts are benefited by it.

You propose by this short-haul provision, as I understand it, to say to the railroad companies, "Fix your price from all these points, and then your intermediate prices must be of the same character." I know, of course, that this provision does not say absolutely, "You shall carry correspondingly as cheap from Columbus as you do from Chicago;" but I know the principle is the same, and the very same argument can be made why they should carry it per mile pro rata, save and except, perhaps, some question of terminal facilities, and the same argument can be made why they should not be allowed to carry it as they see fit.

All that this commission ought to inquire, if left with full control of this, is, is the rate from Columbus, Ohio, to New York a reasonable rate, not is it too cheap from Chicago? I want to repeat again that I deny the assertion I heard made on the other side of the floor to-day—and I have heard it on this—that necessarily because the railroads took freight from Chicago at half the price they took it from Columbus, they lost on the Chicago freight, or that it was an extortionate charge from Columbus. For the reasons I have stated a railroad company has a right to say, "I will do business from a certain point with a profit less than from another." It has as much right to do that as a man who does business in this country has to prefer one purchaser to another. He has a right to say, "I will yield my profit in this case to my purchaser; I will yield one-half my profit to the man who has brought the freight to me," possibly because of competition or frequently because the freight that he brings is not able to bear the extreme price that freight from another point may. One man may raise wheat that he may sell for a dollar. Another man may not be able to raise wheat and sell it for a dollar. One man may be able to produce a manufactured article cheaper than it can be produced by another because the advantages are with him. This principle that is applied to the people of the West has a tendency to build up the great cities of the East to the exclusion of the West; and when you have done that, when you have destroyed the prosperity of the West, where will you get the business for the railroads? When you have done that, where will you get the purchasers for your manufactured goods? Where will you get a market for the products of the East if you can not send them inland?

Mr. President, I intend to vote for this bill. I do not suppose it will be put in any shape that I shall not give it my vote. I propose to vote for it, not believing it to be perfect. I propose to vote for it, doubting very much the policy of any legislation on the subject. I shall vote for it in obedience to what I recognize to be a public demand all over the country. If the bill should prove to be what its friends believe, we shall all be rejoiced; but upon all questions where there can be so much doubt as upon the question of introducing this measure of the long or short haul, I think the friends of the bill ought to be willing, in view of the fact that this is a tentative measure at most, to agree that all doubtful questions of that character should be eliminated from the bill, and that the bill might have a fair trial with the great powers given to this commission, and let the commission come here at a subsequent day and say to us in the light of their experience, in the light of their observation, whether we can adopt this principle or whether we can not, and not attempt to put in the bill that which must make it obnoxious to a great portion of the people of the country and must render its success as a controller of interstate commerce exceedingly doubtful.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate. Nearly two years ago, on December 19, 1884, I suggested a provision on this subject. I simply desire to submit the views of the question I then presented and ask for their reading.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The practice of giving extremely low rates between certain points and making up the loss by high charges on other communities is simple robbery under the forms of law, if the law permits it. It is not in the power of human reason to successfully controvert this. No amount of ingenious sophistry can even obscure it.

But, independent of its abstract injustice, the consequences to the public are pernicious in the extreme. One city or town is built up at the expense of another. One community is enriched or favored by unjust and unequal impositions on another. Jealousies are engendered and illegitimate and baneful rivalries fostered. The struggle for advancement and superiority between rival communities is degraded from an honorable competition in which success is sought by superior energy and business management into a reliance upon favors to be received from railroad companies and dishonorable and unmanly subserviency in order to gain them.

Mr. President, it is a marked tendency in modern economic and industrial life that population and business of all kinds concentrate in large cities. Much more than one-half of the population of Great Britain is crowded into cities and towns. The tendency in our country is in the same direction. I do not regard this as desirable. On the contrary, I think it would be far better for the happiness and prosperity of my countrymen if wealth and enterprise—all kinds of business—were more diffused all over the land. Producer and consumer should be brought nearer together, that the interchange of commodities, the barter and exchange of the products of agriculture and manufactures should be carried on with as little intervention of middlemen as practicable. The profits of the workers would be increased and the cost to consumers diminished. There would also be more homogeneousness in our population; a greater knowledge of economic processes would be extended beyond the limits of the class engaged in each particular business. There would be fewer specialists, with little or no information outside of the particular work in which they are engaged. There are many considerations connected with this subject worthy of the attention of the Senate. I do not propose to go further now. I may on some other occasion state some of them.

Now, Mr. President, the practice of railroad companies in violating the provision I am now discussing, charging discriminating rates as between different places, tends greatly to this aggregation and concentration of population, wealth, and business in a few favored places, and for that reason should be prohibited. The result I condemn, it must be remembered, is not the creation of new wealth by railroad companies, but it is merely the concentration and aggregation of wealth created by others at favored places and in the hands of favored individuals at the expense of other places and other persons, and that, too, in many instances by the ruin of those who created it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wishto express my own judgment in regard to this amendment. When we consider the extent of the railroad interest of the United States, and the fact that it controls and governs almost absolutely the commerce of the whole country and its productions, we must see the importance and the necessity of considering the local trade of the country, the transportation that concerns the people who live at the intermediate points throughout the United States. It should be regarded and equitably dealt with as a question of paramount importance. This is a very plain fact, and I am surprised that it has not received universal assent, that to allow any power to build up one community at the expense of another, to allow the productions of New York or of Colorado or of the great West to be transported without cost to those people and at the cost of the people intermediate between those points, is an evil that can not be tolerated.

Why should you destroy the people of the intermediate territory by imposing upon them the entire cost of transporting the productions of countries at the terminal points? And if you do not allow them to transport their entire productions at the cost of the intermediate people, why should you allow them to saddle on the latter an improper and unjust proportion of the cost? You must approximate it with some degree of propriety; and the question presented in this amendment is whether the entire cost of the transportation of the productions of extreme terminal points shall be imposed by anything, whether by law or competition, or any other wise, upon another and a different community.

If we say, as has been said in this argument, that railroads are built for the convenience of the local trade, and that their charges are to be borne by those people for their own local convenience, and admit that to be true, why shall it be said that they shall be charged the entire cost, or any unreasonable proportion of the cost, of that business which it may be expedient for them to do at other and distant places by reason of new connections? I can not see that there is anything in this proposition but the simple question of adjusting charges with some degree of equity. Admitting the whole argument that the extreme terminal points must be provided for, that the foreign commerce of the country must be regarded and such rates imposed as will allow through trade, and that there is a difference between the rates for through trade and local trade, there must be some reasonable proportion of it, some mode of justice, something besides the mere arbitrary imposition of rates without reference to the interest of the communities who are to pay those rates.

But what then? You may destroy the entire interest of the intermediate country, you may place them at a disadvantage in respect to their productions and their market rates by leaving them entirely in the power of an arbitrary rate fixed without reference to the cost and the value of their productions in the market by reason of an unreasonable cost of transportation imposed upon them. That, I understand, is the evil proposed to be remedied in the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. It is that these people shall not be discriminated against in the sale of their productions by being required to bear an unjust and unfair proportion of the cost of transportation, which must be taken from the market value of their productions.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a little manual, a report of a railroad commission, by John H. Savage, of Tennessee, from which I will read:

The railroad is a stranger and a new-comer among men. Fifty-five years ago there were neither railroads nor railroad laws. There is nothing in the world's history like the beginning and progress of railroad building, investment, and power. Railroads have worked greater changes in the affairs of men in forty years than the bloody work of conquerors ever effected in many centuries. They now exist in all nations where wealth and intelligence are found. In Europe all railroads are under the control of law, and many are owned and operated by the governments. The loud complaint of railroad employés that legislation, courts, and juries, if allowed, will destroy them, is false, and is like the charge of the tyrant Pisistratus, who inflicted bloody wounds upon himself and charged his opponents with having done it, and the people therefore gave him a guard of soldiers, which he used to enslave them.

It is estimated that there are more miles of railway in the United States than in all the rest of the world. There are about two thousand five hundred of these railroads. Poor's Railroad Manual estimates the total length of all railroads in the United States, in 1884, at 149,183 miles, and railroad building progressing at the rate of more than 6,000 miles per year, and at a cost of near $500,000,000; so that before the end of this year there will be enough railroad track to go around the world six times and more. The total value of these roads is $7,495,471,311, equal to about one-sixth of all the property and money of fifty millions of people. These roads tax the people annually for transportation $823,772,924, and divide $102,056,548 annually among themselves after paying all expenses.

The United States has a railroad commissioner to supervise the railroads incorporated by Congress. The commissioner, in his report for 1883, reports in reference to the legislation of the States as well as of Congress. He recommends national legislation for the regulation of commerce between the States and foreign countries, and State regulation for commerce within a State. He reports eighteen hundred thousand persons employed by these corporations in operating and building railroads. Of these (see pages 17, 145-54) "fourteen hundred thousand persons are employed in operating these roads, and probably four hundred thousand upon construction of new lines."

It is estimated that Congress has given favored corporations about 200,000,000 acres of the public lands. The report aforesaid (page 49) shows that the Northern Pacific (of which Jay Cooke and Henry Villard were builders) received 31,323,098.49 acres, which (exclusive of town lots) sells as high as $30 per acre and none lower than $2.60, the average price being $4.02 per acre; making $122,918,858 given this one railroad which sum is about fifteen millions more than one-half of all the taxable property assessed in Tennessee.

It is estimated that the people of Tennessee pay railroads annually more than $6 for each man, woman, and child, and pay the State for taxes less than $1 per capita. The railroad saves time and furnishes great facilities for commerce and travel, but collects from the people vast sums, transcending all collections in the past history of this country. The railroad is a grand thing—and so would be an emperor or king with a court ruled by discriminations and favorites to make some rich and honorable and others poor and dependent. Americans want neither king, court, nor corporation that is not under the control of law as absolutely as the humblest citizen.

FACTS WORTHY TO BE NOTED BY THE PATRIOT, STATESMAN, AND READER OF HISTORY.

1. The 1,800,000 employés are almost absolutely under the control of railroad officials as if organized as an army.

2. They are about six times more than Napoleon was able to command when he disposed of crowns and kingdoms and made all Europe tremble.

3. They are about forty times more than any army commanded by Alexander, Pompey, or Cæsar.

4. These corporations are said to be controlled, and in great part owned, by a few men—less than a dozen—headed by Vanderbilt, Gould, Huntingdon, and others like them.

5. The annual investment of $500,000,000 in railroad building exceeds investments in any other business, and shows that railroad building is the most profitable business in America. Capitalists are not fools and do not throw money away; they put it where it will do most good.

6. The amount invested—the appropriation of hundreds of millions of the public domain, once the common property of all the people—the 400,000 men now engaged in building railroads, show that railroad building is progressing as rapidly as the general welfare demands.

7. The merchants of Liverpool built the first railroad in 1830 from Liverpool to Manchester, which the Parliament of England had refused to build.

8. Capitalists and business men will build railroads to all points where the trade and commerce of a people make them necessary, and not an exhaustive and expensive luxury.

9. It is unwise and unjust to build railroads by the issuance of bonds or by taxation levied upon the people, because in all instances of this kind the people pay for the roads and speculators and railroad officials soon own them.

10. It is estimated that $700,000,000 worth of lumber is cut from American forests annually. The railroads get the lion's share of this sum. This process will leave but little valuable timber for the next generation.

11. The railroad is called a civilizer. It is certainly a centralizer. It builds up centers at the expense of the circumference. Roman armies made the provinces tributary to the city. Railroads, by rebates, discriminations, special rates, greater charges for short hauls than for longer ones, concentrate commerce, business, wealth, and population at favored points.

These facts are not suggested in hostility to railroads, but that proper legislation may be enacted to prevent these wrongs by the roads, so far as practicable.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is the chairman, say in their report on page 199:

It is well understood in commercial circles that the Standard Oil Company brooks no competition; that its settled policy and firm determination are to crush out all who may be rash enough to enter the field against it; that it hesitates at nothing in the accomplishment of this purpose, in which it has been remarkably successful, and that it fitly represents the acme and perfection of corporate greed in its fullest development. A recent public exposition of its methods comes from Ohio, where the corporation operates the Macksburg Pipe Line, which carries oil to the Cleveland and Marietta Railroad. This road is in the hands of a receiver appointed by the United States circuit court.

Complaint having been made to Judge Baxter of that court, he investigated the rates charged for the transportation of oil by the receiver, which resulted in his prompt removal by the court. It was found that while the receiver was charging all independent shippers 35 cents per barrel, the rate to the pipe line in question was but 10 cents per barrel. It appeared that the Standard Oil Company owned the pipes through which oil is conveyed to the road from wells owned by individuals, with the exception of certain pipes owned and used by George Rice and carrying oil from his wells. To get rid of this competition the assistance of the receiver was sought and obtained. The company offered to give the railroad $3,000 worth of business each month, while Rice could give but $300 worth. If its demands were not complied with it threatened to extend its pipe line from Macksburg to the river at Marietta. What those demands were was stated as follows in a letter filed by the receiver as part of his defense:

"The Standard Oil Company threatens to store and afterward pipe all oils under its control unless you make the following arrangements, namely: You shall make a uniform rate of 35 cents per barrel for all persons excepting the Standard Oil Company; you shall charge them 10 cents per barrel for their oil, and also pay them 25 cents per barrel out of the 35 cents collected of other shippers."

No comment is needed upon this most impudent and outrageous proposition. If matters have reached such a pass that this enormously wealthy corporation, not content with the advantage of paying less than 30 per cent. of the rates charged its occasional competitors, is in a position to demand of a railroad which may desire the privilege of carrying oil for others 70 per cent. of the revenue received in that way, the least that Congress can do is to insist upon publicity of rates, and make effective provision for letting in the full light of day upon arrangements of this character.

I will also read a few extracts from some of the most important witnesses who appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee. Said Mr. Simon Sterne, on page 78 of that report:

UNIFORMITY OF ACCOUNTS.

The next question is, "Should corporations engaged in interstate commerce be required to adopt a uniform system of accounts?" Upon that point my answer is emphatically in the affirmative. The Government owes this small element of protection against fraud to the investing public. The system of railway accounts has been a mystery even to railway accountants; that is to say, a Pennsylvania railway accountant was, until recently, absolutely in the dark as to how the New York Central kept its accounts. The Reading's accountant could not tell how the Jersey Central kept its books.

The books of each railway company were a sealed mystery to all save the head of its book-keeping department. Each particular road had its own system of accounts. Indeed, it was testified before a railway committee that some $700,000 expended during one particular year by the Erie Railway as a corruption fund and for legal expenses was carried to the India-rubber account, and thus found its way into the construction account. So that part of the construction account of some of these railways is what they expend annually upon legislative committees, or in influencing or preventing legislation, and in the law courts.

The New York Central Railway Company in 1869 doubled its stock, watered its stock by 50 per cent., on the amalgamation or consolidation of the New York Central and Hudson River roads, issuing two dollars for one of the entire stock of these several companies. They had, therefore, after this consolidation, a stock account which was out of all harmony with their construction account, and for ten years following, every year varying, from 3 to 8 per cent. of this water was artificially carried into the construction account, so that eventually the construction account and the capital account balanced; and there is therefore a construction account wholly fictitious as to a trifle of $40,000,000 or thereabouts in the New York Central books.

As a system of book-keeping it had to balance, and therefore the balance was forced by carrying some years 3, some 5, and some 8 per cent. of this water into the construction account, as though so much construction had been carried on that year, and eventually the two accounts balanced. In the same way the balances were forced in the Erie Railway Company when Mr. Gould took $40,000,000 of the stock of the Erie Railway Company out of its books, sold it on the street, and appropriated the money to his own use, and there was not a dollar's worth of construction to represent it, and when a reorganization took place the balance of the Erie Railway Company was forced to meet that violence done to the stock account. So that in some of these railway corporations their system of keeping accounts is a mystery to everybody outside of the corporation.

I now read from Mr. E. B. Thurber's statement:

EXCESSIVE CAPITALIZATION.

A good illustration of how excessive capitalization operates as a mortgage upon the industry of the country and as a machinery for concentrating wealth in few hands wherever the power exists to impose rates for transportation which will yield dividends on watered stock, is found in the following table, showing what the dividends have amounted to (with interest compounded annually) on the $47,000,000 of watered stock put into the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad in 1867–'68 by the Vanderbilt management:

Watered stock issued in 1867 and 1868 by the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, $47,000,000.

Dividend on this watered stock at 8 per cent. for the year 1869, $3,760,000 (1869).
Interest on 1869 dividend at 7 per cent., $263,000; with 1870 dividend, $3,760,000, $7,783,000 (1870).
Interest on $7,783,000 at 7 per cent., $544,000; with 1871 dividend, $3,760,000, $12,087,000 (1871).
Interest on $12,087,000 at 7 per cent., $846,000; with 1872 dividend, $3,760,000, $16,693,000 (1872).
Interest on $16,693,000 at 7 per cent., $1,168,000; with 1873 dividend, $3,760,000, $21,621,000 (1873).
Interest on $21,621,000 at 7 per cent., $1,513,000; with 1874 dividend, $3,760,000, $26,894,000 (1874).
Interest on $26,894,000 at 7 per cent., $1,882,000; with 1875 dividend, $3,760,000, $32,536,000 (1875).
Interest on $32,536,000 at 7 per cent., $2,777,000; with 1876 dividend, $3,760,000, $38,573,000 (1876).
Interest on $38,573,000 at 7 per cent., $2,700,000; with 1877 dividend, $3,760,000, $45,033,000 (1877).
Interest on $45,033,000 at 7 per cent., $3,152,000; with 1878 dividend, $3,760,000, $51,945,000 (1878).
Interest on $51,945,000 at 7 per cent., $3,636,000; with 1879 dividend, $3,760,000, $59,341,000 (1879).
Interest on $59,341,000 at 7 per cent., $4,153,000; with 1880 dividend, $3,760,000, $67,254,000 (1880).
Interest on $67,254,000 at 6 per cent., $4,035,000; with 1881 dividend, $3,760,000, $75,049,000 (1881).
Interest on $75,049,000 at 6 per cent., $4,502,000; with 1882 dividend, $3,760,000, $83,311,000 (1882).
Interest on $83,311,000 at 6 per cent., $4,998,000; with 1883 dividend, $3,760,000, $92,070,000 (1883).
Interest on $92,070,000 at 6 per cent., $5,524,000; with 1884 dividend, *$2,820,000, $100,414,000 (1884).

VANDERBILT RICHER, THE PEOPLE POORER, FROM STOCK-WATERING.

In other words, if the capital had been maintained at the amount then outstanding, and the rates of transportation had been reduced to a point which would only have yielded the same dividends upon the capital then existing (which, by the way, had been previously largely watered), the public would have been about $100,000,000 richer, and Mr. Vanderbilt and his associates $100,000,000 poorer.

* * * * * * *

ENORMOUS ACCUMULATIONS OF WEALTH.

Never in the history of the world have we seen such enormous accumulations of wealth suddenly acquired by any class as we have seen in this country during the last quarter of a century through the carrier thus taxing all other classes in the community.

PERSONAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Within twenty-five years the Vanderbilt estate has grown from $5,000,000 to over $200,000,000. Within the same time the Central Pacific quartet have, it is estimated, extorted from the public more than $250,000,000. Twenty-five years ago Jay Gould was not rated even as a single millionaire; within two years he exhibited to an admiring group of Wall street friends railroad securities, variously estimated, worth from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, and it was announced that this was only a portion of his gains.

The men connected with our transportation system who are rated at $10,000,000 and upwards are too numerous to mention, and by far the greater portion of this has been accumulated within twenty years. Yet railroad men when confronted with these facts meet them with the assertion that rates are reasonable, that the transportation of this country is done cheaper than any other country in the world, and that a majority of all the railroads of the country are unremunerative to their owners. It is true that wherever water competition prevails rates are reasonable, and fortunately for the people of the United States a large portion of our country is thus favored.

EXTENT OF STOCK WATERING.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any intimate or definite information in reference to the amount of watered stock in railroads and things of that nature?

Mr. THURBER. No, sir; I do not think anybody has in particular. I heard Mr. Poor's estimate. I know there are so many instances where that is so very much short of the mark that it is absurd. I think he said that the New York Central was about half water. Why, the New York Central had been watered three times prior to 1867–'68, and at that time they doubled it. They put forty-seven millions of water into the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad in 1867–'68, and they paid 8 per cent. dividends on that forty-seven millions until last year, which was the first year they dropped their dividends down.

I think last year they paid 6 per cent., and I guess they have now got down to 4. I know I have figured up what the dividends on that water had amounted to in thirteen years with interest compounded annually. It was $81,000,000. I think that that is a pretty good indication of where one-hundred-millionaires were made. That was for thirteen years on the watered stock of that road. I think I have a tabular statement of it here, if I am not mistaken. It was only carried up to 1881. In 1881 it was $75,049,000; and the next year, 1882, put it over $80,000,000.

Mr. William F. King said:

The great drawback to our railroad system is the attempt to pay interest on its enormous capitalization. Of course I am not as experienced as Mr. Fink in these matters. But say a railroad in the West, or anywhere in the country, cost $12,000 a mile to build. They stock it for $25,000 a mile, and $25,000 of bonds are issued, and they may get a railroad land grant in addition, and yet, before they have finished the road, it is bankrupt. The West Shore road cost a large amount of money, and before it was finished it was bankrupt.

*In 1884 the rate of dividend was reduced to 6 per cent., which on the $47,000,000 of water amounts to but $2,820,000, instead of $3,760,000, which is the amount at the rate of 8 per cent.

Said Mr. John O'Donnell, a member of the board of railroad commissioners of the State of New York:

Mr. O'DONNELL. I will read what is stated in Poor's Manual for 1884, pages 3 and 4, on that subject:

"The increase of share capital and indebtedness of all the companies for three years ending December 31, 1883, was $2,093,433,054, the cost of the new mileage, as represented by share capital and debt, being about $70,000 per mile. The increase in the three years of the funded debts of all the companies was $924,165,440; of their floating debts, $169,880,406; of the two, $1,094,045,846. It is not probable that the cost of the mileage constructed in the three years equaled the increase of funded and floating debts by at least the sum of $200,000,000. The cost of mileage constructed certainly did not exceed $30,000 to the mile. The whole increase of the share capital, $999,387,208, and a portion of the funded debt, was in excess of cost of construction. If it be assumed that the cost in money of all the roads in operation in the United States in 1883 did not exceed, as it certainly did not, the amount of their funded and floating debts $3,787,410,728, the actual investment was a most profitable one. The net earnings for the year were $336,911,884, a sum equaling about 9 per cent. on their cost. If the fictitious capital could be eliminated from their accounts their success as investments would have no parallel."

I now quote from an article entitled The Manchester Ship Canal, published in the Westminster Review for July, 1885:

Although the legislature had conferred no monopoly upon railway companies, it was found that they were creating a practical monopoly for themselves. They were combining with one another, and were becoming a great power in the state—so great a power, indeed, that one well-known authority had said, "If the state will not manage the railways the railways will manage the state." But the management, or "regulation," to use the statutory word, of railways was a matter of very great difficulty—of such difficulty, indeed, that up to the present time, although Parliament has been trying her "'prentice hand" at the regulation of railways for the last thirty years, it has not yet found out any excellent method of doing so. It tried and abandoned Lord Dalhousie's commission. It tried and abandoned the courts of law; and it is now, at considerable cost and without producing much satisfaction, experimenting with the railway commissioners.

Mr. President, here is a vast and controlling interest which ought to be protected, which ought to be dealt fairly with by the laws which we enact; for certainly there should be reasonable compensation allowed and reasonable profit to those who may invest their money in these great corporations. But that the people who live in much the larger portion of the territory of this country, that by far the larger portion of the producers and the manufacturers of the United States who live at intermediate points should be protected against an unfair imposition of transportation rates which may disadvantage them in the markets of the world, is the most manifest proposition and the most important duty which now rests upon us. The committee in this bill have provided simply that there shall be no discrimination in this one respect, that there shall be no greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance by these lines.

The amendment of the Senator from West Virginia only goes to that extent with a limitation; and when you strike out "the original point of departure" it leaves that to apply to the roads in general, and that I think is exactly where we ought to stand without any amendment which may limit it, which may render it doubtful, which may deprive it of its full effect in protecting the intermediate points, to that extent at least that there shall not be a greater compensation for a shorter distance than for a longer one. If we try that and find we can go further, certainly the interests of the country will demand it.

The amendment of the Senator from Vermont seems to be difficult to understand as to its precise effect on the great body of interstate commerce, which necessarily comes from intermediate and not from terminal points. It proposes to make the law read that all freight "from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival shall not pay a greater amount for a shorter than for a longer distance." To me the effect of this language seems to be nearly if not exactly the same as the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia. There can not be, I think, a pound of freight on any railroad anywhere which does not depart from the same original place of departure or arrive at the same place of arrival.

Every station on every railroad is the same original place of departure and the same place of arrival for all the freight which departs from or arrives at that station, and the sum total of all places where freight is received and from which it is forwarded must embrace the total of the road's business; and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont expressly says that both for freight from the same original point of departure and the same place of arrival there shall be no greater charge for the shorter distance than for the longer; but I prefer the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, because it is more easily understood.

Judge Cooley, a distinguished man and a thoughtful observer, makes the following statement on the subject of railroad legislation:

I shall venture to say, also, that there are in the country two distinct and very dissimilar classes of railroad men, one of which would manage the roads so as to make them legitimately useful to both the stockholders and the public, while the other embraces men who find their profit in the manipulation of stocks, whether at the stock board or elsewhere. The two characters may of course be combined in the same man, but the stock speculator is supposed to carry into his road management an inordinate and unscrupulous greed, and he stands in the public mind as the representative of all, and is assumed to be a man of great wealth, which, by tricks and extortion, has been taken from the pockets of the public, and requiring legislation to hold him in check. But it is matter of public notoriety that this second class has thriven rather from the handling of wrecks than of substantial properties, and that their business has largely consisted in possessing themselves of failing or bankrupt concerns and loading them by consolidation or otherwise upon better enterprises, to the ruin, in many cases, of those thus loaded. But the man who finds his profit in "systems into ruin hurled," where the stockholder and the public are alike sufferers, may feel little or no interest in better management than now exists.

The injury inflicted on the country by such men can not be estimated. They should be regarded as the enemies of the people.

Mr. President, before concluding my remarks I will call the attention of the Senate to the following observations of the committee on a subject of great importance which claims careful consideration:

FICTITIOUS CAPITALIZATION.

Another serious evil incident to the prevailing methods of railroad management, and one which is especially conspicuous in connection with the construction of unnecessary roads is fictitious capitalization, popularly known as stock-watering. This pernicious practice has unquestionably done more to create and keep alive a popular feeling of hostility against the railroads of the United States than any other one cause. It has been the favorite device adopted to illegitimately increase the profits of these corporations and their speculative manipulators, and has been made use of to cover up and conceal from the knowledge of the public the returns really received from the capital actually invested. It has encouraged extravagance and corruption; has been made the means of swindling innocent investors out of millions of dollars; has promoted stock gambling, and, worst of all, has imposed a serious and continuous illegitimate burden upon commerce. In the words of Mr. F. B. Thurber, "Excessive capitalization operates as a mortgage upon the industry of the country, and as a machinery for concentrating wealth in few hands wherever the power exists to impose rates for transportation which will yield dividends on watered stock."

By reference to the statement of Mr. Poor (testimony, page 228), the extent to which this vicious practice has been indulged in will be better understood. Mr. Poor estimates that of the capital stock, bonds, and other evidences of indebtedness issued by the railroads of the United States, amounting in the aggregate at the close of 1883 to $7,495,471,311, at least $2,000,000,000 represents what is known as "watered stock." Others have pronounced this estimate too low; and attention is invited to the statements of Messrs. Poor, Sterne (page 79), Thurber (pages 274 and 295), O'Donnell (page 46), King (page 130), for illustrations of the effects of this practice.

As the committee is not prepared to suggest any method by which Congress can directly regulate such financial operations on the part of railroads chartered by the States, it is only deemed necesary at this time to call attention to the need of State legislation calculated to effectively check such speculative transactions.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I think it is pretty evident that every Senator on this floor has made up his mind on this question. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say a word about the particular question which is pending before the Senate. The paragraph that I propose to amend is a part of the bill. The question is whether we will make that paragraph perfect and complete before we vote upon the question of striking it out. That is the pending question, and no other.

As the paragraph now stands as part of the bill—and we do not yet know that it will go out—it merely provides for equality and security in respect of people who are bringing things into the State of Ohio from some common point outside of it. If my amendment be adopted it will provide for the farmer and the manufacturer of Ohio—I take that for an illustration as the center of the country—as well as for the farmer and manufacturer of California east of San Francisco, the extreme western point, who wishes to send his goods to a common point of arrival; that is, one of the great markets. If that is not just, if it is not indispensable to the protection of the farmer and the home manufacturer who wishes to send his goods out, then I am incapable of understanding the effect of the English language or the effect and application of just principles to transportation.

When we come to the other and the broader question of intermediate traffic from one local point to another, it will secure against excessive charges even then. But if you strike it all out, there is danger, as has been stated by Senators, that in respect of transporting the great products of the West, the wheat, the corn, the pork, the bacon, the beef, and all that, to the Atlantic seaboard or to the Pacific seaboard for exportation, you have reduced them to a point where the rate must be put up to the local rate or the local rate put down to a point where it will not pay as a local rate, and thus break up this exporting business altogether.

That I do not wish to do, but I do wish to prevent a discrimination against the farmers of Vermont and Ohio and California and even of Oregon who wish to send their things to New York or to Chicago or to any of these great markets, and against their being obliged to pay more than they would have to pay if they sent them one hundred or a thousand miles west or east to start to go to the point of destination. That is the point of my amendment, and as long as this paragraph is in the bill the question is—and we can not avoid it—whether it can not be perfected by providing for the point of arrival as well as that of common departure.

Mr. HARRIS. If the amendment of the Senator from Vermont shall not be agreed to and the amendment made in Committee of the Whole shall be agreed to, this principle of limiting the right to charge more for the short than the long haul applies all along the line; but if his amendment be adopted and the amendment of the Committee of the Whole shall not be adopted, then a very different rule will prevail and the principle will not apply all along the line. I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont and for the amendment made in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You do not know that the clause will be stricken out. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask a question. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont should be adopted how will it affect the words proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from West Virginia? We first vote to put the amendment in, and how are those of us who think the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is better than the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to get rid of this amendment after it is put in?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question then recurs, if my amendment be agreed to, on striking out the whole paragraph including what now is in the text and including mine, so that it is a perfectly fair way.

Mr. HARRIS. The question will be on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. We can vote this amendment in, and then vote to strike it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Together with the other one.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the amendment of the Senator from Vermont improves the bill as it now stands, but I prefer the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can do that by then voting to concur with the committee in striking out the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that if we vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, those of us who prefer the bill as amended in committee can not afford afterward to vote against agreeing to the amendment made in committee. I am in favor of sustaining the amendment made in committee, striking out those words that confine the application of this rule to shipments made from the common point of departure. Hence I simply wanted the Senator from Mississippi and others to understand that the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont would not enable us to defeat his general idea by then voting against the whole amendment as made in committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not?

Mr. HARRIS. Because I do not want to strip the bill of the amendment made in committee; I am for that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you do not strip it of it; you then vote to concur in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole as amended.

Mr. HARRIS. Exactly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you strike it out, but you do not know yet that you can do that; and you want therefore, if you can not do it, to perfect the paragraph and make it as good as you can, and then if it is not as good as you want strike it out.

Mr. HARRIS. It is an amendment striking out. I concede the point. I was in error.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). On this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. GORMAN. (when his name was called). On this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. He was called from the Chamber temporarily. I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea" on this amendment. I have, however, transferred the pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], and therefore vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I would, if privileged to vote, vote "yea" on this amendment, but I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). On all questions concerning the fourth section I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. I do not know how he would vote. I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HEARST].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PALMER. My colleague [Mr. CONGER], if he were here, would vote "nay" on this question. I think he is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand that the Senator's colleague would vote "nay?"

Mr. PALMER. He would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON. Understanding that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] would vote "nay" on this question, I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] was called away. I am paired with him. He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is absent in the discharge of his duty as a member of a committee of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is now in, and therefore I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Sabin,
Blair,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Frye,	Miller,	Teller,
Brown,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,

NAYS—24.

Berry,	Fair,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Camden,	Gorman,	Payne,	Vest,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Eustis,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mahone,	Spooner,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Conger,	Hearst,	Pike,
Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAIR. Is that the question necessarily now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BLAIR. I desired to offer an amendment to the section before that was acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order now. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be reported, so that we may vote understandingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 6, after the word "direction," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to strike out the words:

And from the same original point of departure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in this amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. CAMERON'S name was called). The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] yesterday requested me to announce that he is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. He did not state how he would vote on any of these amendments, but I wish to make the announcement of his pair for all the votes that may be taken on the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is still absent from the Senate Chamber, and I am paired with him. I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CONGER] would vote "yea" on this question if he were present. I do not know whether he is paired at all. I think he is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but that Senator may vote the same way, and then my colleague will have no pair.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am requested to pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] on this question. I should vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Michigan is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. SABIN. The Senator from New Jersey is going to vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has already voted.

Mr. PALMER. I made the pair according to the request of my colleague. He wishes to be paired, and I have paired him. He is for striking out the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the roll.

The roll-call was resumed.

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HEARST].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], who was called away from the city by business. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to state again that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. The Senator from Oregon would vote "yea" on this proposition.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 24, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Berry,	Fair,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Vance,
Camden,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Coke,	Gray,	Payne,	Whitthorne,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Eustis,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Evarts,	Logan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Miller,	Teller,
Brown,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa

ABSENT—26.

Beck,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees.
Conger,	Hearst,	Pike,
Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by inserting——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are other reserved amendments which are first in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I wish to give notice, if I may, that when I get the lawful opportunity, I shall move to insert in the bill, in the place that is now made vacant, the words:

And from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the amendments to be offered to the fourth section be considered now instead of passing to other parts of the bill and coming back to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to be authorized now, while we have this very subject up, to finish it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the question be taken on the amendment proposed by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, my amendment is to insert the words:

And from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 6, after the word "direction," insert:

And from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And on that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that amendment in order? We have just voted upon both of those propositions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is clearly in order. My former amendment was an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not insist, but it is a matter of very serious doubt to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called). My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and I understand he would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I should vote "yea" on this question but that I am paired with my colleague [Mr. CONGER], who would vote "nay."

Mr. STANFORD (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HEARST] on all questions on the bill of a party character, and so I refrain from voting.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Blair,	Frye,	Miller,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Teller,
Brown,	Hoar,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,

NAYS—24.

Berry,	Fair,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Call,	George,	Maxey,	Vance,
Camden,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Coke,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—25.

Beck,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,
Conger,	Hearst,	Palmer,
Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the next reserved amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 7, after the word "arrival," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted the following words:

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to inquire what effect the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], which was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, will have on the section; whether it will not be exactly the same as if we struck out the words "any greater," in line 2 of section 4, and inserted "as great," because if the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is what I have suggested, to forbid the charge of as great a compensation, then it would be a great deal simpler and better to omit the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa and change the language of line 2 so as to prevent the retention of two apparently conflicting and contradictory provisions in the same section.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The purpose of the amendment offered by me, and which is now pending, was to negative the presumption that by authority of this bill, should it become a law, the carriers of this country would be authorized to charge as much for a short as for a long haul. That was the purpose, and I think it will be the effect.

I did not wish to interfere with the text of the bill as reported from the committee any more than seemed to be necessary, and therefore instead of proposing to amend the text of the bill I offered my amendment in the form of an addition.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois having charge of the bill that if the amendment is to be adopted it would be a great deal simpler to take the sense of the Senate on the question of amending line 2 by striking out the words "any greater" and inserting the words "as great," because if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is adopted it is the meaning then of the section that the common carrier shall not be permitted to charge as great compensation for a short distance as for a long distance.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall vote to non-concur in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. I think that is the better way to dispose of the subject. I think the original section with the words "any greater" in it, if the amendment is gotten rid of, is all right, and I hope we shall non-concur in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the better course for the Senator who has the bill in charge to pursue would be to move to amend the text of the bill, and if he secures an amendment of that kind to the text then it would be safe to vote down the amendment offered by me. But if he shall first defeat my amendment, and if that be followed by a defeat of the amendment which is now suggested, then the bill will stand with the implication that the carriers may charge as much for the shorter as for the longer haul.

Mr. PLATT. I am opposed to this amendment, because I deem it entirely unnecessary and because it does not avoid any implication, if it be necessary to avoid an implication.

This short-haul provision is not a thing which we are enacting for the first time. As has been said here, it is incorporated in some form or other into almost all the laws of the States, and the question has never been mooted up to this time that the prohibition of charging more for a short than for a longer haul raised any implication that a right was conveyed to charge as much for the short as for the long haul.

Unless I am entirely mistaken in the effect of the bill no such implication is raised, even if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa be not incorporated in the bill. No such implication was raised by the original language of the bill. It is simply a provision that a railroad shall not do a specific act, and that is to charge a greater compensation for a short than for a longer distance. That does not authorize the charging of as much for every short distance as is charged for the long distance.

Nobody will pretend that under the bill a railroad company is authorized to charge as much for one mile as for a thousand miles. If my friend from Iowa should go into court and attempt to maintain any such construction as that, I apprehend that he would not find any success before any judge or any tribunal in the country. His proposition would be this: Under the bill as left by the committee the railroad company was authorized to charge as much for one mile as for a thousand miles, to put an extreme case. No court would say that there was any such implication in the bill or any such authority by implication. Therefore, in my judgment, this amendment is entirely unnecessary.

But let us see if it avoids the implication. This is the language of the Senator's amendment:

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

If there was an implication to be avoided as the bill stood, then the implication is that for the shorter distance you may charge as much to 1 cent so that you fall below. If you fall below the charge for the long distance by even 1 cent, then on the reasoning of the Senator from Iowa there would be authority for that.

Upon these two grounds, first, that no such construction can be put on the bill as he assumes, that no court and no tribunal would put a construction on the bill as reported by the committee that it authorized charging as much for a short distance as for a long distance; and for the second reason, that it does not avoid the implication which he seeks to avoid, I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Connecticut will admit, doubtless, that there are many cases in which the carriers of the country are charging as much and more for a shorter than a longer distance. Everybody knows that. There is no dispute about it. Now, it is proposed to declare by law that it shall be unlawful for common carriers to practice that under the terms of this bill which was not unlawful before; but when a case shall arise under the bill, if it shall become a law, wherein a carrier has charged as much for a short haul of 100 miles as for the long haul of 1,000 miles, his answer to complaint made would be that he has complied with the terms of the bill by not charging more. What I want to avoid is a statutory declaration that that thing may be done, and leave it for the regulation of the commissioners under the general terms of the act.

I do not doubt that under the provisions of the bill reserving to shippers the right to commence actions in their own behalf under the common law with reference to carriers for extortions imposed upon them, in a case so commenced on the ground of extortion because a carrier had charged as much for 100 miles as for a thousand, answer made thereto in the State court that the charge was authorized by implication of a law of Congress would determine that case in the State court and defeat the complainant therein.

It is not an uncommon thing, I presume, certainly it has not been uncommon in my practice in years gone by, to test questions of that kind by action of replevin. Where extortionate charges have been imposed and a reasonable amount tendered to and refused by the carrier, an action in replevin would be brought for the recovery of the goods withheld. The only question at issue in a case of that kind was whether the charge was a reasonable one or not, and if it appeared that the amount tendered was reasonable for the service rendered, the plaintiff gained his case. But in such an instance as that, an answer being made under this law that by act of Congress, jurisdiction having been taken over the subject of interstate commerce, a rule was established from which comes the necessary implication that that extortionate charge may be made, the action in the State court would fail, and the provision reserving to parties the right to bring their action there would be nugatory.

Therefore I hope either the amendment I have proposed will be agreed to or the modification suggested by the Senator from Kansas and accepted by the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in—ayes 27, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is first in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I think unanimous consent was given to close out the fourth section before proceeding further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to the rules of the Senate the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole must first be acted on.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood that unanimous consent was given to dispose of section 4 now, in response to the request of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Vermont only extended to the amendment proposed by him. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 26, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted after the word "provided" the words:

But nothing in this act shall prevent the principal officers of any railroad company or companies from exchanging passes or tickets with other railroad companies for their officers and employés.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out section 13 of the bill and inserted in lieu thereof:

Whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this act named it shall be the duty of the commission and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement to apply in a summary way, by petition, to the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity in the judicial district in which the common carrier complained of has its principal office, or in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall happen, alleging such violation or disobedience, as the case may be; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and such notice may be served on such common carrier, his or its officers, agents, or servants in such manner as the court shall direct; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily as a court of equity and without the formal pleadings and proceedings applicable to ordinary suits in equity, but in such manner as to do justice in the premises; and to this end such court shall have power, if it think fit, to direct and prosecute in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to form a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court, on such hearing or on report of any such person or persons, that the lawful order or requirement of said commission drawn in question has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or interdict to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience of such order or requirement of said commission, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or interdict, it shall be lawful for such court to issue writs of attachment, or any other process of said court incident or applicable to writs of injunction or interdict against such common carrier, and if a corporation, against one or more of the directors, officers, or agents of the same, or against any owner, lessee, trustee, receiver, or other person failing to obey such writ of injunction or interdict; and said court may, if it shall think fit, make an order directing such common carrier or other person so disobeying such writ of injunction or interdict to pay such sum of money not exceeding for each carrier or person in default the sum of $500 for every day after a day to be named in the order that such carrier or other person shall fail to obey such injunction or interdict; and such moneys shall be payable as the court shall direct, either to the party complaining, or into the court to abide the ultimate decision of the court, or into the Treasury; and payment thereof may without prejudice to any other mode of recovering the same, be enforced by attachment or order in the nature of a writ of execution, in like manner as if the same had been recovered by a final decree in personam in such court. When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal; but such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon; and such court may, in every such matter, order the payment of such costs and counsel fees as shall be deemed reasonable. Whenever any such petition shall be filed or presented by the commission it shall be the duty of the district attorney, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, to prosecute the same; and the costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses for the courts of the United States. For the purposes of this act, excepting its penal provisions, the circuit courts of the United States shall be deemed to be always in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] announced his purpose to propose an amendment to the section, and therefore it was reserved.

Mr. VEST. On page 3 of the amendment, commencing in line 59 with the word "but," I move to strike out the words:

But such appeal shall not operate to stay or supersede the order of the court or the execution of any writ or process thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. As I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont it gives the right of appeal to either the complainant or the defendant where the amount in controversy is $2,000. The amendment also provides that if any railroad corporation fails to observe or obey the order that is made by the court, then the court may inflict a penalty, commencing at a certain time after a certain day, of $500 a day. As a matter of course, in four days the railroad company could appeal to the Supreme Court, because the amount in controversy would be $2,000. The amendment also provides that the court may order the amount of the penalty to be paid over to the complainant.

In the first place, the amendment is extraordinary in granting an appeal and then providing in the language which I propose to strike out, that the appeal shall not operate as a supersedeas after bond. In all other cases where the party who is defeated in the court below gives bond that operates as a stay of execution until the action of the appellate tribunal.

Let us look for a minute at the operation of this amendment. Any person, whether responsible or irresponsible, solvent or insolvent, can file a complaint against a railroad corporation, and under the provisions of this amendment the court may find in favor of the complainant, may award this penalty of $500 a day and order it to be paid to the complainant.

The only redress which the railroad company has is to file a bond which does not operate as a supersedeas, does not stay the execution and go to the Supreme Court. There is no provision to advance the case on the docket of the Supreme Court, and if it takes the ordinary course of litigation it remains three years at least in the Supreme Court and $500 is accruing each day against the railroad company. The court below may issue an execution each day for the $500 and pay the money over, if the judge sees proper, to the insolvent person or corporation who is the complainant; and at the end of three years when the railroad company may have gained the suit and it is found that really there was no basis for the complaint against it, it finds that its only remedy has been a declaration of law and the money has been paid over to an insolvent person, and is gone, and no redress is given to the company.

If that is not the operation of the amendment, then I totally misconceive its whole scope and meaning. For that reason I move to strike out the words which make the distinction between this case and any others in appeals, that the bond executed by the party that loses in the court below shall not operate to stay the execution.

If the Senator from Vermont in offering the amendment meant simply to say that the injunction or "interdict," as it is termed here, should remain in force, that is one proposition; but I should be unwilling as a lawyer to give the power to any nisi prius tribunal, to any judge, to say that money should be paid over to any complainant without regard to his responsibility, and then that the execution should not be stayed even by a bond, and at the end of the litigation in the appellate court the party appealing find that the money has been collected and is gone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Missouri slightly misapprehends the section as it stands which was on my motion substituted for the former section 13 of the bill. It does not authorize any private person or private corporation to apply to a court against a railway for a general grievance or a special grievance under the bill. It only provides for an application to the court in case of a disobedience of the order of the commissioners that has been made upon inquiry and upon hearing. That is what it does. The commissioners may apply, or the party aggrieved may apply, but he begins, and the only status that he has in the court except on its ordinary common-law side like anybody else with security, is that he begins with the order of these commissioners under the bill to the railroad company to do something or to stop doing something that they believe to be in contravention of duty under this act. He comes in in that attitude. It may be a small shipper at Saint Louis or at San Francisco or wherever, who would stand no chance whatever in the battle of this life in the courts of law with a great railroad corporation, not because the judges and the juries would not do him justice but because by the law's delay and the enormous expense of litigation he would be eaten up and dead and gone before he could come to the final solution and establishment of his rights. That would be hopeless, everybody knows.

Therefore, this section provides that having appealed to the commissioners and they having heard the railroad company in respect of the particular grievance complained of and made their order, they or he, the railroad company refusing to obey it may apply to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, and that circuit court having heard the parties and determined the matter and directed the company to obey that order, then if the company appeal, notwithstanding their appeal they shall continue to obey. If they continue to disobey, appealing or not appealing, then the court may compel them to pay $500 a day by attachment or whatever means can lawfully be employed as a penalty for that contempt; and I never yet heard that an appeal against the judgment of a court for a contempt was to stay proceedings. It ought not to.

So I think my friend from Missouri has misapprehended the scope of this section. If it had been, as he supposed, the ordinary case of a private person applying in a suit on application against a corporation or anybody else on a case and he could not make it out, and had not already been heard by the tribunal that the bill appoints, there would be great force in what he says; but applying only, and being authorized to apply only, for a disobedience of the order of the commission made on a hearing, and then having got the judgment of the court in his favor upon that, that the defendants shall do so and so or omit doing so and so, then they choose to appeal, that meantime they must obey, that it shall not supersede the order, as the Senator himself said it ought not to do. If it does not supersede the order the order must be obeyed.

Then comes the five-hundred-dollar provision, that if that order which is still in force and must be obeyed is still disobeyed, the court can compel the disobeying party to pay $500 a day into court or to whomever it chooses.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Vermont mean to say that a decision of the circuit court of the United States as to the legality or lawfulness of the order of the commission is final?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No.

Mr. VEST. Does he not provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do.

Mr. VEST. On what is that appeal?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That appeal is on the validity of the order.

Mr. VEST. Then if such an appeal is made, what good does it do to the railroad company to win in the Supreme Court if the money is already paid to the other party and gone?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The money is only paid over for continuing to disobey the order while the appeal is pending. If the company choose to obey the order of the court pending the appeal, it not being superseded as the Senator seemed to agree it should not be superseded, then they do not have any money to pay. They are only required to pay money because they do not obey the standing order of the court still in force.

Mr. VEST. But that is not a final decree of the court, because the party can go to the Supreme Court on it, and still the $500 a day continues and can be paid over each day to the complainant, whether it is an insolvent corporation or an insolvent individual.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the common carrier has his option. He can either obey the order of the commissioners affirmed by the court when he has nothing to obey but to continue to do his duty until he can show it is not his duty, or if he refuses to obey the order of the court, then he must put up his money rather than go to jail; because that is all there is to it.

It is not the ordinary case at all; but if you strike that out and provide that the circuit court, an appeal being taken from this order, shall not continue the order in force, that it shall operate as a supersedeas on giving bond, having been a railway lawyer and railway counsel almost all the days of my life I think I know enough about railway operations and railway counsel to know that any private benefit to be gotten to the people of this country by any order of these commissioners affirmed by the circuit court would be worth nothing at all except in disputes between railway corporations where one had as much money as the other to spend years in fighting it out.

My point was in this amended section 13 to bring this justice home. When the commissioners first and the circuit court afterwards had said that the railroad must do a particular thing to a private citizen, then I say until the railroad can show the Supreme Court of the United States that it ought not to do so, it must do it pending the appeal; that the order should not be superseded. Very well; not being superseded then this money part only applies to where they refuse to obey the order of the court instead of obeying it meantime, and then the court is authorized to take their money. I think that is right. It is exactly what the English law has been for thirty years.

Mr. VEST. If the argument of the Senator from Vermont is worth anything as to the inequality of a legal contest between a poor man and a rich corporation, those words ought not to be in the bill. The logical conclusion of what he says is that the clause ought not to be in the bill because the parties are not in litigation on equal terms. But the Senator proposes to give an appeal from what? From the question whether the order of the commission is lawful or not. If you want to stop the order of the commission, then say so in plain and distinct terms; but the Senator does not stop there. He says "the lawful order." Who is to determine that? It goes to the circuit court of the United States and they pass upon the question of the legality of the action of the commission. If the Senator wants to stop there let him say so, and let that be the tribunal of last resort. But he does not stop there. He says that from the decision of the circuit court either party can go to the Supreme Court of the United States upon filing a bond as in ordinary cases. A bond for what? If a bond as in ordinary cases in practice in the United States courts it would be a supersedeas; but the Senator goes further even than that to remove all doubt and says that an appeal can be taken from an ordinary judgment for so much money or from this order as for a contempt.

In the mean time while this mockery of an appeal is going on the judge of the circuit court may order the $500 a day to be paid each day over to the complainant. What redress is there for the railroad company? What railroad company would ever take an appeal? If the Senator from Vermont wants no appeal taken, he has absolutely destroyed it by the terms of the section without saying so in express terms.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend seems to omit the consideration of the circumstance that this order of the circuit court ordinarily would be a continuous order, or an order, if it were a prohibitory and restrictive one, that in the mind of the railroad company might hamper their operations an unjust one. If they can succeed in showing the Supreme Court of the United States that it is an unjust or unlawful order, then they get it set aside, but while it is going on they must obey the order of the circuit court.

This money part of it does not come in as a question affecting the right of the matter to be recovered back or anything else, but they can obey that order, and that is the point, making them obey it until they can get it reversed by the Supreme Court. That merely means that they shall not charge me more for one distance than my friend from Missouri for another distance, or that they shall make a certain connection between two railroad companies. Pending the litigation it is not very hard to ask them to obey as far as that goes.

Then they are only required to pay this money when they refuse to obey, so that the appeal is made for something. It is worth a great deal, and we are giving them a great deal by allowing them to appeal; but it is only a punishment to them for refusing to obey meantime that they are called upon to pay any money at all.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator from Vermont to say now that this is not a question of money judgment at all. If that is so, then what is the meaning of this language in the section:

> When the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceeding before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Here is $500 each day adjudged against the corporation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that is not "the subject in dispute," for the $500 a day is punishment for contempt in disobeying the order. If the matter between the railroad company and the shipper is a mere trifle of no value or consequence to either of them, then as in all other cases we do not allow any appeal. It must be a matter of substantial importance, which amounts to something, and I called it $2,000 instead of $5,000 in order not to press the railroad company too hard.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Vermont mean to say that after four days at $500 a day, when the amount of $2,000 is reached, the railroad company can not appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I mean to say it could not appeal from the money at all. It depends on the question that is in controversy between the parties when the circuit court pronounces judgment as to whether the railroad should obey the order of the commission or should not.

Mr. VEST. That unquestionably is in dispute between the parties, the legality of the judgment of $2,000, at $500 a day. The order itself may not be susceptible of being reduced to dollars and cents. It may be an order that the company shall charge a certain amount of freight or shall put on so many cars or something that you can not put into money. Would not the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United State release the company from this penalty if the company succeeded in the appellate tribunal?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would stop the penalty itself, because the order then is obeyed, but the $500 a day has nothing to do with the subject in dispute between the parties. It is the consequence simply of disobedience by the party of the order of the commissioners affirmed by the circuit court upon a hearing. That is all.

When you come to $2,000 in reference to what the Senator says in regard to being incapable of estimation, we have all lived long enough in the world to know that the Supreme Court allows affidavits on questions about the conduct of affairs and business transactions and disputes between parties to show whether the subject in controversy is of consequence amounting to $2,000 or $5,000, or not. As a practical question, any judge of the Supreme Court who is called upon to allow an appeal says: "What is this question between you? What is this order of the commission?" The order is then stated in a given case, that the railway company at Richmond, Vt., where I was born, shall stop its trains once a day there in order to take on freight and passengers, to carry them to Burlington, a dozen miles, where I live now.

To the judge of the Supreme Court, to whom an application for appeal is made, as this is a continuous order, the railway company say that it will cost us $20 a day to do this thing in stopping and backing our trains, and all that sort of thing, and therefore, as a permanent and continuous order, this is of more consequence to us than $2,000, a good deal. The judge says, "Very well; I am satisfied; it would be a continuous order; this controversy, therefore, between these parties is of more consequence than that." If it was a question whether they should take on five barrels of apples one day or the next day the whole value there would not be $20. Then the judge from whom the appeal was asked would say, "This is a matter of no special consequence; it is not worth any $2,000; I shall not allow you an appeal at all." That is all easy enough in the practice of the courts.

Mr. VEST. Then there ought not to be any limitation of amount fixed here to determine the appellate jurisdiction at all. If this thing is to be left to the mere judgment of the judge himself, it is the most extraordinary jurisdiction that I have ever known.

The Senator says in his amendment an appeal is to lie when the amount in dispute is $2,000. Here are two parties in the court below, and they may apply for an appeal. It seems to me that the judge would look at the record and look at the pleadings and see what is the amount claimed and what is the amount in litigation. But instead of that the Senator from Vermont tells us now that the $2,000 goes for nothing except that the judge is to estimate as to the value to either party of the subject-matter in litigation.

I do not so understand the practice of the law. To say the least of it, this will give rise to complicated litigation as to the right of appeal and the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. There ought to be an appeal or there ought not to be an appeal. If the Senator from Vermont means to stop with the judgment of the commission or the circuit court of the United States he ought to say so. If upon the other hand he means that the Supreme Court of the United States shall pass upon the whole controversy, then the bond should be a supersedeas.

Mr. SPOONER. If I may be allowed to suggest it, I think the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is based partly upon the anomalous provision here that the $500 a day, which as the Senator from Vermont says is a punishment for contempt of court, may under the provisions of the bill be paid over to the complainant, so that it might happen under the operation of this section that a great many thousand dollars as daily fines for contempt would be paid over to a complainant possibly irresponsible, and after the lapse of time the Supreme Court of the United States decide that there was no cause of action and that the court below should not have granted the injunction at all. I submit to the Senator from Vermont whether in any event the penalty provided by the section for contempt of court ought to be paid to a party to the suit? Should it not go into the Treasury instead?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My answer to my friend from Wisconsin about that (and his criticism is a perfectly fair one to bring the question to consideration) is this, and it is in the interest of the citizen: The citizen is not entitled to it by force of the law but only when the case is of a kind where the only redress he has got to have in compelling the railroad to obey the order which is made for his benefit and they will not do it, the only hope of getting anything, as he can not go to law and get his action for damages because he would be eaten up in costs and expenses, is that the court in a proper case may direct that this penalty for disobeying the order, which compels them to do justice then and there, shall be paid to him. It is discretionary with the court, and I think it is right. It is exactly what the English law of 1854 was, and in substance continues still, when they changed their judges to a commission, to whom they can give, as we can not, judicial powers.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to make one other suggestion to the Senator from Vermont, and that is whether this provision should not be made a little more elastic than it is; whether there may not be circumstances such that it would be wise and in the interest of the public that the circuit court or district court which has ordered the injunction should be permitted after it has ordered the injunction to take a bond which should stay any operation of judgment pending the appeal, if the case is to be advanced on the calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States. I can without much difficulty, and I think any Senator may, imagine cases where it would be a very close question whether the injunction should issue or not, and it might involve very serious consequences to an entire community, and there might be in such a case very good reason why upon adequate security to be exacted in the discretion of the court the bond should operate as a supersedeas. It would seem that something should be left to the discretion of the court in such a case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is force in that; but after the order of the commissioners, who are supposed to be men of great character and capacity, after a hearing before them and then a rehearing before the court, if the court is in so much doubt about the propriety of affirming the order of the commissioners that it would not wish to do it and compel the parties to obey it, meantime all the court has got to do is to say, "I will not affirm this order," and let the commissioners or the other side appeal. The matter will adjust itself, as it did under the English law in thirty years of practice, my fundamental point being to secure the humble private citizen who has not the capacity or the means to fight a great corporation (and having been a corporation lawyer I perfectly well know how it is) when he has got the judgment of this commission first, and the judgment of the circuit court second, in having his rights respected as they are thus ascertained until the corporation can show that he has not any. That is the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. In line 31 of the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, I move to strike out the word "interdict" and insert the words "other proper process." I hope the Senator from Vermont will accept that amendment. The word "interdict" is an entirely new word to our common law. My amendment is more comprehensive, so that it includes "interdict" if there be such a process, as well as any other process.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 31 it is proposed to strike out the word "interdict" and insert the words "other proper process;" so as to read:

It shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process to restrain such common carrier, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will explain to my friend from Massachusetts why I inserted that word. It is true, as my friend from Massachusetts says, that "interdict" is not a word common in our common law, but it is a word describing a process of four different capacities, I believe (I have not looked it up recently), in the civil law; and it was adopted into the English statute of 1854 on the subject of the management of railways. It has the quality, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggested the other day, of authorizing the court to command and direct and speak between, so to express it, the common carriers and anybody else, for them to do affirmative things, and to do thus and so. Inasmuch as I found this word in the English statute, I could not think of any one word which would do any better.

If the Senator from Massachusetts has constitutional scruples about bringing that word into the law and will add to the words "other proper process" the words "affirmative or negative," so as to give a clear authority to the court to command the doing of something instead of merely refraining from something, I shall not object.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the word "injunction" covers that. A mandatory injunction is a very common process in our equity proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not very common.

Mr. HOAR. I remember once getting a mandatory injunction for a person. A railroad refused to deliver his freight on the payment of a certain reasonable price. He gave a bond to pay anything more that should be properly and lawfully demanded and got out a mandatory injunction, and the goods were delivered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you any objection to saying "any other proper process, mandatory or other?"

Mr. HOAR. Not the slightest. The word "interdict" to most American minds is suggestive of bell, book, and candle, and the ecclesiastical process which ordinary people, though not perhaps lawyers, usually are more familiar with than they are with any other use of the word. But I will accept the modification of the Senator from Vermont and ask that that may be inserted in all the lines where the word "interdict" occurs, in line 31, line 38, line 42, and so on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest objection to inserting the words "injunction, or other proper process, mandatory or other."

Mr. EVARTS. I would make one observation on this substitution, that if it is intended to enlarge a discretionary creation of process by the courts it ought not to be allowed. Is not this a process that means the power of the court to do this, that, or the other at discretion?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. In the jurisdiction with which I am most familiar the courts have power to frame it. It does not enlarge the judicial power.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 31 of the amendment strike out the word "interdict" and insert "other proper process, affirmative or negative."

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Affirmative" is just as well, but "other proper process, mandatory or otherwise," would be better.

Mr. EVARTS. The processes of our law are well understood and have long been practiced upon. I suppose it is not the intention of the Senate or of Congress to create new methods of executing the special function which is brought into play in aid of this bill. I can not see that anything valuable is added by using any additional phrase to that of "injunction." However, if it is necessary to point with full efficacy to the use to which the injunction may be put, we should follow language that we understand, and say the court may issue a writ of injunction that restrains or is mandatory upon those common carriers. I do not like to carry to the courts a dispute whether there are new creations or inventions as to "interdict." It has no meaning with us in our law; but the Senator from Vermont has found in the practice newly introduced into the English law that word, which has, if I understood him rightly, four meanings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Four applications.

Mr. EVARTS. Four applications. I should like to know before I agree to incorporate the word "interdict" what those four applications are. I should not like to adopt the phrase merely because the English Parliament know what "interdict" means, being then presently instructed, which they never understood before; but I should like to know what it means also. The truth is that "injunction" is adequate as it is used and understood by our law, and that "mandatory injunction" has no more need to be resorted to in this instance than it has in other instances. An injunction covers a proper resort to a mandatory injunction; and if that covers it in other cases it covers it just as well here.

I submit that if it is necessary to point an application, it should be an injunction either restraining or mandatory upon the carrier, and then we shall know what that means.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In support of the suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts, and in opposition to what my friend from New York has said, I wish it to be borne in mind that this application to the circuit court is on its equity side, and it is on a new state of circumstances that have not hitherto been brought into the jurisprudence of the courts of equity, and for which the general rules and regulations which the law authorizes the Supreme Court of the United States to make for equity practice do not at all provide. Therefore, under this new state of circumstances it would still be proper to allow this court of equity to frame and mold its methods to the circumstances of the case, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, by such processes as are suitable and adequate to the occasion.

So I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, if they do not like "interdict."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 31 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the word "interdict" and to insert:

Other proper process, mandatory or otherwise.

In line 38 to strike out the word "interdict" and insert the same words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And in line 35 as well. Insert the words wherever the word "interdict" occurs.

Mr. HOAR. In lines 44 and 49 the word "interdict" occurs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be put on the first amendment to the amendment, inserting the words read in lieu of "interdict," in line 31.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same words will be inserted wherever the word "interdict," in four or five places in the section, occurs. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 20, line 6, after the word "tickets," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the words:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common carrier from giving reduced rates to ministers of religion.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This closes the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole which were reserved.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to page 10 of the bill and to move to strike out these words, beginning in line 15 of section 8:

Vacancies occasioned by removal, resignation, or other cause shall be filled by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

That might be construed to mean that we should have no commissioner if a vacancy occurred in vacation until after the Senate had acted upon the nomination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right. The Constitution provides for all that.

Mr. CULLOM. The Constitution would cover that without these words, and hence I ask that they be stricken out of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the words read by him be stricken from section 8 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. At the end of section 8, so that the commission may never become extinct by virtue of any two or three of them resigning or dying or whatever might occur to make vacancies, I think these words ought to be inserted:

No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. My purpose is that whatever members of the commission may be in service shall have the power of the commission to proceed with the work until the President shall fill the vacancies.

Mr. HOAR. Is there not a general law on that subject?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 1, line 5, I think the word "wholly" should be inserted after the word "property;" so as to read:

Carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water.

So as to make it perfectly certain that this measure will apply to all railroads.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I now move to strike out all of the fourth section and to insert what I send to the Chair.

Mr. BLAIR. Before that amendment is put I desire to offer an amendment to the fourth section for the purpose of perfecting the text.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will have to be read to see what his motion is.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let my amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read, and the amendment of the Senator from NewHampshire will then be in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 4 and to insert in lieu thereof:

That it shall be the especial duty of said commissioners to investigate and report at the next session of Congress as to the extent to which, if at all, the commercial interests of the country and justice to the carriers engaged in interstate commerce demand or permit the enactment of a law prohibiting carriers within the provisions of this act from charging or receiving any greater compensation, in the aggregate, for the transportation of passengers or property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in print?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is in print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where can I see it?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is on the last page of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. BLAIR. Before that amendment is acted upon I desire to move one for the purpose of perfecting the section as it now stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be first in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend the fourth section by inserting at the end of the proviso, in the twenty-first line:

Provided, also, That when such application under the foregoing proviso shall have been made to said commission within ninety days after the organization thereof, of which notice shall be given by proclamation of the President, this section shall not go into effect if against the applicant, until thirty days after the decision of the commission thereon shall have been made known to the applicant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Secretary to read the preceding proviso, so as to show how the whole will read if my amendment is adopted.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time make general rules exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published they shall, until changed by the commission or by law, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section: Provided, also, That when such application under the foregoing proviso shall have been made, &c.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish to explain, if I can have the attention of the Senate, the reasons why I offer this amendment.

The fourth section seems to me to be the bill and contains all which to my mind is objectionable in the work of the committee. The commission seems to be created primarily for carrying out the common law. This section interferes with the existing condition of things, the arrangements which have been the result of business for the whole term of railroad life in the country, and must of course, as we all see, compel the immediate reconstruction of every tariff of fares and freights throughout the country. The bill, if enacted into a law, so far as every railroad is concerned, has immediate operation to compel this reconstruction of its tariffs. That I suppose every one will concede.

The friends of the bill justify the fourth section, at least many of those who are about me say they do, because of the saving clause in the proviso, that application may be made by the roads whose interests are affected for a modification of the natural operation of the law; that is to say, they may be allowed upon application to the commission and showing a good cause, notwithstanding the law, to charge more for a short haul than for a long haul. It is by reason of this power on the part of the commission to nullify the act that the act itself is tolerable at all to a great many Senators who say they propose to support it. That is to say, by reason of the fact that the law will not be operative they propose to vote for it. The commission they contemplate will have power to permit, whenever good cause is shown for so doing by any interstate railroad whatever, a charge of more for a short than for a long haul.

It seems to be conceded all the way around that the competition between distant points is under the practical operation of the bill, if it has any practical operation, to be nullified, to be prevented, and the reason of that is this: By the operation of the bill the rates between competing points will be increased and in a corresponding degree the expenditures for transportation upon local points along the great lines will be diminished. By so much as the latter are diminished the other must be increased in order that the revenues of the railroad may be such as to keep them from bankruptcy.

There is the Grand Trunk road, which is beyond the regulation of our law, and if the rates at Chicago and New York, at these distant points, are increased, of course the Grand Trunk will take the great through business. It inevitably must do so. The operation of this measure, as I have tried to explain and as everybody understands, will be to increase those rates, and of necessity the great through business of the country must go over this other road, and naturally the other road itself, having no competitor, will increase its rates.

However, in order to prevent this result the committee incorporated this section in the bill, and it has been amended on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia in such a way as to aggravate and immensely increase the evil, the way to which was opened to some extent by the section as it originally stood upon the report of the committee.

That being so, and the evil to which I have adverted under the operation of the bill being guarded against by the first proviso, which gives the right to any of these roads to apply to the commission for a negative of the general provisions of the bill, for the right to charge more for the short than for the long haul, it seems to me that consistency, ordinary fair dealing, and good sense in the procedure should give the trial before the judgment is rendered rather than after it has been rendered.

If the bill goes into operation every road must change its rates of fares and freights immediately. If it continues under the existing system its managers become liable to the heavy penalties of the law. At once this change must be made.

Everybody believes from what I have stated and from his own knowledge of the bill and of the condition of affairs that in a great many instances the provisions of the bill will be relaxed in the way that I have indicated. It must be so, unless we drive the business of the country out of the country, and unless we are to add greatly to the cost of the long haul.

The provision which I have offered as an amendment simply gives the right to any road that thinks itself liable to be injuriously affected in its interests three months after the proclamation of the President, within which time it may make its application for a modification of the law, so that if it is a case where they ought to be permitted to charge more for the short haul than for the long haul they may have a hearing before the commission and may have a judgment before they change their tariffs and before the business of the country is thrown into a general condition of confusion.

That is the only purpose there is in the amendment. The time limited is three months, or ninety days, within which the application may be made. If it is not made within that length of time the law will become at once operative. In substance this proviso will be a little more than if we provided that the law itself should go into effect ninety days after its passage, giving the interim as a period within which applications might be made by those roads which are interested for a modification of the operation of the fourth section.

I do not know that the committee themselves will make any opposition to the adoption of the amendment, but at all events I offer it and I hope that it may be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me that the provision proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is unnecessary. If this measure passes it will be some considerable time before the law can become practically operative. That will afford a sufficient time for railroad companies to conform their rates to the provisions of the bill.

In the second place, I think that the instances in this conntry where a railroad company charges more for a short than for a longer distance are greatly overestimated. One such instance travels all over the country and is taken as the rule of railroad corporations. I do not think as a rule that railway corporations in this country, especially in the Eastern portion of the country, are charging any more for short than for longer distances, unless it be in rare instances. I do not believe any such instances exist in the State of Connecticut. I am told that none exist in the State of Massachusetts. I presume at the West and South the instances are more frequent than in the East, but I think the number of such instances has been vastly overestimated in this debate.

It seems to me the rule ought to be that there shall be no greater charge for the short than for the longer distance, and I think no great hardship will accrue to the railroad companies in letting that rule go into operation as soon as the commission get organized and ready to proceed to business. The corporations can make their application at once to the commission, and the commission, I have no doubt, will speedily dispose of the cases, so that if the exceptions ought to be made they will be made without any serious inconvenience to the railroad companies. I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut or any other Senator is under the impression that the bill as now amended by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont forbids the greater charge on the short haul, he is very much mistaken. There is no such provision in the bill as it now stands. There is, it is very true, a provision made that if the shipper happens to live in Chicago or in New York or at some other great terminal point of railroad concentration this injustice shall not be inflicted upon him. But every other shipper from every intermediate point between two great terminal railroad points is by the adoption of that amendment subject to the rapacity of the railroads just as he ever was, and, sir, for that reason I shall not vote for this bill.

I had hailed the introduction of this bill as a partial relief and as something in the right direction, but I will not vote for relief to men who already have the benefit of competition at these great terminal points, leaving the men who can not help themselves at the intermediate points in the same unsatisfactory condition as before. I will not grant relief to A and refuse it to B, who is in substantially the same circumstances. There are other people living in the United States of America besides those who live at the great terminal railroad points, and it is those other people whom I am desirous to protect, and I will not vote for a bill that protects those only who do not need protection, who live in the great cities, and that at the same time leaves the people of the intermediate towns, the small towns and villages, and the humble shippers still at the mercy of railroad rapacity. I will not be a party to any such scheme of pretended relief as that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] seems to me to misapprehend the nature of my amendment entirely. The purpose of the amendment is to prevent the act commencing to be operative against these roads and compelling the revision of their tariffs of fares and freights until they have had the opportunity, which the bill contemplates, of making application for exception from the operations of the act; and now it seems to me that that opportunity ought to be given before the judgment is rendered.

The bill as it is, without this proviso, simply compels a general reorganization of the railroad tariffs of the whole country at the start. It has got to be done or these penalties will be incurred. Now, why should there not be a short period of time given by the terms of the bill during which those roads which find their interests seriously threatened, or who may think they are threatened, by such a revision of their tariffs (which is a very expensive and troublesome thing to do) may make their application, and then, having made their application, await the judgment of the commission? It seems to me that no one can object to a provision of that kind.

As to all the other roads where there is no difference between the long and the short haul, or where there is no violation of the general provisions of the act, of course there is no probability of an application; but the great through lines, the great interests which are to be affected by the operation of this bill if it shall amount to anything, are likely to make these applications; they will inevitably do so. Why should they not have the opportunity to do so and to be heard and to avoid the ill effects, if they are to be such, of the act upon their interests before the act itself goes into operation? It seems to me just like rendering judgment and hanging a man and giving him a trial afterward.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now I should like to have the vote taken on my amendment. I do not suppose the fourth section is satisfactory to anybody in its present shape.

Mr. CAMDEN. I hope the amendment will not prevail. While the fourth section is not as I prefer it, yet it is in pretty good shape, and I hope it will be retained in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to strike out the fourth section and insert his substitute.

Mr. MCPHERSON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CONGER] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR (when the name of Mr. DAWES was called). My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. But for that I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired, as announced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], with his colleague [Mr. DAWES], or I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). Yesterday the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] said he would be absent an hour or two, and asked me to pair with him, and I did pair with him yesterday. The matter did not occur to me to-day. I am reminded now that it is his understanding that I am paired with him for to-day.

Mr. KENNA. That is my recollection of his statement to me.

Mr. ALLISON. He certainly did not so state to me and I had no such understanding, otherwise I should have paired with him with pleasure during the day. Now I withdraw my vote and announce the pair.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If the Senator from Kentucky were present, he would vote "nay" upon this question.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blair,	Frye,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Hawley,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Brown,	Hoar,	Miller,	Spooner,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Teller.

NAYS—29.

Berry,	Fair,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Call,	George,	Payne,	Walthall,
Camden,	Gorman,	Platt,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Edmunds,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Eustis,	Morgan,	Vance,

ABSENT—27.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hearst,	Pike,
Beck,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Gray,	Mahone,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Hale,	Manderson,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees.
Conger,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COKE. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of section 20:

Provided, That the time when any common-law remedy shall be suspended under this section shall not be counted under any statute of limitation against such remedy.

I ask the Secretary to read from line 11 of section 20 to the end of the section with my amendment added.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended, the last clause of section 20 will read as follows:

But no person, association, or corporation shall at the same time prosecute any complaint before said commission and pursue his or its remedy at law; and lodging a complaint before such commission shall suspend, until the same is disposed of, the common-law remedy; and it is expressly provided that no pending litigation between railroad companies shall in any way be affected by this act: Provided, That the time when any common-law remedy shall be suspended under this section shall not be counted under any statute of limitation against such remedy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment to section 17, found on page 22, to strike out all after the word "information," in line 6, down to and including the word "balance-sheet," in line 20. This section authorizes and requires "annual reports from all common carriers, subject to the provisions of this act," and the commissioners are to "fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made," and are to require from carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information.

I do not propose to strike out that portion of the section, but I propose to strike out what I now read:

Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued, the amounts paid therefor, and the manner of payment for the same; the dividends paid, the surplus fund, if any, and the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the carrier's property, franchises, and equipment; the number of employés and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, how expended, and the character of such improvements; the earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss; and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the carrier each year, including an annual balance-sheet.

It strikes me that those provisions are not necessary to enable the commission to perform any duty assigned to them. It is an interference with the private affairs of corporations. It seems to me to be going entirely too far. What advantage will the people of the country have from a report to the commission of what a railroad corporation paid out, what was the financial condition of the corporation, the value of its property, and the amount it pays to all its employés? There can be no valid reason assigned why a corporation should make such a detailed report to the commission while the items called for do not touch the question whether the corporation has discriminated against anybody or made extortionate charges. For that reason I move to strike out that part of the section.

I desire to say that I am sure I can not and I do not believe any member of the Senate can tell to-day the effect of this legislation either upon the interests of shippers or of common carriers. I have taken no part in the discussion of the bill, because I confess here and now that it is a bill the effects of which I can not predict with any degree of certainty. I do not know how it is going to affect the shippers of the country or the common carriers of the land. We are simply making a venture.

There has been great complaint of extortion and discrimination. Doubtless these complaints are well founded. I think we should apply a remedy to those wrongs. The bill may have that effect, but I am sure I can not tell that it will. I do not believe from anything I have heard in the discussion here that there is any just expectation as to what effect it will have. There was a provision offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], which was a valuable provision if it had remained in the bill, for the protection of shippers at intermediate points. That has been stricken out, and so far as I can now see there is not a single provision in the bill which imposes an additional obligation on common carriers to that imposed on them at common law. If extortionate prices for carrying freight or produce are imposed, or if unjust discriminations are made, the common-law courts of the country afforded a remedy; and that is all that is proposed by the bill. But under this bill that remedy is not in the State courts; it is in the Federal courts, at a distance from the shipper. So I do not see that the shipper himself is benefited one particle by this bill. I am fearful that, after the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia has been disposed of by striking it from the bill, the effect will be injurious rather than beneficial.

There are other objections to this bill. I shall, perhaps, vote for the bill, because there seems to be a popular demand that something shall be done to correct the evils perpetrated by railroad corporations; but there are objections to the bill. One is the vast power placed in the hands of the commission. You virtually oust the State courts of all jurisdiction over questions as to tolls and freights, because, after you have given this remedy through the commission, there will not be any person who will seek a remedy in his own State in the State courts. Those railroad corporations engaged in interstate commerce were chartered by the States; and the simple fact that under some of the provisions of their charters they have been authorized to consolidate with other companies so as to form continuous lines of transportation in different States does not divest them of the obligation to obey the behests of the States that imposed the charters; and yet under the provisions of this bill they will not consult the States, and you practically take away the authority of the States.

Again, you assume that because this is interstate commerce, as it is termed where freight passes over different lines incorporated by different States, it gives you jurisdiction over it as interstate commerce. One thing is certain, you have no greater power over interstate commerce than you have over foreign commerce, for the very provision of the Constitution which gives you the power to regulate commerce between the States gives you the power to regulate foreign commerce. May you not follow this by some provisions of law seeking to control the foreign commerce of the country by regulating the charges on that commerce?

I am not sure that your Supreme Court will sustain the law when enacted. It seems to me to be a measure fraught with a great deal of doubt as to the constitutionality of the proposed law as well as to the policy of its enactment; and there is still greater doubt as to any beneficial effects it will have on the interests of the country.

But I will not detain the Senate by any further discussion. I have called attention to the clause which I have moved to strike out because I think it imposes unnecessary burdens on the common carriers of the country without aiding in any respect the general object proposed.

Mr. HARRIS. The committee supposed that the report of the commission would have a large if not a controlling influence upon such future legislation as Congress might choose to adopt in respect to the regulation of interstate commerce. It also supposed that at no time would Congress be willing to so regulate interstate commerce as to deprive the common carrier of the power or right to earn a reasonable profit upon the actual capital invested in the carrying trade; but if that profit is to be confined to the moneys actually invested in the trade, it is absolutely necessary, as it seems to me and as it seemed to the committee, that the commission should possess itself of precisely the character of, and to the full extent of, the information required by the section. It is a fact known to the committee from the mouths of many witnesses, known to the whole country before the committee was created, that in very many instances these corporations are stocked at three or four times the amount that the railroads actually cost.

Now, I do not suppose that if Congress should proceed to regulate hereafter the carrying trade it would be inclined to allow a reasonable profit on what is known as the watered stock of these corporations, while I do suppose Congress would always desire to so legislate as to allow the corporations to earn all of the necessary expenses with a reasonable profit upon the money actually put into the construction and maintenance of the road. Unless the commission is authorized to acquire information to the extent that the seventeenth section as it now stands requires it will be utterly impossible for the commission to give information to Congress as to the extent to which it may safely go in regulating the carrying trade, and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not want to take any part in this discussion except to say a word in relation to the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee. That statement has been repeatedly made on the floor of the Senate, and I desire to say, on a thorough investigation of it, that I believe there is no practical foundation in fact for the assertion that the corporations of this country are stocked at three or four times their cost. There is some "water" in some of the railroads, but it does not amount to a bucketful as compared with the ocean, and I am surprised to hear such a statement from an intelligent member of the Senate, one who ought to know, if he does not know, that such is not the case. The capitalization of the railroads of this country is about $60,000 per mile, stock and bonds, as against $300,000 a mile in England, and as against $100,000 a mile on the continent of Europe; and I assert here from what I know of the situation that the railroads today are capitalized at less than it would be possible to acquire the same property for in actual cash at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. MORGAN. I will support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware because I think the work that we require of these commissioners is entirely supererogatory. We can gain all the information needed in regard to railroads at any time in the direct course of our legislation. I have noticed that when we put the duty of collecting information on commissions they are very apt to make reports for the purpose of continuing the work they may have in hand. I notice that United States engineers, for instance, in making reports on works of public improvement, never fail to find all the little streams throughout the country that they think might be usefully dug out for commerce, not because they feel any decided interest in commerce themselves but because they want to magnify their office. They want to promote the necessity for the employment of those officers in this line of business.

Now you put these commissioners to work and let them collect the facts and they will never come here with a report that will indicate in the slightest degree that it is unnecessary for Congress to continue them any longer. They will always pile in evidence here for the purpose of showing that they ought to be continued in office. That has been the history of a good many of the commissions we have created, and I think the Senator from Delaware is acting wisely in removing this temptation out of the hands of these judges, if they are judges.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to say one word. It seems to me that one of the important things which will result from the passage of this act will be the acquisition of information. One of the troubles with the people of the country is that they suppose that railroads are capitalized over and over again beyond what their actual value is, and they therefore are complaining of extortion. My judgment is that this information is necessary in order to enable the commission to know what reasonable rates are; and it is very important that the provision, now proposed to be stricken out, shall remain in the bill, and I hope it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 22. The commissioners appointed under this act shall be considered and regarded as being executive officers, and shall not exercise either legislative or judicial powers.

Mr. PLATT. They can not exercise judicial powers because they have no life tenure. If you made them judges they would have to have a life tenure under the Constitution, as I understand. Therefore they can not exercise judicial powers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They ought to exercise exactly the power that the bill confers; that is, an executive, discretionary power.

Mr. PLATT. This bill has been very carefully drawn so as to avoid the exercise of judicial powers by these commissioners, so as to deprive it of any constitutional objection. Therefore I do not think this amendment is requisite or necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. I have heard a great variety of expressions among Senators in regard to the functions of these officers, whether they are executive, or whether they are legislative, or whether they are judicial. My judgment is that we have combined very skillfully powers derived from each of these departments of the Government in the hands of these commissioners; and I merely wanted to understand whether they were executive officers, or whether they were legislative officers, or whether they were judicial officers.

Now, the point made by the Senator from Connecticut is not well taken, for commissioners of the United States exercise judicial powers, and they are not appointed for life. They exercise preliminary judicial powers, but nevertheless they originate proceedings of a criminal nature, and sometimes of a civil nature, which run on to and reach the Supreme Court in a judicial way, and can be either affirmed or reversed in the Supreme Court.

I think that in passing this bill we ought to give the courts some guide as to whether we are conferring these powers upon executive officers, or upon judicial officers, or upon legislative officers. I think I have seen in this bill decided evidences of legislative powers, and I suppose the Senate is prepared either to express its opinion or not to express it. I do not care which way so that we have a definite expression.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill confers upon these commissioners powers, much or little, great or small; and to undertake to say that they shall exercise no power of one kind or another is entirely unique in the history of legislation. I should suppose that an amendment of this kind would be offered in order to trammel the exertion of the powers that we confer upon the President of the United States all the time and upon the Secretary of the Treasury and everybody else, to exert in respect to executive and administrative affairs a discretion applied to circumstances. I think, therefore, that the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. A distinction is taken between the right of an executive officer to judge what his duty is and to judge of the extent of his powers, and the exercise by him of powers that are judicial under our Constitution. I do not understand that the President of the United States, the Chief Executive, though he may have a right to cause a man's arrest for a certain offense against the law, can sit as a magistrate to hear the cause and commit that man to jail. He exercises his executive power and must have some discretion, of course, that is the power and discretion of making up his judgment for himself to control his own conduct, but that does not convert him into a judicial officer.

Now, if these commissioners have a right to exercise any judicial function, to sit in judgment on the rights of men, then they are judicial officers, and I want to know merely whether we are conferring that power upon them. If they have the right to change the rights of men by their decrees, whether arbitrary or not, whether just or not, then they are legislative officers. Perhaps they are even more than that; they are autocrats. But we ought to know what they are.

The Senator from Vermont says we have given them powers. Well, we have given them powers, a large admixture of powers, quite a voluminous array of powers. We have given them contradictory powers, I am afraid. I believe we have, and I think it is our duty to be able to expound what is our view of their authority that we are conferring in this bill, and not to leave it as a matter of litigation and dispute to be fought out at the expense of people who go before these commissioners hereafter. It is the first bill I have ever known to be brought into the Senate—and in that respect this bill is unique—where the authors of it were not willing to enter into a definition as to whether the powers they conferred by the bill were conferred upon officers of the executive department, officers of the legislative department, or officers of the judicial department of the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. I only want to say that it is not a matter of the slightest consequence to me whether the powers are called executive, judicial, legislative, or ministerial. We have defined on the face of the bill the powers which are to be exercised by the commissioners, and if those powers are not constitutional, that fact ought to be pointed out. Therefore I see no necessity whatever for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAMDEN. Is it in order now to move an amendment, on page 4, section 4, line 6, by striking out the word "original;" so as to make it read:

For a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction and from the same point of departure?

The word "original" before "departure" is surplusage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have refused to strike out the fourth section, and therefore voted that the words of the fourth section shall stand. Hence, I submit, the amendment is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is in order to strike out one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senate has voted that it will not strike out the fourth section.

Mr. KENNA. Suppose the vote was taken on a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That includes more than the fourth section.

Mr. KENNA. Of course it does, but it is the same proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; quite a different proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will correct the impression he formed and expressed. The word "original" is in the very clause that was once stricken out and restored again by order of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I desired to call attention to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Therefore it is not open to amendment. The Chair supposed the word "original" was in another part of the section, or the ruling would have been different. That word being in the clause stricken out and reinserted by action of the Senate, it is not now amendable. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MCPHERSON and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH (when his name was called). Upon this bill I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], as I was reminded a few moments ago.

Mr. KENNA. I do not doubt but that the Senator from Indiana would vote for the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I shall vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when Mr. CONGER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CONGER] is absent, but he wanted it announced that he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but I am informed he would vote for the bill if present, and therefore I record my vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but understanding that he would vote for this bill if present, I vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], but I understand that if present he would vote "yea," and I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am relieved from my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], as his colleague tells me how he would probably vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] is absent in the service of the Senate visiting an important public institution with which his committee is specially connected. I do not know how he would vote upon the bill as the fourth section now stands, therefore I have not felt at liberty to arrange his pair for him, as I otherwise should and as he requested me to do when he went away.

I desire also permission to say in regard to myself that I should vote against this bill as the fourth section now stands, believing the bill to inflict a very serious injury on our foreign commerce, were it not for my belief that in its passage through Congress that section will in some way be materially modified before it becomes a law, and I do not desire to prevent the opportunity to pass a bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], but as I understand he would vote for this bill, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. The Senator from Kentucky requested me to announce that if present he would vote for the passage of this bill. I so announce.

Mr. BLAIR. My colleague [Mr. PIKE] is absent from the Senate by reason of illness. I am not informed how he would vote upon this question, and I am not aware that he is paired. I can not announce how he would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—47.

Allison,	Evarts,	Logan,	Sabin,
Berry,	Fair,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	George,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sewell,

So the bill was passed.

PENSION TO SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the first special order, which is the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that there has been a conference between Senators on both sides of the Chamber in regard to the order of business, and that it has been understood generally that the pension bill, which stands after this bill in order, will be first taken up; and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the pension bill may be laid before the Senate, and that the bankruptcy bill may preserve its right as the special order after the pension bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the pension bill will be regarded as the unfinished business. Its title will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the bankruptcy bill retains its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not lose its place as a special order.

Mr. BLAIR. Senate bill No. 1886 is the unfinished business for 2 o'clock to-morrow, as I understand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 13, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SPECIAL SESSION OF UTAH LEGISLATURE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The last general appropriation bill passed by the Legislature of Utah was vetoed by the then governor of that Territory. It made an appropriation of money for the support of the district courts of the Territory, including the pay of reporters, jurors, and witnesses, and for the completion and maintenance of the Deseret University and the education of the deaf mutes therein. It also appropriated for the support of the Territorial insane asylum, as well as the salaries of Territorial officers, including that of the superintendent of the district schools, the auditor, the librarian, and the treasurer of the Territory. It also provided for internal improvements, such as roads and bridges.

The appropriation for the district courts, for the payment of witnesses and jurors in criminal cases, was $40,000; that for the Deseret University and the deaf mutes was $66,000, and for the insane asylum $25,000.

The board of regents of the Deseret University have borrowed money for the completion of the university buildings which were authorized by legislative action, and which is now due and no provision made for the payment. The act appropriating for the benefit of the Territorial insane asylum passed by the Legislature was also vetoed. This included the sum of $13,000 which had been borrowed by the board of directors of the asylum for its completion and furnishing, and which now remains due and unpaid. It also included the sum of $3,548.85 for the care and maintenance of the indigent insane.

The Legislature of the Territory, under existing law, will not again convene for nearly two years, there being no authority for a special session. In the mean time, under present conditions, the good order of society will be jeopardized, educational and charitable institutions will be paralyzed, and internal improvements stopped until the Legislature meets and makes provision for their support.

A determination on the part of the General Government to suppress certain unlawful practices in this Territory demands neither the refusal of the means to support the local government nor the sacrifice of the interests of the community.

I therefore recommend the immediate enactment of such legislation as will authorize the assembling of the Legislature of that Territory in special session at an early day, so that provision can be made to meet the difficulties herein suggested.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 11, 1886.

WEIL AND LA ABRA MINING COMPANY CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a report from the Secretary of State, dated the 6th instant, touching the claims of Benjamin Weil and La Abra Silver Mining Company against the Government of Mexico.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 11, 1886.

STATUE OF LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By a joint resolution of Congress, approved March 3, 1877, the President was authorized and directed to accept the colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World when presented by the citizens of the French Republic, and to designate and set apart for the erection thereof a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island in the harbor of New York, and upon the completion thereof to cause the statue "to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic."

The President was further thereby "authorized to cause suitable regulations to be made for its future maintenance as a beacon and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art and the continued good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom."

Under the authority of this resolution, on the 4th day of July, 1884, the minister of the United States to the French Republic, by direction of the President of the United States, accepted the statue and received a deed of presentation from the Franco-American Union, which is now preserved in the archives of the Department of State.

I now transmit to Congress a letter to the Secretary of State from Joseph W. Drexel, esq., chairman of the executive committee of "the American committee on the pedestal of the great statue of 'Liberty Enlightening the World,'" dated the 27th of April, 1886, suggesting the propriety of the further execution by the President of the joint resolution referred to by prescribing the ceremonies of inauguration to be observed upon the complete erection of the statue upon its site on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York.

Thursday, the 3d of September, being the anniversary of the signing of the treaty of peace at Paris by which the independence of these United States was recognized and secured, has been suggested by this committee under whose auspices and agency the pedestal for the statue has been constructed as an appropriate day for the ceremonies of inauguration.

The international character which has been imprinted upon this work by the joint resolution of 1877 makes it incumbent upon Congress to provide means to carry their resolution into effect.

Therefore I recommend the appropriation of such sum of money as in the judgment of Congress shall be deemed adequate and proper to defray the cost of the inauguration of this statue.

I have been informed by the committee that certain expenses have been incurred in the care and custody of the statue since it was deposited on Bedloe's Island, and the phraseology of the joint resolution providing for "the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art" would seem to include the payment by the United States of the expense so incurred since the reception of the statue in this country.

The action of the French Government and people in relation to the presentation of this statue to the United States will, I hope, meet with hearty and responsive action upon the part of Congress, in which the Executive will be most happy to co-operate.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, May 11, 1886.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, in view of the nature of this communication I would suggest that it be referred to the Committee on the Library, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this, having reference as it does to the use of this statue as a beacon-light, might properly be referred to the Committee on Commerce; but in view of the international character of the proceedings with reference to its inauguration it might go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LONG. Then I will change my suggestion, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. It has been already referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; but the Chair will submit the latter part of the gentleman's motion to the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does that give this committee the privilege of reporting legislation for immediate action?

The SPEAKER. It would, under the uniform practice of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. And force the Congress of the United States to pay for celebrating this matter?

The SPEAKER. That would be a question for the determination of the House when the proposition is reported.

The motion of Mr. LONG was agreed to; and the Committee on Foreign Affairs was authorized to report at any time.

INDIAN AGENT, MACKINAC AGENCY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of additional compensation to the Indian agent at the Mackinac agency, Michigan, for the next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. WATKINS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order and findings of fact in the case of John R. Watkins vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims rendered against the United States in the Court of Claims, and recommending an appropriation for their payment; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del.; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., with an announcement by the Senate that that body disagreed to the amendments of the House, requested a committee of conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. VANCE.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request for the conference will be agreed to, and the Chair will announce the conferees on the part of the House hereafter.

DECORATION DAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

DEPARTMENT OF THE POTOMAC,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Washington, D. C., May 10, 1886.

SIR: The executive committee on memorial services have the honor to extend to you and through you to the Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress a most cordial invitation to unite with the comrades of this department in the ceremonies in honor of their deceased comrades at Arlington, Va., on Monday, the 31st instant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. E. FAUNCE,
Assistant Adjutant-General and Secretary.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

VISIT TO BATTLEFIELDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1886.

SIR: On behalf of the association of the First Army Corps of the Army of the Potomac, I have the honor to extend to you and to the members of the House over which you preside a cordial invitation to join the association in a visit to the battlefields of South Mountain and Antietam, Maryland, on the 17th and 18th of the present month.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

EDWARD S. BRAGG,
Chairman of Committee.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'HARA, for fifteen days, from the 14th instant.

To Mr. MITCHELL, for one week.

To Mr. LOWRY, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. LONG, indefinitely.

To Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WADE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LYMAN, until Saturday morning of the present week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CUTCHEON, for one day, to be absent from the city.

To Mr. WINANS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference two or three bills, as I was unable to be present on Monday.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not present on Monday for the purpose of introducing bills.

There was no objection.

EDWARD S. HARRISON.

Mr. EDEN introduced a bill (H. R. 8747) to place on the pension-roll the name of Edward S. Harrison, of the county of Shelby, State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK P. WINCHESTER.

Mr. EDEN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8748) to place on the pension-roll the name of Frank P. Winchester, of Montgomery County, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. WILLIAMS.

Mr. EDEN also introduced a bill (H. R. 8749) to increase the pension of James H. Williams, of Montgomery County, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FICHTHORN.

Mr. CURTIN (by Mr. STORM) introduced a bill (H. R. 8750) to increase the pension of William Fichthorn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL F. RICE.

Mr. FORNEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8751) for the relief of Samuel F. Rice; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

J. D. AUSTIN.

Mr. PETERS introduced a bill (H. R. 8752) granting a pension to J. D. Austin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MALACHI KNISSELL.

Mr. PETERS also introduced a bill (H. R. 8753) granting a pension to Malachi Knissell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER O. WATSON.

Mr. PETERS also introduced a bill (H. R. 8754) granting a pension to Walter O. Watson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BRUMM. I desire to call the attention of the House to an error in the RECORD in the report of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. The RECORD shows the gentleman from Alabama spoke as follows:

I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] for the suggestion that the statements refer to the conspirator, Edwin M. Stanton.

The correction I want to have made is that the gentleman used the words "to the arch conspirator, Edwin M. Stanton." I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama does not appear to be in his seat.

Mr. BRUMM. Then I will withhold this matter until the gentleman comes in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8087), and that the same be taken up for present consideration.

Mr. BEACH. In pursuance of the notice that I gave last Saturday, I shall be obliged to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 8287) to authorize the State National Bank of Lincoln, Nebr., to increase its capital stock;

A bill (H. R. 7687) to change the name of the Muscatine Bank in Iowa.

BAYOU TECHE, GRAND LAKE, AND CHARENTON, LA.

Mr. IRION, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported a bill (H. R. 8755) for connecting Bayou Teche with Grand Lake at Charenton, La.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS' QUARTERS, NEW YORK ARSENAL.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7764) for the erection of officers' quarters at New York arsenal; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWAY A. GRANT.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 267) for the relief of Edway A. Grant; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

T. H. NORTON AND JAMES M'LEAN.

Mr. MCKENNA, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4760) for the relief of T. H. Norton and James McLean; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN RYAN.

Mr. LOUTTIT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5921) granting an increase of pension to John Ryan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION IN PATENT SUITS.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6320) extending the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to certain suits for the use of patents and patented inventions against the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PROCEDURE UNITED STATES COURTS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3883, a bill (H. R. 8756) to simplify the pleadings and procedure in criminal cases in the courts of the United States and of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 3883) was laid on the table.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to file the views of the minority, to be printed with the report of the committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 363) granting a pension to Edward Ayers;

A bill (S. 483) to restore Sidney B. Tullan to the pension-roll;

A bill (S. 612) granting a pension to William Weightman;

A bill (S. 843) granting a pension to Elise Burki;

A bill (S. 957) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch;

A bill (S. 963) granting a pension to Harriet M. Rider;

A bill (S. 977) granting a pension to Elizabeth Barker;

A bill (S. 1020) authorizing the District of Columbia to convey the alley 15 feet wide, running east and west between lots 6 and 7, in square 635, comprising an area of 3,480 square feet of land, to the owner of said lots;

A bill (S. 1065) granting a pension to Emeline J. Babson;

A bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.;

A bill (S. 1152) granting a pension to Sarah E. Bassett;

A bill (S. 1290) granting a pension to David W. Hamilton;

A bill (S. 1438) granting a pension to Isom Wilkerson;

A bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler;

A bill (S. 1998) for the relief of John D. Ham;

A bill (S. 2134) granting a pension to Patrick A. Callanan;

A bill (S. 2185) for the relief of George Titus;

A bill (S. 2186) granting a pension to Louis Melcher;

A bill (S. 2187) for the relief of Rebecca E. Haskins; and

A bill (S. 2188) granting a pension to Ann Smith.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration, under the rule, of bills called up by committees, begins at twenty-five minutes before 12 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

Mr. BELMONT. I call up for consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 147) providing indemnity to certain Chinese subjects for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be first reported.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will state the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT].

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the sum of $147,748.74 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Chinese Government, in consideration of the losses unhappily sustained by certain Chinese subjects by mob violence at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, September 2, 1885; the said sum being intended for distribution among the sufferers and their legal representatives, in the discretion of the Chinese Government.

SEC. 2. That the further restriction of Chinese or coolie labor immigration, if the same shall be found necessary and expedient, can be most properly accomplished by the modification of existing treaties.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs was read, as follows:

Strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this joint resolution, and that it be now considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUTTIT. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 89, noes 7.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HATCH in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of joint resolution (H. Res. 147) providing indemnity to certain Chinese subjects for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask that the report of the committee, which embraces the message of the President of the United States on this subject, in which this whole subject of Chinese indemnity is thoroughly presented and fully discussed, be read:

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]?

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I think that the business of the House will be more quickly disposed of if the reading of the report is dispensed with. It contains the message of the President together with voluminous documents. I think I can explain the matter briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized as first entitled to the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky later.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I am confident there need be no special appeal made to the sense of justice which exists in this House; and it hardly seems necessary to do more than briefly state the facts concerning this unfortunate affair in order to bring the House to a full understanding of the grounds upon which was based the President's message of March 2 on this subject, and the reasons which have induced the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask unanimously the passage of this joint resolution.

In September last there occurred at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, a conflict among the laborers engaged in the mines, of whom it should be remarked at the outset that none appear to have been citizens of the United States. Rock Springs consisted of two settlements, one inhabited chiefly by Welchmen and Swedes, the other by Chinamen. All received the same rate of pay of $3.50 a day the year round; and for eight years the white and the Chinese miners had lived and worked peaceably alongside of each other. Last summer a strike was attempted to be organized by the white miners. The Chinese refused to take part in it. The evidence is clear and uncontradicted that no other cause of offense was given. On the 2d of September the white miners, to the number of about one hundred and fifty, armed themselves with rifles and made a sudden attack upon the defenseless Chinamen. The shooting continued for ten hours; twenty-eight of the Chinamen were killed, a number wounded, and their quarters were burned and plundered. No serious effort was made to bring to punishment the perpetrators of this outrage. An inquest was held over the bodies of some of the victims, and this was the verdict rendered:

We, the undersigned, members of the coroner's jury, from the evidence before us, state that human bodies Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 came to their death from exposure to fire, the nationality of said bodies being unknown to us, as they were defaced beyond recognition.

The report of the grand jury was as follows:

We have diligently inquired into the occurrence at Rock Springs on the 2d day of September last, and, though we have examined a large number of witnesses, no one has been able to testify to a single criminal act committed by any known white person that day. Whatever crimes may have been committed, the perpetrators thereof have not been disclosed by the evidence before us; and, therefore, while we deeply regret the circumstance, we are wholly unable, acting under the obligation of our oaths, to return indictments.

Shortly after, under the protection of United States troops, the consuls of the Chinese Empire in New York and San Francisco proceeded to the scene of the massacre and made a careful investigation and report. Of this the President of the United States says:

In the investigation of the Rock Springs outbreak and the ascertainment of the facts on which the Chinese minister's statements rest, the Chinese representatives were aided by the agents of the United States, and the reports submitted, having been thus framed and recounting facts within the knowledge of witnesses on both sides, possess an impartial truthfulness which could not fail to give them great impressiveness.

In the papers accompanying the message is contained a statement in detail of the value of the property destroyed, which averages for each Chinaman mobbed about $200; and the whole amount is the sum named in this joint resolution.

It may be urged against the payment of indemnity under these circumstances that the subjects of China are under our treaties entitled to the same remedies at law as our own citizens; that the Territorial, State, and Federal courts are open to them for redress. But this is provided always that the laws are executed and enforced. In this instance it is clear that they were not executed, which goes far in determining our responsibility and liability as a Government. Besides, whatever may be said to the contrary, it is a fact that the States do not protect foreigners from the hatred or prejudice of their citizens.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman a question right here. Of what nationality were the men who murdered these Chinamen?

Mr. BELMONT. They were Welshmen and Swedes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. None were American citizens?

Mr. BELMONT. It does not appear that any of them were American citizens.

Mr. FELTON. All of them were aliens, were they not?

Mr. BELMONT. All of them, as far as can be ascertained.

Mr. FELTON. One alien against another—the Asiatic against the European?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Or the reverse.

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir.

The States have surrendered to the National Government their power over the intercourse of their citizens with foreign nations. It may perhaps be argued that throughout all of the treaties with China there runs a certain lack of reciprocity in respect to certain restrictions as to residence and occupation imposed upon our citizens in China; which, on the other hand, are not placed upon the subjects of the Chinese Empire within our own borders. For instance, the treaty of 1844, in article 1, applies to our citizens "resorting to China for purposes of commerce." Article 3 permits Americans to frequent certain specific ports. Article 17, among other things, provides:

And in order to the preservation of the public peace the local officers of the government at each of the five ports shall, in concert with the consuls, define the limits beyond which it shall not be lawful for the citizens of the United States to go.

These conditions are substantially retained in the treaty of 1868, and even in 1880 we are not admitted to full reciprocity in respect to the matter of intercourse within the Chinese Empire. But at all times the Chinese when they are here can go where they will and can engage in any occupation they may choose. We have, however, no fault to find with China on that ground.

The differences between our free institutions and the civilization of China are sufficient reasons in justification of it, and it does not in the least interfere with the friendly relations which we have maintained and which we desire to continue to maintain with China, and we may well recall the promptness and the fairness with which China has always responded to our own demands for similar indemnities, which have been paid to us in large amounts in the past.

Should the House see fit to adopt the recommendations of the President in this message, it will assume the claim which the Chinese minister has made under the instructions of his government to be a debt of honor which we owe to China; and while we thus express our sympathy with the victims of a wrong which the Government of the United States could neither foresee nor prevent, we are well aware that it is our own Government, rather than that of China, which has suffered the greater indignity and injury by reason of this flagrant violation of our laws.

We desire to extend to China the same liberality and generosity which characterizes the action of the Government of the United States in its relation to all foreign powers; and it must at the same time be made very clear that the results of mob dictation and mob violence have only to be made known in this House to meet with the condemnation which they merit. It is not so much many and new laws the country demands of Congress as it is the execution and enforcement on the part of the Government of laws already existing, under which we should abide.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman before he takes his seat how this amount was ascertained?

Mr. BELMONT. By a careful investigation made by the officers of the Chinese Government; and we were also represented, as stated in the President's message, the extracts from which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How is it ascertained that China is satisfied with that amount?

Mr. BELMONT. China, through its minister, made the claim, specifying the amount ascertained, and the President recommended its payment.

Mr. PETERS. Is there any evidence showing that any of these parties had indicated any intention of becoming citizens of the United States?

Mr. BELMONT. There is no such evidence.

Mr. PETERS. The inference is that none of them had declared their intention to become citizens?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir; of course the gentleman's question does not refer to the Chinese, who can not become citizens.

Mr. MORROW. Under the law the Chinese can not become citizens of the United States.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from New York if under the treaties with China this Government is under any obligation to pay an indemnity in this case?

Mr. BELMONT. No more in respect to China than any other nation.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then this proposition is entirely voluntary on our part?

Mr. BELMONT. It is not entirely voluntary in the sense I understand the gentleman to mean. It is to meet an obligation——

Mr. DUNHAM. Are we under any more obligation to pay this indemnity than to pay for damages that might occur to the citizens of the United States in any of the Territories?

Mr. BELMONT. Oh, yes. These were subjects of a foreign government, and the distinction is very clear. Our own citizens do not certainly claim the protection of the Federal Government in such cases; but they have the privilege of going into the courts of the States or the Territories to seek redress for their wrongs. But there is a failure of justice in this case.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that we are more under obligations in this case than we would be if these people had been American citizens?

Mr. BELMONT. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman state the basis of the calculation—upon what the committee fixed a value?

Mr. BELMONT. On the property; not upon the lives of the victims.

Mr. HISCOCK. And what they ask for is the value of the property destroyed?

Mr. BELMONT. Exactly.

Mr. HISCOCK. And the lives of the men are not taken into account?

Mr. BELMONT. They are not taken into account. I must refuse to yield further for questions, because there are gentlemen who desire to address the committee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON]. But first I will ask unanimous consent to limit general debate to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. MCCREARY. I object.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON].

Mr. FELTON. As three minutes are hardly time enough to discuss this question in any of its parts, I simply desire to say this, and I say it with due respect to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that if they had expended their time in examining the causes from which these outrages arose, if they had looked to the history of the past, they would have found as they followed the history of Chinese immigration, without one deviation whatsoever, that this outrage was the natural result of that immigration, and they would have addressed their attention to the curing of the evil rather than to palliating or paying for scenes like these. I have no time to go into details, and will give to my colleague [Mr. MCKENNA] the balance of my time.

Mr. BELMONT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW].

Mr. MORROW. This resolution standing alone is perhaps a measure of doubtful propriety, but considering our relations with China, and the necessity not only for further legislation but further treaty stipulations absolutely prohibiting the immigration of Chinese subjects to this country, I am disposed to think that the benevolence of Congress in this matter may be an act of wisdom. The proposition is that the General Government shall pay to the Empire of China a sum of money as indemnity for the cruel outrages committed upon Chinamen at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September last.

Two classes of laborers, both alien, were in the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company working coal mines at Rock Springs. A controversy arose out of that employment, and a collision followed, as has happened many times before elsewhere under like circumstances. Murder and spoliation ran riot. The Chinamen were driven from their habitations, a number were murdered, many were wounded, and some property was destroyed. The whole affair was disgraceful in the extreme, and can not be excused or ignored. The most that can be said is that no citizen of the United States was engaged in the massacre. This may console us somewhat in the regard we have for American citizenship, but it does not right the wrong that has been committed on American soil. Our national fame is involved in the course we shall pursue with reference to this unfortunate occurrence. The Chinese Government has presented a claim for indemnity for the losses sustained by her subjects, and as the purpose of this resolution is to pay that claim, the question at once arises, why does the Federal Government assume the obligations of a local Territorial community in this particular case? The answer is, that no legal obligations are assumed, but because the local authorities at Rock Springs have failed to enforce the laws and furnish proper protection to the Chinese subjects temporarily residing at that place the United States will, under the peculiar circumstances of this case and as an act of benevolence, satisfy the claim of China in this behalf.

Some further justification for this indemnity may perhaps be found in the provisions of Article III of the treaty of November 17, 1880, between the United States and China, which provides as follows:

If Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

The agreement on the part of the United States to exert all its power to devise measures for the protection of Chinese residing in this country is, of course, not a legal obligation to indemnify the Chinese Government for the absence of that protection in any particular case; but is there not a moral obligation to deal generously with the Chinese Government in a case like the present one when the proper responsible channels to redress have been closed? Under our form of government an obligation on the part of the General Government to assume responsibility for the conduct of local police affairs is clearly inadmissible as trenching upon the duties of local sovereignty, but the Federal jurisdiction, under its treaty-making power, may deal with any nation upon such generous and honorable terms as shall serve the best interest of the people of the United States. This is a material and important point in this matter. The people of the United States, and particularly those who reside on the Pacific coast, are deeply concerned in the relations that shall continue to exist between the United States and China.

We demand that the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country shall absolutely cease. We have already entered into treaty stipulations with the Chinese Government with that purpose in view. We have legislated under that treaty to carry this purpose into effect, but the persistent character of the Chinese people in seeking the advantages of a new country and a free government has set our efforts at defiance. Further legislation is proposed. Indeed it is announced that the next bill to be considered from the Committee on Foreign Affairs is one designed to more effectually carry out the purpose of the existing treaty with China respecting the restriction of Chinese immigration. I regret that the restriction bill was not first brought forward.

Such a proceeding would have shown a disposition on the part of Congress to remove the cause of disease before applying the plaster to the sore. If the dangers that now threaten us from this direction were fully understood, Congress would not hesitate a moment in its action, but would at once put an end to the controversy by the abrogation of so much of the Burlingame treaty as gives sanction to this hostile invasion. I say hostile invasion, because however peaceable it may appear to the casual and uninformed observer, it nevertheless carries with it a poison absolutely destructive to the labor industries and free institutions of this country. Between Asiatic labor and American labor there is an antagonism beyond the reach of arbitration, compromise, or judicial decree. We must not mistake the situation. There are danger-signals flying which we would do well to heed. The sky of social order is ominously overcast and threatening, and unless we are firm of purpose and wise in counsel the storm will come and find us unprepared to resist its fury or escape its perils. In Europe the emergency would be met with the force of a standing army. We have no standing army, and do not propose to provide for one for the purpose of intimidating our own people. Our method of security does not lie in the direction of armed men.

The duty of the hour is clearly to protect American labor by giving it all the safeguards we can devise and see that it is treated justly. In doing this we will preserve the life and vigor of our civilization for ourselves and for those who, inheriting our hopes and aspirations, shall come after us. Legislation such as the occasion demands in settlement of the Chinese question is not now promised by Congress. We are told that our present treaty with China will not permit extreme measures, and that we must not legislate in contravention of its express or implied terms. Then we insist that the treaty must be abrogated sooner or later and this barrier to our freedom of action removed. We can not continue in this state of uncertainty, breeding restlessness and discontent among a people already disturbed and anxious from other causes. The honest, intelligent labor of the country demands that this question shall be effectually and permanently settled, and men of business and affairs see that their security and prosperity depend upon the removal of these causes of agitation. The present restriction act provides for the exclusion of Chinese laborers for a period of ten years. Four years have already run, and the Chinaman still comes slyly creeping in through the holes his cunning has discovered in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORROW. I should like to have two minutes more.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] a question. Do I understand that he is in favor of this proposition?

Mr. MORROW. I am. I was about to state so, if I can have another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield further time to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. We ought to stop this immigration and extend the period of exclusion for at least twenty years, so that those who may seek labor and fortune in the great West may be assured that for at least the active period of one human life they will be protected from further inroads from that direction. We ought to go still further, and this is the point I desire to make in favor of this indemnity. In order that all cause for alarm in the future may be removed we should by treaty stipulations make the exclusion of Chinese laborers from this country absolute and perpetual. To this end I would place the administration in the best possible position to honorably demand such terms and conditions from China as would secure this important result. I would strengthen the hands of the Executive in every legitimate and proper way, so that in the event of a failure to secure the consent and co-operation of China in this matter we will at least be left free to act for the best interests of our own people. This indemnity will be money well expended, if while discharging whatever moral obligations we may be under we can also make it do duty in paving the way to a settlement of this vexed question of Chinese immigration. In this view of the situation, and considering the benefit that may accrue to this country by the course indicated, I shall support the measure. And for these reasons I differ from some of my colleagues upon this question, although having the same object in view and as earnest as they in securing it. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] seven minutes.

Mr. FELTON. Before my colleague commences I will state that I will give him the two minutes which I had reserved.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, any proposition that can invoke the aid of sympathy and sentiment is more than specious; and any opposition to it, with whatever good intention urged or with whatever good reason supported, may seem cold, if not invidious.

The law was outraged at Rock Springs, and even now we can not hear of the massacre on that occasion without being filled with indignant horror, and our excited sympathies are apt to consider as mean a refusal to remunerate the victims of that unfortunate occurrence by at least indemnifying them for the property that was stolen or destroyed.

But, sir, notwithstanding what has been said it is not clear to me that an outbreak of race antipathies in which no American participated though it was made horrible by arson and murder has any claim to the consideration of this Congress. Our deputed function should be directed by something else than feeling; and it may be urged that to the representatives of a people with limited power that there are no moral obligations except what are also legal ones and the groaning Calendar of this House admonishes us that we have other use for $147,000 than bestowing them in benevolence, expending them upon factitious obligations or squandering them in romantic and showy comity. I would not counsel a disregard of the usual comity of nations, nor for our self-respect would I urge less to be shown China than to any other nation. Nor would I hunt with grudging purpose and miserly, minute vision through the intricate relations existing between the States or Territories and the General Government for reasons to evade any liability; and if I could see in the facts of the case one reason to impute blame to the General Government or any substantial claim to our sympathy and our charity that could not be urged as a dangerous example hereafter, I, sir, would support this measure.

President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard are very distinct in affirming that no blame can be imputed to the Government. It is true they think it is a proper matter to be submitted to the compassionate consideration of Congress. But Mr. Evarts and Mr. Blaine in like situations denied an appeal for indemnity for the Denver riots in 1880. It did not occur to their manly, practical sense that there was any reason for the Government's benevolence to be exercised or that it was its duty to requite every injury caused by "man's inhumanity to man."

But my colleague says there is something in the treaty that is of special obligation; that we have assumed to exert ourselves to protect these people and to afford them like rights as we do those of the most favored nation. Mr. Chairman, if there is any effect in that provision it is to limit, not extend, liability, and have not we discharged it? It is not said that there was any blame before the riots; it is not claimed that there was any default on the part of the Government afterward, and it so promptly interfered, Mr. Chairman, that it is no figure of speech to say that the fugitive Chinamen were escorted back by Government troops, installed in their employments, and have been protected there ever since. But the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs says that a coroner's jury ignored all personal knowledge of the rioters. Well, suppose it did. Is this Government to be substituted to the misconduct or the dereliction of a local tribunal? And, sir, when are we to stop? Are we to continue this vicarious atonement for all the lawlessness that is committed everywhere? But Secretary Bayard says that we are to call this no precedent. He says that we shall stop here. Sir, it is an example of some kind; if it is a good one it ought to be followed; if it is a bad one it is sure to be. The declaration, sir, is either idle or inconsistent, and exposes the slender grounds upon which this claim to our charity or our courtesy or our benevolence, or whatever you may please to call it, rests.

Further, Mr. Chairman, if we indemnify the victims of this riot, why not indemnify the victims of every riot? A nation can not be expected to furnish to aliens ampler remedy and surer remuneration for injury than to its own citizens. This is the vice, the discrimination of the pending measure; and if we pass this resolution, if we pay this money, we can have no reason to refuse to requite the victims of the riots in Chicago or of the late labor strikes. Those who lost property in those affairs can come to this Congress and claim like reparation, and complain—ay, sir, justly complain—if they are turned over to the local tribunals for redress, to run the chance of inadequate recovery, because juries prejudiced against them or sympathetic with the strikers may return bad verdicts or false ones.

Now, as to the amount of the claim, Mr. Chairman, I have this to say: If it is intended to smooth diplomatic relations with China, and is to be given to the Government instead of to those who were injured, I say do it well. If it is to be a donation of the charity, the mercy, the pity of this Congress, I would say, sir, borrowing the thought and the language of another, give your dollars as though they were leaves and you had a forest to draw from. But, sir, if it is intended to be strict remuneration for the loss of property, I say you should take some means to ascertain whether the amount of money which is set forth in the report is the true amount or not, and I have been credibly informed that the assessment-roll of Sweetwater County, Wyoming Territory, will reveal the fact that only $200 of property was assessed against Chinamen at the time they say they had $147,000, and that $200 was for a piece of real estate.

I submit, then, Mr. Chairman, that there is no reason to pass this measure. I submit that it is not a proper matter to appeal to the benevolence of Congress, that it is not a proper matter for the charity of Congress. It will set a dangerous precedent which will be urged hereafter as charitable certainly, and as just also, because if you refuse like charity to some other victim you do an injustice. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think this Congress should refuse to pass this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

Mr. MILLS. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for one minute.

Mr. BELMONT assented.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this report comes from the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the unanimous consent of the members of that committee. I want some of the gentlemen who are going to advocate the report before the House to tell us why we ought to pay this indemnity to the Chinese, and, at the same time, to tell us why no bill has been reported to this House to indemnify our own citizens who have suffered from depredations committed by Indians, who also have treaty relations with the Government of the United States. What distinction is there between the rights of citizens of the United States whose property has been despoiled by Indians and the rights of these Chinese whose property has been despoiled? I put this question in order to invite discussion by gentlemen who are urging the speedy passage of this resolution, in order that they may tell the House upon what principle it is that our own citizens who have been for years despoiled of their property by Indians, and who have been appealing to Congress year after year for redress, and who have now claims amounting to six or eight million dollars filed in the Interior Department, have never had one dollar appropriated by Congress to indemnify them for their losses.

Mr. BELMONT. Is all this to come out of my time?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I suggest to the gentleman that his question should be directed to the Committee on Indian Affairs, not to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MILLS. I am asking it of the House.

Mr. HITT. The observations of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] may be very pertinent upon some other bill when our domestic affairs are under discussion; but this is a measure touching our relations with the Empire of China, and growing out of the principles of justice among men and the obligation under which we have placed ourselves by the third article of the treaty of 1880 with China, by which we solemnly promised to protect Chinamen in the territory of the United States who meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons. We are to protect them not only against our own citizens, but Welsh and Swedes not naturalized and all other persons—when they are within the United States, and to secure to them the same rights as the subjects of the most favored nation.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. MCKENNA] said that the passage of this joint resolution would be a dangerous precedent. Let me remind him that it is in the line of precedent, and it would be a violation of the national duty not to follow here as a Christian nation the policy and course which our Government has adopted over and over again in dealing with questions of this character. We paid $71,000 for the houses and other property of twenty-two Spanish subjects destroyed at Key West and at New Orleans by furious mobs, in 1851, like this one at Rock Springs. We have claimed payments over and over again in similar cases where the government or its courts had failed to prevent wrongs to American citizens. I might cite one which is within the knowledge of every citizen of the United States, where we demanded from Great Britain indemnity for our citizens injured by the Alabama and other cruisers because she would not enforce her local laws, because she permitted men to organize within her borders and prepare for piracy and crime upon the high seas at the expense of our people. She failed to prevent these crimes and losses as we failed to prevent or punish the crimes so horribly perpetrated at Rock Springs on Chinamen. We claimed that the Government of Great Britain, not the individual citizens who perpetrated the crimes, should pay that bill; and uncounted millions were handed over as we demanded them. A king's ransom was paid for the losses of our citizens in that case, and was paid without question as to the amounts or details of losses.

We have made similar demands over and over again of many different nations. We made a demand of this kind from China herself; we took $67,000 for mob violence——

Mr. HAMMOND. I was about to remind the gentleman that we have demanded indemnity from China herself over and over again and have obtained it.

Mr. HITT. Yes, sir; my friend would have heard me state in a moment that we took from China $735,000 in 1858 on demands which we did not let that government scrutinize, and $67,000 of that was for mob violence to Americans just as Chinamen were injured by mob violence at Rock Springs. We exacted so much money then from the Chinese Government that there were not claims enough to absorb it, and after all were satisfied several hundred thousand remained for many years, and in the last Congress our time was taken up in finding out how much of this vast sum in excess of any just demands had been retained by us more than twenty years, nearly thirty years—money which we demanded long ago from an unwilling but yielding nation, and from which we made payments upon every claim that any American could invent, and at last had to send back a great sum to the Chinese Government; and in that case no Chinese official was ever permitted to look into the evidences on which our demand was based.

The gentleman from California says these amounts proposed to be paid to victims are extravagant—$200 or $300 each for all that men had on earth; men who were wounded, driven from their homes, thrown back while wounded into their burning houses and burned alive; others escaping to the mountains, robbed, bare, and outcast! More than seven hundred of these unhappy men were thus outraged; and the gentleman thinks the sum of $147,000 is extravagant.

The gentleman says that for the outrages committed in this case no American citizen is responsible. Were they not accessories to these crimes after the fact? Is there no responsibility resting upon the coroner and a jury of American citizens who thought it fitting to put a jest into their finding upon this horrible crime, who said, in what should have been the solemn finding of the coroner's jury upon the charred bodies of men wounded by murderers who boasted of it and thrown into the flames of their houses, that they thought "the said parties must have come to their death by fire."

Where is there redress if not here for these unhappy people? Can they sue their murderers and robbers before courts where justice is administered to Chinamen in such horrible mockery of justice? Only the Government can help them.

We have demanded of the Chinese Government pay for injuries by mobs and all other forms of injury to individual Americans. I could occupy your time until the sun goes down in reciting the cases. They are innumerable; they run through almost every year of our intercourse with China since 1844. We have presented bills in enormous amounts for losses in household furniture and for personal injuries. We did not ask $200 per injured man as damages. For example, an American named Edwards, in Canton, at a time when the British and the Chinese were in hostility, was mistaken for an Englishman. One of our anglo-maniacs would have been flattered by the mistake [laughter], but Edwards was not. They put him in irons, hurried him to prison, and kept him there till near night, when the mistake was discovered and he was liberated, the mandarins expressing their sorrow for the occurrence. Our minister presented a bill in that case for $31,- 600, and it was paid. How many millions would this resolution require for seven hundred and sixty-four outraged Chinamen by that rule of value?

Take another instance. A missionary, Mr. Corbett, went off 130 miles from the treaty port where he had been stationed. A mob there maltreated him and injured his property. He was engaged in preaching the gospel of peace. He complained of the violence which he had suffered, and our Christian nation sent a consul and a vessel to settle the occurrence. The Chinamen were dragged 140 miles from their homes. Twenty-eight of them were punished; some by being beaten with the bamboo, some receiving forty blows, some sixty, some eighty. Others were imprisoned. The whole claim of the missionary for all his losses was paid in full; and the Chinese authorities were commanded to announce that hereafter the gospel of peace should be proclaimed without molestation.

In that stern fashion the Chinese Government punished those who troubled an American; in that liberal spirit they indemnified him for all losses. Shall we cavil now at this bill? The Christian nations pass by the Chinese courts contemptuously, though our commissioner says they are faithful and punctual, and make their demands on the government, which has to pay them. They have yielded to force to admit the vile opium traffic. All they do is yield and pay. Their knowledge of foreign nations is all painful and humiliating.

Is it wonderful that Chinese writers find some justification for that national distrust and often hatred of foreigners that pervades the borders of China where foreigners are known?

Is it not most ungracious in us, after the high and hard demands we have made upon China for every bruise or insult an American has suffered, to haggle over this resolution to pay $147,000 for the losses of more than seven hundred people driven from their homes, shot, their dwellings burned, they themselves in some instances murdered as they fled, or dragging their wounded limbs and starving to death afterward upon the sterile mountains? The property lost by these people was their all. The President, in his message, says the investigation into the losses by the Chinese consuls and the agents of the United States was impartial and their report truthful. Shall the survivors of those outrages go to the courts? What one among these timid creatures would dare face almost certain death by going into a court-house to sue these ruffians? The courts afford no remedy for Chinese. Fancy those unhappy wretches drawing near a court of justice in California! [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has expired.

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WORTHINGTON].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, it is not claimed this resolution is based upon any treaty stipulation or any well-established principle of international law. Nor, on the other hand, can I assent at all to the expression of the Executive in his message calling favorable attention to this subject, in which he speaks of the action here proposed as "wholly gratuitous and resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity." If I believed the action was based solely on gratuitous and generous motives I should certainly vote against this proposition. But I believe, sir, there are cogent reasons for its adoption, and in the short time given to me I can but advert to some of them without attempting to amplify or defend them.

In the first place, it is a matter of policy a resolution of this kind should be passed. Gentlemen must not forget we have nearly one thousand American residents in China, with hundreds of thousands of dollars invested there. The same prejudices which exist here against Chinese in China exist against American residents. If we fail to make some reparation for damages done to Chinese residents here, it is but natural in the cities of China, in the densely populated quarters in which our American residents live there, the Chinese will be actuated by the same feelings which actuated these assailants of Chinese in Wyoming, and our residents will suffer therefrom.

But it is evident it is the desire of our people that more strict laws be passed against Chinese immigration. The experience of the last twenty-five years has demonstrated that Chinese laborers are unwelcome in this country. We never want to see the day when our American laborers shall live in the manner in which the Chinese live. Nor do we want to see the day come when they will compete with them by living in that way.

Now, if that is true, it is certainly right, while we propose to go to the very verge of treaty stipulations in excluding Chinese, we should at least manifest the same degree of fairness and liberality in settling for damages which have been done to them that they have shown in paying for damages done to American citizens.

It is very true there is no precedent on the part of America for paying damages in the shape of indemnity to Chinese, but there is example on the part of Chinese we as a Christain nation may do well to follow.

Gentlemen must not forget that in 1858 $738,000 was paid by the Chinese Government to be used for the purpose of indemnity for damages suffered by Americans. It ought not to be forgotten the damages were estimated solely by a commission of America, by which no Chinese were employed at all, and that, after canvassing and giving to every claimant every damage he claimed, and to which the commissioners believed he was entitled, there was a surplus, as declared by Mr. Ward in the following language:

On the 26th of January, 1860, Minister Ward transmitted to the Secretary of State the following report of the commission, and said, as far as I have been able to learn every claimant is content with the amount awarded. Certainly such ought to be the fact, and yet the amount secured by the treaty will not be exhausted, but after paying every just demand against the Chinese Government there will be a surplus of more than $200,000.

Now, after the commission had granted every amount there was enough in excess to warrant Congress, as I understand, by its action finally, out of this amount to appropriate the further sum of $151,259 for demands our own commission had absolutely refused to allow.

We boast we are a Christian nation. We think we are on a plane of civilization higher than the Chinese. We send our missionaries to heathen China to convert the Chinese. Shall it be avowed and said we will allow them to be murdered in Christian America and will refuse to make that reparation which China amply gave for damages suffered by our citizens resident in China?

I, for one, while fully acknowledging we are not bound by any treaty stipulations, we are not bound by any principle of international law, am willing to base my action on the broad principles of equity and of that comity which ought to control the intercourse between the United States and China now as heretofore, and be willing as a Christian to follow the example these heathens, as we call them, have set us. [Applause.]

I do not wish to consume any further time.

Mr. BELMONT. I wish now to yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE]. I would like to know, before taking my seat, how much time I have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only five minutes of the time remaining.

Mr. RICE. I ask by unanimous consent, as the time has been taken up out of the hour allowed by the committee by interruptions, I may have five minutes in addition to the five minutes remaining of the hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman's time can be taken to-morrow.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the unanimity with which the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported this bill to the House seems to me to be followed by similar unanimity on the part of the House, which seems almost unanimous in its support; and yet, sir, I am unwilling to let it go that we are passing this bill as an act of benevolence or as anything else than an act of international obligation.

My friend who has just taken his seat [Mr. WORTHINGTON] says that there is no international law resting upon this Government to demand from it the passage of this bill of indemnity to these foreigners, who were within our borders by our invitation and the treaty rights, and yet who were subjected to violence and loss by persons also under our jurisdiction and within the limits of our territory.

I say, sir, that our obligation to indemnify the victims of this violence rests upon well-established international law, in which, neither when we go to the authorities nor when we search the precedents, can there be found a single break. I am unable, sir, within the limited time at my disposal to state this rule of international law in my own language, and, therefore, take it from Vattel, summed up in a single sentence:

If a nation refuses or fails to pass the laws necessary to restrain its citizens from aggressions upon other states, or upon their citizens, or if such laws have been enacted and the officers of the state neglect to enforce them, and such aggressions by individuals result therefrom, the state is unquestionably responsible for the injury.

One gentleman asked, are we more responsible for these injuries than if they had been done to our own citizens? I answer, yes, sir; we are. Our own citizens are a part of our body-politic. They look to our domestic laws for protection. But when foreigners from other states come to this land they are not obliged to look to our domestic municipal laws; they appeal to that great code of international law which is recognized by every Christian nation on earth.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour having expired, the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration joint resolution H. Res. 147 had come to no resolution thereon.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill. There being no amendment pending, the Clerk will report the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: For postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, but in no case at a greater rate of pay than is fixed by law; for expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains, where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts and on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department; compensation of forage and wagon masters authorized by the act of July 5, 1838; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, medicine for horses and mules, picket-ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movement and operations of the Army, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $675,000: Provided, That $250,000 of the appropriation for incidental expenses, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be set aside for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at constant labor of not less than ten days; but no such payment shall be made at any greater rate per day than is fixed by law for the class of persons employed and the work done.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "soldiers," in line 267, the words "authorized office furniture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the additional amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 268, after the words "Quartermaster's Department," insert "including the hire of interpreters, spies, and guides for the Army, compensation of clerks and other employés of the officers of the Quartermaster's Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry as may be mounted, $130,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number on hand, shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service; and that no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract, after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection by such Department, all under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CANNON. I move a formal amendment for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill a question. I notice that the amount appropriated by the paragraph is $130,000, a decrease of $50,000 in the appropriation for like service for the current year. I would be glad to know of the gentleman the cause of the decrease, and as to whether the service can be carried on properly for the amount recommended by the bill; also whether it is likely there will be a deficiency for this service next year.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Illinois, I can say that the figures fixed here by the committee, $130,000, were based upon the expenditures of the preceding year pro rata. Those figures show that the requirements for the Department during the coming fiscal year would be amply met by the amount appropriated, in view of the expenditures for the past year, to meet its requirements for the current year; and I was assured by the Quartermaster-General that he would be able to get through with that amount of money.

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Army transportation: For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage from the depots of Philadelphia and Jeffersonville to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery, under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of mules, oxen, and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as trainmasters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of the funds of the pay and other disbursing departments; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for clearing roads, and for removing obstruction from roads, harbors, and rivers to the extent which may be required for the actual operation of troops in the field, in all $2,800,000: Provided, That the whole number of civilian employés, including agents, superintendents, mechanics, and train-masters paid from the appropriation for transportation of the Army shall not at any one time hereafter exceed one thousand, nor shall any of said employés be graded for salary above fourth-class clerks as graded and fixed in Army Regulations.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 312, strike out the words "mules, oxen" and insert "draught and pack animals."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I believe there is a decrease here in the amount of this item as compared with the act for the current year of $100,000. I would be glad to know the reason for that decrease.

Mr. BRAGG. The reason for the decrease is that on consultation with the Quartermaster-General, and after an examination of the necessary expenses of the past year, it was concluded we could get along with this sum of money.

Mr. CANNON. The department is satisfied?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to an omission in the proviso as compared with the present law. The proviso commencing in line 329 is as follows:

Provided, That the whole number of civilian employés, including agents, superintendents, mechanics, and train-masters, &c.

The words "packers and teamsters" are omitted. I ask the gentleman if the omission is intentional?

Mr. BRAGG. That is an oversight in making the copy of the bill. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "mechanics," the words "packers, teamsters."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VIELE. I move to amend by striking out on page 14, line 333, all the words after "thousand" to the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Nor shall any of said employés be graded for salary above fourth-class clerks as graded and fixed in Army Regulations.

Mr. VIELE. The purpose of this amendment is to restore the maximum of pay allowed to civilian clerks to the same as is now allowed; that is $1,800 a year. These clerks are a few civilian employés of the War Department. As a rule they are men of ability far in excess of the pay which they receive.

The report of a competent board of officers made to the War Department in 1879 was emphatic in its declaration that the clerks of the Quartermaster's Department received as a rule a lower compensation than is paid to persons of the same ability in other departments of life. All the principal cities of the United States were visited by that board; and the management in the commercial houses showed that the clerks received salaries from the merchants far in excess of those paid to employés of the Quartermaster's Department.

The present maximum rate is the pay of a fifth-class clerk. I propose to restore that by this amendment. These men as a rule are men of high intelligence and probity. I do not think you will find any of them following bank presidents and bank cashiers to the penitentiary.

Mr. BRAGG. I sincerely hope this amendment will not be adopted. We have already passed the clause which fixes the pay of the clerks in the Commissary Department of the fourth class. The clerks in each of these departments performing the same duty should receive the same pay.

There are two reasons why this amendment should not be adopted. The first is, when we pay $1,600 to a clerk in the Quartermaster's Department we are paying him, in my judgment, more money than he can earn for the same labor in any other place in this world. If there are so many fine places with better salaries for the same amount of labor we should not have these men applying all the time for us to keep them where they are. The difference between the kind of labor they do and the kind of labor that an employé in a large mercantile establishment does, if you make your estimate from that and reason by analogy what the price should be, is very considerable. These men have very much shorter hours. They have no responsibility at all. They are simply machines. They are mere copyists, and $1,600 a year is more in my judgment than they can earn anywhere else.

Now, how many of them are there? There are fifty-four of these clerks in the Quartermaster's Department. Who are they? They are the class of confidential clerks who have grown up to be as it were brevet officers in the several bureaus. They are the men who superintend the abstracts, the returns, and the vouchers, and all that sort of thing; in other words, they are the identical men that do the duty that the officer himself ought to do. In my judgment, these fifty-four clerks can be dispensed with; and by abolishing that grade of clerks, by refusing to pay for it, we will, in my judgment, dispense with the fifty-four clerks and call upon the officers to do the duty which they ought to do themselves.

What is the result of allowing these confidential clerks to remain in the position they occupy? There is scarcely a session of Congress in which we are not called upon to settle a quartermaster's account or a paymaster's account or a commissary's account. What for? Because A B, who had been for fifteen years in the Department and had been trusted as a confidential clerk, had been forwarding the vouchers and making the abstracts without the knowledge of the chief, who should have done it, and after the affair comes to be investigated and examined in the passing of the accounts through the Auditor's office it is detected there that false certificates, false estimates, false vouchers have been returned without the knowledge of the chief; and he comes to us to ask us to relieve him. Why? Because the custom of his department had been such that that class of duty had been intrusted to a subordinate when he should have done it himself.

I want these gentlemen upon the staff to learn that their offices are not sinecures, that they are to do a portion of the work and to supervise it all, and for that reason I hope this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. VIELE addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. VIELE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to read an extract from the report of the board of officers to which I have referred:

Comparing the work performed by the higher grade of clerical labor above referred to with that devolved upon the chief or more important clerks of disbursing offices of the Army, stationed at depots or in large commercial centers, or at headquarters of departments or divisions, we find considerable analogy. Comparing the prices paid for this class of labor, we find the Government habitually paying very much less than the citizen, the difference in a majority of cases brought under our notice being as much as 33 per cent., and ranging from that up to 50 per cent. In other words, the Government secures a higher class of clerical labor at from one-third to one-half less than corresponding talent, fidelity, and experience command in civil life. As further evidence of this fact, it seems proper to here record the opinions of disinterested parties as to the value of the services of the two clerks employed in the office of the depot commissary in Chicago, and of the transportation clerk in the office of the depot quartermaster in New York. Speaking of the latter, the general ticket agent of the Hudson River and New York Central Railroad Company said, voluntarily and without being questioned in reference to him, that he was a most zealous and competent man, and that by his knowledge, experience, and shrewdness he saved the Government annually thousands of dollars, and when asked what his services were worth, replied unhesitatingly that to any man or corporation needing men possessing such characteristics and acquirements he would be worth from $2,500 to $3,000 a year.

And that is the class of men that gentlemen here insist shall be paid only $1,600 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend from New York inform the committee what the document is that he has just read from?

Mr. VIELE. It is a report made by a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War to visit the commercial cities of the United States and compare the prices paid to clerks in commercial houses with those paid to the clerks in the Commissary Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now will the gentleman tell us by what authority the Secretary of War organized that board with the view to compel us to pay higher salaries?

Mr. VIELE. He organized it, I presume, in the intelligent administration of his Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I guess there is no authority for it.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I have but one word more to say on this subject. The very circular or report which has been read demonstrates exactly what I have heretofore said to the committee, namely, that the business of that depot is all done by a clerk——

Mr. VIELE. Then he ought to be paid for it.

Mr. BRAGG. Although we have there a captain, a major, a lieutenant-colonel, and a colonel. What do they do?

Mr. VIELE. I never saw them idle.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, the object I have in view, as I said before, in restricting this class of clerks is to put the shoulder-strap man in there to do some of the work, and not have his office a sinecure.

Mr. VIELE. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. VIELE, striking out the words "nor shall any of said employés be graded for salary above fourth-class clerks as graded and fixed in Army regulations," and it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arrears of Army transportation on certain land-grant railroads: For the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts; but in no case shall more that 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such services, $85,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] whether this amount will be sufficient to pay for this service for the next year. I grant that it may not make much difference whether it is sufficient or not, as the service will doubtless be performed and will be paid for by a deficiency appropriation; but I desire to know whether the gentleman has inquired about the matter, and, if so, the result of that inquiry.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, representing the committee, I called upon the Quartermaster-General, and I have here an abstract——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin what this expression "arrears of Army transportation on certain land-grant railroads" means?

Mr. BRAGG. The "arrears" there embodied are a legacy sent down to us from a committee of which my distinguished friend was formerly chairman.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has not come down from any committee of which I was ever chairman.

Mr. BRAGG. The railways have their accounts pending and in course of settlement through the different auditing offices of the Government. They are not paid promptly. Those that are paid this year may be for the Army transportation of last year, or even of the year previous.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand it, this provision is for a deficiency.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir. It is an appropriation that is carried right along in this bill as it has been carried heretofore.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the money been already earned?

Mr. BRAGG. The money has been earned.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then if the money has been already earned, as I understand it this is not an appropriation for the service for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BRAGG. Not specifically.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you provide here for the service which may be rendered during the next fiscal year when you limit the payment to "arrears," which means money already earned?

Mr. BRAGG. I think not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then there is no provision in this bill for the service of the next fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been no deficiency sent down for the present year.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is certainly a deficiency if it is for the service of last year.

Mr. BRAGG. This is a standing appropriation which comes in this form in all the Army bills, because the vouchers for this service are not adjusted and sent in for payment until the year after the service is rendered, or sometimes longer than that after the money has been earned, so that the account is carried on in this way.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then, as I understand you, this service has always been settled for a year after it has been rendered?

Mr. BRAGG. That is as soon as it has been settled for. Very often the settlement has not been so soon as that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For quarters for veterinary surgeons, post quartermaster-sergeants, commissary-sergeants, and ordnance-sergeants, $20,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move pro forma to strike out the paragraph just read. I notice that this appropriation of $20,000, and the two succeeding appropriations—one of $10,000 for chapels, school-houses, and libraries, and one of $10,000 for shelter, and shooting-galleries and ranges and repairs thereof—these three items, covering $40,000, are new subjects of appropriation, and I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will explain the necessity for entering upon a new field of expenditure.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly a new field of appropriation to provide persons with something to live under in order to discharge their duties.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yet these are new fields of expenditure—new items.

Mr. BRAGG. They are. These expenditures are estimated for by the Secretary of War in his estimates for the support of the Army. By turning to page 99 of the estimates you will find an estimate—

For quarters for veterinary surgeons, post quartermaster-sergeants, commissary-sergeants, and ordnance-sergeants, $25,000.

Now the object of this is to provide for the non-commissioned officers distinct quarters belonging to their class. We have followed the estimate of the Secretary of War, (reducing the amount $5,000), because the committee were fully satisfied that this class of non-commissioned officers should have this provision made for them at the posts, which are permanent.

Mr. HOLMAN. They now pay rent.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir; they are now stowed away in something that they have to pay rent for.

As for chapels, school-houses, and libraries, I suppose the gentleman from Indiana can understand the use of these as well as I—perhaps very much better.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question I put to the gentleman was as to the occasion for entering upon this new field of expenditure. I admit that the War Department is always, or very generally, estimating for some new items of expenditure. The only question I make is how it happens that just at this time those three items, amounting to $40,000, become necessary?

Mr. BRAGG. It happens because the estimate is submitted to a committee, who have attempted to investigate the subject, and in their judgment have determined that this is a very proper and necessary appropriation to be made for the welfare and efficiency of the Army; and being charged with this duty, they have reported the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. What about the last item?

For shelter and shooting-gallery, and ranges and repairs thereof, $10,000.

Does the gentleman deem that necessary?

Mr. BRAGG. I do.

Mr. HOLMAN. They have got along without it thus far.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me explain to the gentleman from Indiana. When you ask the opinion of a military man upon the efficiency of a soldier, he will tell you that in his judgment it makes but very little difference whether a man carries a broomstick or a musket on his shoulder, provided he does not know how to use the musket. Now, the necessity of encouraging our troops in target practice has attracted a great deal of attention. It has been thought desirable that they should all become, as far as practicable, skilled marksmen, that they may be in a condition on the frontier to meet the Indian, who is a skilled marksman. For this reason there have been constituted throughout the Army rifle teams; there have been offered medals, badges, and rewards for the best shot in the several rifle teams throughout the Army. The object of this has been to create a spirit of rivalry and competition. The purpose of this appropriation is to provide a covered place—you may call it a gallery—where this practice in shooting can go on at the different posts in stormy as well as in pleasant weather.

Mr. HOLMAN. My only reason for calling attention to the matter was that it is so unusual an item; and the shooting, which is of course at long range, is now done at all the posts in the open air. I have never before observed this estimate, although it may have been submitted.

The gentleman from Wisconsin refers to the fact that our men should be just as good marksmen as the Indians whom they fight. I presume they are. At any rate I do not suppose the Indian has the benefit of a sheltered shooting-gallery in which to practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of arms at the national armories, $300,000: Provided, That no clerk paid from the appropriation for the Ordnance Department shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in the Army Regulations.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I make the point of order against that proviso, and my point of order is this: there is no such provision as that contained in the Army appropriation for last year, and this provision is contrary to existing law, there being a law fixing the salary of clerks at the Armories, contained in 18 Statutes at Large, in act passed June 23, 1874.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair inquires of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what is the present compensation of clerks in this section.

Mr. BRAGG. Sixteen hundred and fifty dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the pay of a fourth-class clerk?

Mr. BRAGG. Sixteen hundred dollars.

Mr. LONG. It will be noticed this proviso differs from others where there has been a ruling of the Chair, inasmuch as it is not a limitation of the amount appropriated, but a special provision changing the law so these employés shall not receive the amount of their present salary.

Mr. BRAGG. The proviso here is that no clerk paid from the appropriation for the Ordnance Department shall receive as salary——

Mr. HOLMAN. From this appropriation.

Mr. BRAGG. That is, from this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion this is a general law, and would be in force during the current year, for which this sum is provided.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the words "for the Ordnance Department" and insert the words "from this appropriation;", so it will read:

Provided, That no clerk paid from this appropriation shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a fourth-class clerk, as graded and fixed under the Army regulations.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I did not hear the Chair's decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order, but the gentleman from Wisconsin now moves an amendment which he has indicated.

Mr. ROCKWELL. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. He moves to strike out the words "for the Ordnance Department," and to insert "this" instead of "the;" so it will read "to be paid from this appropriation," &c.

Mr. LONG. I raise the question of order against that amendment. It is not a limitation of the appropriation. The provision is "no clerk shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a fourth-class clerk." It is ac hange of law, in that it provides he shall not receive a salary of more than $1,600, whereas the present law is that he shall receive $1,650.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I have not heard what has just been said, but I raise the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the point of order come too late?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] also made the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been some discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman on the left raised the point of order as soon as the amendment was offered.

Mr. LONG. I did make the same point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard for one moment. This provision is that no portion of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be expended in the employment of clerks of a higher grade than fourth-class clerks. Would any person doubt that is a simple limitation of the appropriation? Yet that is almost exactly in substance the language of the pending proposition. It seems to be a limitation of this expenditure of money.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest as a test that the amendment instead of providing for what the law fixes as the salary or compensation of those employés they shall only receive as compensation so much.

Mr. LONG. There is another test. It is provided here these employés shall receive only so much, and not the sum provided by law. That is the new law in the amendment. That is to be his compensation. If the clerk accepts it he will not have any claim against the Government for any balance due him. Apply the test which has been applied before. If this proviso is adopted then certainly he could not maintain a suit in the Court of Claims for more than the salary of a fourth-class clerk. Therefore the law is changed. It is not a limitation, but a change of the law, which would defeat his rights in the Court of Claims.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has examined the late decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Mr. Langston, minister to Hayti; and I ask the question because possibly the language in that case may cover the point made here.

Mr. LONG. I have not examined it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Nor have I examined it, but I understand that in his case the Committee on Appropriations appropriated $5,000 to pay his salary as minister, without changing the act of Congress which fixed the salary at $7,500. Minister Langston sued for the balance of his salary and the claim was allowed by the Court of Claims, and the decision, which was taken to the Supreme Court, has been affirmed, as I understand, by the Supreme Court.

Mr. LONG. I have not examined that case. In this case it is a provision that no clerk paid from this specific appropriation shall receive such and such a salary.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the point here, the language being as now proposed—

Provided, That no clerk paid from this appropriation shall receive as salary or compensation a greater sum per month than the salary of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in the Army Regulations.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. My inquiry of the gentleman was whether in the Langston case the same language was used. I am not familiar with the case.

Mr. HISCOCK. No; in that case this language is not adopted; but it was simply an appropriation of so much money to pay the salary, which was less than the amount fixed by the law.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I did not know that it was possible so much criticism could be made upon language which produces exactly the same results. This provides "that no clerk paid from this appropriation"—that is, that no one shall be paid from the money appropriated under this act a greater sum than the salary of a fourth-class clerk as graded and fixed in the Army regulations. It is simply a limitation upon the use of the money in making the payments, that and nothing else.

Mr. LONG. But, if the gentleman will observe, it goes further now in the proviso than that. It says that he shall not receive it from any appropriation.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. LONG. That no clerk shall receive a salary greater per month than that of a fourth-class clerk.

Mr. BRAGG. That no clerk paid from "this appropriation;" that is, the appropriation for the Ordnance Bureau.

Mr. LONG. What other clerk is there except the one paid from this appropriation?

Mr. BRAGG. None.

Mr. LONG. Then no clerk can receive a greater salary than the salary of a fourth-class clerk, as graded and fixed in the Army regulations, if this provision is adopted.

Mr. BRAGG. But that provision to which the gentleman refers will die with the bill for the current year.

Mr. LONG. If you say he shall not receive from this appropriation a greater salary it would be right; but you go further and say that no clerk paid from this appropriation shall receive such and such a salary.

Mr. BRAGG. I intend to limit the disbursement of this money to a certain purpose.

Mr. LONG. You have done that; but you do more than that, and that is the reason the point of order is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment as now submitted is subject to some doubt as to its proper construction; but is of opinion that the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Massachusetts on the left [Mr. LONG] is correct, that it does preclude the right of recovery for a greater amount of salary than that which would be fixed by the bill. It therefore changes existing law to that extent. In other words, if he takes pay out of any part of this appropriation he takes it in full of the salary.

Mr. BRAGG. I would be very glad if the Chair would speak so that he could be heard in this part of the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat the ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the Chair assuming that the salaries are fixed by law?

Mr. BRAGG. This salary is fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was so informed.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are fixed by regulation.

Mr. BRAGG. No; this is fixed by law. The Ordnance Office, if the gentleman will search, succeeded in getting a little bill through of not more than four lines, a little innocent bill, some years ago, which fixed these salaries by statute. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the proviso was subject to two constructions, but that in the opinion of the Chair the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] was the correct one, which is to the effect that by receiving the compensation appropriated in this bill a clerk could not receive a greater compensation for his services in the courts; and if received at all it was to be received in full satisfaction of all claims for such service.

Mr. BRAGG. That is assuming that an officer of the Government in charge of the Springfield armory might desire to hire a clerk at a higher rate than he is allowed by the law to pay.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it is simply that the clerk employed would be entitled to the salary fixed by law for this service; and the Chair sustains the point of order as to the proviso.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 466 strike out the word "three," and insert the word "four;" so as to make it read:

"For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $400,000."

Mr. ROCKWELL. When this bill was under general debate last Saturday I showed from the official statements that the armory had saved to the Government during the late war more than twice its entire cost since its establishment in 1795. I also proved from the official reports that the Springfield rifle as now made at the armory is the best service rifle in existence. These facts are not disputed. Mr. Chairman, a few words as to the reasons that underlie this amendment. There being at present but one national armory at which arms are manufactured the whole amount, $400,000, has been allotted to the Springfield armory. This amount has been for four years past appropriated, and greatly to the advantage of the United States in an increased production and reduced cost per arm, and to the workmen employed in a more permanent employment than one depending on a varying appropriation of less amount. There is a part of the cost of manufacture a constant quantity (the pay of the master armorer, clerks, foreman, inspectors, and others) which does not vary with the appropriation. The ratio between this constant and the number of arms manufactured yearly depends, of course, upon the amount of appropriation.

The experience of these years shows that $400,000 is not too much and is little enough; not too much, because it enables us to supply the wants of the Army and militia and store up a few arms yearly; is little enough, in that a less amount works disastrously in disorganizing the labor employed and increasing the cost of production with no corresponding compensation to the United States. This armory being the only one in operation possesses all the expert labor familiar with public methods of manufacture and amenable to the discipline and control so highly essential for the successful prosecution of Government work. To turn this expert labor adrift, to deprive itself of the skill and system, the growth of years under its own patronage, would be a suicidal policy for the Government. The armory is now on about the lowest plane possible as to number of men and expense for the character of production public establishments in this country are expected to turn out.

Less money means a more costly rifle, or an inferior one, depending upon the number made. It is no economy to reduce appropriations beyond a certain limit—a limit already reached in the amount appropriated for several years past—for the production will be curtailed very materially and the cost largely increased. If an appropriation requisite to keep it up in all its departments to the highest standard is wanting, decay, detrimental alike to workmen and Government, must result. About an average of four hundred and sixty men—all kinds, skilled and unskilled—is certainly a small force for such an establishment as this. It is but a mere nucleus and should not be allowed to deteriorate, but kept in the highest state of efficiency as the basis to work upon in the time of need. How soon that time may come who is wise enough to say? The statement that a reserve of one hundred and fifty thousand arms is enough for a nation of fifty-six million people, with its six million militiamen, carries an absurdity on its face.

It is said we can buy arms in case of need. Wars in these days may end in two months and before arms can be made under contract. We can not buy in time nor what we want. The rifles made outside of the armory under contract during the late war cost $9 apiece more than those made at the armory, and were inferior. Our small army is an expensive one in the matter of small-arms; and between its expenditure and the number supplied to the States under the law of 1808 for arming and equipping the militia this reserve of one hundred and fifty thousand would soon—so soon as to surprise very much the gentlemen who think it enough—disappear if production be stopped or much curtailed. Improved methods, machinery, and excellent supervision have reduced the cost of the rifle and consequently increased the yearly production. Last year over forty thousand rifles and other arms were made, and the product of this year will be about the same. The cost last year for the present rifle was less than $12, the lowest yet reached, and so low that it would be safe to say no private firms in this country could have equaled it. During the civil war as high as $20 was paid to private firms for inferior muzzle-loading muskets of the Springfield pattern.

Mr. HISCOCK was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I urge this matter because I have examined into it and because I believe that it is public economy to maintain the Springfield armory upon the basis upon which it is now maintained. And I am sustained in that proposition by a note which gentlemen will find in the Book of Estimates for this year on the 101st page, and which I will read for the information of the committee. It fully sustains the proposition that I have been advocating:

NOTE.—Besides supplying the regular Army, the militia, the various colleges, and the other branches constituting the military establishment, the War Department has now to supply arms, ammunition, &c., to the Marine Corps and to the several Executive Departments for use in protecting public money and property, under the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Statutes, 412). The increased cost of the present breech-loading rifle, the greater demand for its use, and the paucity of the appropriations of late years have left the country in a dangerous condition, there being on hand, July 1, 1885, subject to issue, but one hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and twenty-two breech-loading rifles and carbines. It is of the most vital importance to the nation that the manufacture of arms by this Department be steadily continued, in quantities sufficient to render a gradual accumulation of them in store a certainty. The number of small-arms on hand should never be less than 500,000.

Now I say, Mr. Chairman, that the action of this committee is not based upon the recommendation of the Department. For the Department recommended for this appropriation the sum of $500,000. The sum last year was placed at $400,000 because it was thought that nearly $100,000 would be taken out of the militia law of 1808.

Now I am told, and I see the chairman of the committee is on his feet ready to make the statement, that the ordnance bill now in the Senate for $400,000 will come into this branch of Congress and be passed, and then the Springfield armory will have $50,000 or $100,000 in addition to this appropriation of $300,000. In other words, they ask us to reduce in this appropriation the amount from $400,000 to $300,000 because, they say, possibly a bill may pass in this Congress which will give us a little more money to run the armory than we should otherwise get. If that bill passes it would not be necessary for the Government to cause to be made at the Springfield armory more rifles than it needs.

Mr. BRAGG. I sincerely hope this amendment will not be adopted. The reason why it ought not to be adopted is that the Government has no need of the expenditure of the money. They have no need for the extra manufacture of arms. The gentleman's constituents may need the money, but the Government have no need for that extra issue of arms. Why?

Mr. ROCKWELL rose.

Mr. BRAGG. I decline to yield.

Because, first, we have now in excess on hand in store for troops of the United States over one hundred and fifty thousand stand of arms. The appropriation of $300,000 will make in addition to that one hundred and fifty thousand, an increase of between twenty thousand and twenty-three thousand annually in addition, which will leave us at the end of this year with one hundred and seventy-five thousand stand of arms, and at the end of next year with twenty and odd thousand more in addition over and above those that have already been supplied.

Now, if it be the purpose of the Government to manufacture arms for the purpose of having an excuse to manufacture store-houses to keep arms and to pay ordnance-sergeants for watching arms and to pay them according to the estimates of the Ordnance Department for cleaning and repairing arms, and for burnishing arms, then, of course this House will not stop at increasing the appropriation, but will extend it so that it may run out into all of the ramifications of the labor under the control of the ordnance.

There is another reason why we should not have an overexcess of arms. In this age of invention there is change going on and improvement every month, both in large guns and in small guns. It is said we are obliged to take the report of the officer who has charge of an institution of his own, who regulates the tests that are to be applied to all guns, and who then sits in judgment upon the efficiency of all arms as compared with his own. I think it is well to take such recommendations cum grano salis, for they come from a juror who gets a part of the pork.

But let us go back a few years and find what our distinguished Chief of Ordnance said on this subject of guns. He says:

To be prepared for war is one of the most effective means of preserving peace—

There is wisdom for you.

Such preparation, to be efficient and complete, must be made at leisure, with all the skill, experience, and means of which we are capable. In making them, time is an element not to be ignored or despised. The progress in invention of the mechanic arts must be consulted and kept in view in the work of preparation, because the approved articles of the past may have become the mere stepping-stone to the perfected improvement of the present. What fifteen years ago was deemed a perfect musket is now classed as obsolete, with hardly a marketable value, and that marvel of mechanism to-day, the breech-loading rifle, must soon make room for a greater marvel in simplicity and effectiveness. In our preparations we must keep pace with the progress of the age.

That is the report for 1879–'80 of the Chief of Ordnance. Acting upon that report, the Committee on Military Affairs found we had all that was essential for present use for which there would likely be any necessity for some time to come.

Mr. BRAGG. I move to strike out the last paragraph.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to show that this improvement is going on precisely as the Chief of Ordnance wisely anticipated, that officer made a report to the Committee on Military Affairs, a copy of which was furnished to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL], on the subject of the test of magazine guns. I read an extract:

The reports from one hundred and forty-nine companies have been received, examined, and tabulated, and the results are as follows:

Comparing the three magazine guns with each other, the reports are, for the Lee, 55; Chaffee-Reece, 14; Hotchkiss, 26. As magazine guns, therefore, the reports are largely in favor of the Lee.

Comparing the magazine guns with each other and with the Springfield rifle, as single-loaders, the preference is for the Springfield, as follows: For the Lee, 5; Chaffee-Reece, 0; Hotchkiss, 1; Springfield, 21.

There, you see, he finds the magazine gun, for the purposes for which that gun is made, superior to the Springfield, but when he comes to comparing and testing it with the Springfield, he makes the magazine gun and tests it as a single-loader; that is, he destroys it as a magazine gun and makes it into a single-loader, and then makes the comparison and reports that the Springfield is the best.

Mr. LONG. But the gentleman will notice that in the first comparison there is no comparison with the Springfield.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; they rate with each other. But in the second comparison he compares them with each other and with the Springfield as single-loaders. Now, the magazine gun was never made to be a single-loader. The very province of the magazine gun, its peculiarity, the consideration that led to its invention, was the superiority of a magazine gun under certain circumstances to any single-loader.

I simply allude to this to show that inventors who must have their inventions passed upon by the Ordnance Department, which has a pet arm of its own, are liable to receive a not overfavorable judgment.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he does not read in that same report that the Chief of Ordnance says he is in favor of magazine guns himself, but that at the same time, from the tests made, he must acknowledge that the Springfield rifle has the preference.

Mr. BRAGG. That the Springfield rifle has the preference over the magazine gun as now improved.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Will the gentleman please read that part of the report?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir [reading]:

I have been and am an advocate for a magazine gun, but it would seem to be the part of wisdom to postpone for the present any further efforts toward the adoption of a suitable [magazine] arm for the service.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Does he tell why?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. ROCKWELL. He wants to postpone it for the reasons stated.

Mr. BRAGG. He wants to postpone the magazine gun—that is, he wants to postpone all private inventors——

Mr. ROCKWELL. No, no.

Mr. BRAGG. He wants to postpone the magazine gun, though he is in favor of such a gun, because he has an institution of his own to make guns.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that if the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] means anything it means that we should stop the manufacture of rifles altogether. But that he does not propose to do, and the simple question is whether we shall destroy one-quarter of our present plant and reduce by one-quarter our production of rifles at this time. The gentleman suggests that my colleague from Western Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] is representing not the needs of the Government but the needs of his constituents. It is a most unfair fling, Mr. Chairman. Undoubtedly the fact that the Springfield armory is located in the district of my colleague suggests to him the importance of this matter; but he understands, as I understand, and as every man in this House understands, that this question is to be determined by the national need. The gentleman from Wisconsin says we do not require even the number of arms that we now have. Unfortunately for the gentleman, the Ordnance Department—whether he be in sympathy with the head of the department or not I do not know—but the Ordnance Department declares that we do need these arms, and I desire, even at the risk of repetition, to again call the attention of the House to what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] has read as the statement of the department upon this subject. The Ordnance Department recommend an appropriation of $500,000, which is $100,000 more than the appropriation for this purpose for each of the last four years. Not only does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] propose not to follow that recommendation, but he proposes to cut the appropriation down $100,000 below the last one, reducing it to $300,000 for the next fiscal year. Mr. Chairman, what are the reasons given by the department for its judgment upon this question? I read from its note to the estimate it submits:

Besides supplying the regular Army, the militia, the various colleges, and the other branches constituting the military establishment, the War Department has now to supply arms, ammunition, &c., to the Marine Corps and to the several Executive Departments for use in protecting public money and property under the act of March 3, 1879. (20 Statutes, 412.) The increased cost of the present breech-loading rifle, the greater demand for its use, and the paucity of the appropriations of late years have left the country in a dangerous condition, there being on hand, July 1, 1885, subject to issue, but 131,822 breech-loading rifles and carbines. It is of the most vital importance to the nation that the manufacture of arms by this department be steadily continued, in quantities sufficient to render a gradual accumulation of them in store a certainty. The number of small-arms on hand should never be less than 500,000.

Yet the gentleman from Wisconsin says that the country needs no more arms, and that we ought to stop the manufacture because we do not require even those that we have now on hand. Mr. Chairman, there are sixty millions of people in this country; there are six millions of militia. The gentlemen from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] told us the other day that in case of an invasion a foreign power might land a million of foemen upon our soil, and we have only one hundred and thirty thousand spare arms.

There are two or three facts which gentlemen should bear in mind in considering this question. One is that you have but one national armfactory in the whole country, so that the question of the Springfield armory is a question for the whole country. In the second place, the rifle made at the Springfield armory is the best rifle that is made. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not read the whole of the Ordnance report on that subject. Comparing the magazine guns with the Springfield for all uses, the Ordnance Department says that the preference for the Springfield rifle is as 46 to 10 for the next best, as 46 to 4 for the second next best, and as 46 to 3 for the third next best, or in these words:

Comparing the magazine guns and the Springfield for all uses, the preference is for the Lee, 10; Chaffee-Reece, 3; Hotchkiss, 4; and the Springfield 46, being largely in favor of the Springfield.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two relations in which this appropriation must be considered. The first is the national necessity for a present supply of small-arms. Is the country safe with only a reserve of one hundred and thirty thousand small-arms when the Secretary of War says we should not have less than five hundred thousand? The second is the relation of this question to the future interests of the country. Remember that in striking down this appropriation you are not merely reducing the supply of arms for this year, but you are striking down your plant, which is an absolute necessity to the supply of your requirements for future years. You are taking away from that armory of the United States one quarter of its valuable, expert, skilled labor. It is not only false economy with regard to the coming year, but it is far more false economy with regard to the general needs of the country for the future.

And what is the reason which prompts this reduction? I think we are all able to see it. The gentleman from Wisconsin told us the other night that he desired to carry through a bill for the establishment of a barracks in the West, the gross cost of which would be some $375,000——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I can be recognized, I will yield my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that he may continue his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will withdraw his formal amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts can renew it.

Mr. BRAGG. Before doing that I would like to know——

Mr. LONG. I hope the gentleman will allow me two minutes; I think I can finish in that time.

Mr. BRAGG. I was about to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Wisconsin told us the other night that he desired to pass a bill which would give us a barracks in the West; and I remember that the purpose of that bill, as then stated, was to establish what should be a training-school for our militia. There was no pretense that we needed the troops at present; but the argument was—and a very sound one—that we must have some place to train and discipline the troops that are entering our service. The same rule applies here. There is necessity that you shall have some place not only where you can manufacture the arms necessary for this year, but where you may have your plant for future years—a plant which you have been nearly one hundred years in constructing—and where you may congregate the skilled workmen you have been many years gathering together and ought not now to discharge and disperse.

This experiment of a barracks, we were told, would cost some $375,000; and the gentleman from Wisconsin proposed to save that amount by cutting it out of the regular Army appropriation bill. And here is where he cuts out $100,000 of that sum. I undertake to say that this $100,000—the appropriation being $200,000 below the estimate of the Department—is taken out of this bill simply for the purpose of enabling that scheme of the barracks in the West to go through. I do not believe that is good statesmanship, especially since the action of the House has shown that the bill for the establishment of the barracks can not become a law. If I may be permitted a homely illustration, it is very much as if a man should have a pair of trousers made with a single leg, in order that he might have something left toward buying him an overcoat. That would hardly be considered good policy, especially after he or his friends and guardians had determined that he should not have the overcoat. [Laughter.]

There is another consideration to which I want to call attention. I do not regard this as a good time to strike at the interests—the reasonable, meritorious interests—of skilled labor. I do not regard it as a desirable thing for us to pass a bill which is going to turn out one-fourth of the skilled laborers employed at our national armory, when, on the earnest recommendation of the Department, there is necessity for their work and for their product. A few months ago we passed here an "urgency deficiency bill" almost solely upon the ground that by putting it through we could avoid the discharge of certain laborers at the Washington navy-yard for a few months. Following the policy adopted in that case, it certainly is not a good time to pass a bill which is to turn permanently out of employment skilled labor which the necessities of the country demand should be retained.

I undertake to say that if this were a matter of $100,000 for the erection of a public building in Texas or New York, a public building in Illinois or Massachusetts, or anywhere else, it would go through almost by common consent. Certainly we are not going to allow ourselves to strike down something that is of infinitely more consequence than any public building—the maintenance of a plant for the production of small-arms which are needed by the country. One hundred and fifty thousand small-arms are a mere bagatelle. As I said before, we have sixty million of people and six million of militia who are liable to be called out in time of war. What are one hundred and fifty thousand reserve arms for such a body? In case of war they would be scattered in a moment; and the loss which would attend their distribution in case of domestic trouble or international disturbance is a matter well worthy of consideration. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the position the Military Committee has taken. I can not believe that it is the result of the mature judgment of all its members.

Mr. BRAGG. I withdraw my former amendment and move to amend by striking out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, this country has no need of commencing to store arms now in large quantities in view of any foreign war. The annual increase of twenty-odd thousand muskets is all the increase we ought to make, and more. I am frank to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that in my judgment, but for the single purpose of keeping alive this plant there would not have been a dollar of appropriation in this bill for the Springfield armory as a matter of necessity. That I believe would have been the judgment of a majority of the committee. I think the recommendation here presented is the recommendation of all the committee.

Sir, we need no army to repel foreign force. We have no foreign invasion. Whenever we are threatened with foreign invasion we shall not need to go to the Springfield armory to get all the arms we want. We can go if need be to private armories, those that have furnished arms to Turkey and the European nations and furnished better arms than we ever had. One hundred and fifty thousand stand of arms will supply an army large enough to repel any invasion that may ever come into this country. If the idea is that we are to manufacture muskets for the purpose of pinning together our people by military power and supporting our Government by shooting down one another, then it is time that our armory should be blotted out.

I am not a believer in the doctrine it is necessary to manufacture arms and build military posts for the purpose of preserving peace and order among our citizens. I believe this Government rests upon the consent of the governed; and when you come to pin the Republic together with cartridges and bayonets, the first match will explode the Republic.

We must trust to the posse comitatus and local sentiment and strength where disorders occur for the purpose of suppressing them, and not appeal to the Federal Army. Call not for the weapons which tyrants and despots use, but at home among ourselves settle our own difficulties peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must. Let us try such force only as is necessary to place the opposition where the courts can reach them.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply grateful to my colleague [Mr. LONG] for the able defense he made for me against the insidious attack of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]. I had discovered long since that ordinary courtesy falls as coldly on that gentleman's [Mr. BRAGG] heart as icy waves on a wind-swept shore. [Laughter and applause.] He appears to be unhappy unless he is in a quarrel with somebody. [Laughter.] And now he is in a quarrel with the Democratic Ordnance Department because he can not shape his views to agree with their experience.

Mr. Chairman, I stand upon this business proposition: In peace we must be prepared for war. If necessary we must run our armory at a loss even, that we may have means at short notice to supply arms for our soldiers in case of war.

The gentleman talks beautifully about peace. Who can tell at what moment England or some other nation may be arrayed against us? Who can foresee the future? Wars come up suddenly. A cloud no bigger than a man's hand is seen and then the cloud of war bursts upon us, and unless we are prepared we shall be stricken down.

Why talk about a reserve of one hundred and fifty thousand arms for a nation of this size? Why, sir, it would be a mere bagatelle in the distribution in case the emergency should arise.

Take our experience in the late war; and I do not know of anything better we can follow than that, and I do not propose to exchange that experience for the theory of the gentleman from Wisconsin; our experience was that we could not get a good arm, and could not get it in time. Therefore we had to appropriate a very large sum of money to improve our plant so we could make a thousand rifles a day.

It is said that some other bill will provide for the Springfield armory. Is that the business way? We are here to make the appropriation now, and not to legislate upon this bill in the hope that another bill will pass elsewhere and be brought in here to carry out our intentions. That argument is idle and futile. See that this appropriation be made right now, and if you wish to use the other argument, use it when the other bill is before us. Do not cut down this appropriation, looking for another to come from another place to make it good.

The gentleman says it was thought at one time they would leave out the appropriation for the manufacture of arms altogether. I do not stand here for my constituents alone when I protest against that idea also. I stand here for every citizen of the United States, and maintain that it is for the interest of the Government to see that this armory plant is kept up.

What a sad plight we are in. We are wholly unprepared for war. In case of a foreign war, our ports on the seaboard are at the mercy of any fourth-rate power. We are considering how we shall protect ourselves.

When we have scarcely any naval defenses, would you also cripple another branch of the service?

In the very argument the gentleman himself uses, that another bill may provide the $100,000 he cuts out here——

Mr. BRAGG. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I can not yield to the gentleman for an interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the statement of the gentleman that I alluded to that other bill. I made no allusion to it whatever. It is but the echo of his own voice; he opened and closed with it; nobody else said a word about it.

I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the pending amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment of Mr. ROCKWELL was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 74, noes 68.

Mr. McMILLIN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. ROCKWELL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 84.

So the amendment was adopted. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRAGG. I offer an additional amendment to be added to this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the employment of clerks of a higher class than fourth-class clerks as graded by the Army regulations.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I renew the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that this amendment is new legislation. The Chair overrules the point of order, being of the opinion that this provision is in order as an amendment to the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 76, noes 58.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of the last amendment made to this bill is that the bill now appropriates $54,875.60 more than the appropriation law for the present fiscal year; and to show that the increase can not be possibly justified by the necessity of the War Department, I wish to call the attention of the House again to the fact that for a number of years there has been a moderate yet steady reduction in the cost of the Army.

For 1884 the whole sum appropriated was $24,681,250. For 1885 the whole sum appropriated was $24,454,450; while for 1886 the whole sum appropriated was $24,014,052.50, showing a reduction on the three successive appropriation bills of $667,197.50, or at the rate of more than $200,000 a year. There is, taking the two current years together, that is the present and the last year—there is, I think, no deficiency. There is an estimated deficiency in the Pay Department for the current year of $189,259.12; but the appropriation for the preceding year embraces $229,099.85 more than was required, so that no more is required to be appropriated as a deficiency for the present year, but simply a re-appropriation of unexpended balances of the preceding year to the amount of $189,259.12. Taking the two last years together, as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will perceive, there will be a difference between this bill as it now stands and the average of the two last bills of about $50,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there should be any such increase, or any increase, in the expenditures of the Army. I think this is a branch of the service where there ought to be, as appropriation bills have heretofore indicated, a steady decline in the amount required. One important element of expense in the Army is transportation, and that largely results from the vast number of our military posts; but the tendency of late being to concentrate these materially diminishes the cost of the transportation. That tendency should go on, and instead of having increased expenditures for the benefit of the Army, instead of being an increase on appropriations of former years, there should have been a heavy reduction. I hope, therefore, sir, that this increase of $100,000, which has been satisfactorily shown to be unnecessary, for ordnance, will be defeated ultimately in the House.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now submit the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I made the motion prior to the gentleman from Indiana making his informal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the amendment was in order at that time.

Mr. BRAGG. Was an informal amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not care to discuss that matter now.

The motion that the committee rise was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments and the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BRAGG. I move the previous question on the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask that all the amendments may be acted upon by one vote except that at line 466 striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$400,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no demand for a separate vote on any other amendment the Chair will put the question on all the amendments except the one indicated by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendments, with the exception indicated, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 466, strike out "$300,000" and insert "$400,000;" so that it will read: "For manufacture of arms at the national armories, $400,000."

Mr. BRAGG. Upon that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 106, not voting 113; as follows:

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I voted "ay," but being paired, I withdraw my vote. I voted to make a quorum if my vote was necessary.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the recapitulation of the vote.

There was no objection.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. GILFILLAN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. CURTIN with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. O'HARA.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. CARLETON with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. HUDD with Mr. FLEEGER.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. NEECE with Mr. WAIT.
Mr. RYAN with Mr. TUCKER.
Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR with Mr. BURROWS, on this vote.
Mr. SOWDEN and Mr. STAHLNECKER were paired, or otherwise they would have voted in the negative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRAGG. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VISITORS TO UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as Visitors to the United States Military Academy of Mr. BRAGG of Wisconsin, Mr. VIELE of New York, and Mr. LAIRD of Nebraska.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8757) for the organization of the Territory of Alaska, and to provide for the establishment of a civil government therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ARKANSAS, NEW MEXICO AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8758) to incorporate the Arkansas, New Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. This morning I called the attention of the House to the fact that there was an error in the RECORD in the remarks made yesterday by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER]. My attention was then called to the fact that the gentleman was not in the House, and I therefore withheld the matter until now. The gentleman, I observe, is now in his seat. I therefore now again call attention to the error, which appears upon page 4389 of the RECORD in the remarks which the gentleman made yesterday. The error consists in the omission of the prefix "arch" before the word "conspirator." The language actually used by the gentleman from Alabama, as furnished by the Official Reporter who recorded it, is:

I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for the suggestion that the charges we make were against the arch-conspirator, Mr. Stanton [hisses on the Republican side], who sought and conspired to drag down officers of the Army who did not comport to his views or sustain the line of policy he sought to inaugurate.

The passage as printed in the RECORD reads:

I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] for the suggestion that the statements refer to the conspirator Edwin M. Stanton [hisses on the Republican side], who sought to conspire to drag down officers of the Army who did not conform, &c.

In the printed remarks the gentleman appears to have said that Mr. Stanton sought to conspire, whereas he did in fact say not only that Mr. Stanton sought to conspire, but that he did conspire. The language actually used by the gentleman is "who sought and conspired to break down officers of the Army," &c., and the gentleman applied the term "arch-conspirator" to our honored late Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton. I ask that the RECORD be corrected on this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). Is there objection to the correction being made as indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the fact is. If the fact is as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] states, the error ought to be corrected. It is certainly very important that the adjective should be restored. There are some people who would not mind if they were called a "liar," but if they were called a "damned liar" would get very mad. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the correction indicated?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MCMILLIN. If it suits the gentleman from Pennsylvania better, I suppose there would be no objection.

Mr. BRUMM. What did the gentleman remark?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suppose that if the phraseology you suggest suits you better there will be no objection to the change being made.

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, I have nothing to do with it. It is not that one word alone, but the context also has been changed.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question of privilege involved in this matter. My recollection is that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] did use the expressions and say substantially what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] attributes to him; but it may be that, like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], I do not remember what the fact was. It is a very common thing for gentlemen to revise their remarks before they go into the RECORD. When gentlemen who take the trouble to look over their remarks find that they have slopped over a little they erase something. [Laughter.] This is too common, and often too creditable to be criticised.

Mr. BRUMM. That is all we want the gentleman from Alabama to do, to acknowledge that he did slop over.

Mr. MORRISON. It seems to me the gentleman from Alabama, with entire propriety, without infringing any rule of the House or offending any of its members, might have erased the word or the whole of what was said in connection with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to making the correction?

Mr. REED, of Maine. A matter like that always shrinks on cooling, and the great wonder is that it did not shrink more. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Just as our friend upon the other side, Mr. CUTCHEON, when he made an assault on General Grant left it all out of the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. And if some of you gentlemen on your side had done the same thing it would be better for your history.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] object to the correction?

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to state, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, if there is no question of privilege in this matter I want to stop it right here. I have had my say. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the only question involved is as to the truth of the RECORD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] calls attention to certain portions of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] yesterday wherein it is claimed that the RECORD is not correct. Is there objection to making the correction?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I think the point made by the Chair about the RECORD being required always to speak the truth is hardly tenable. It is important that the Journal shall tell the truth, but I do not know that there are many people in the country who expect the RECORD to contain the whole truth. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The object of the RECORD is to record correctly the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MORRISON. Well, it is near enough correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. A truth half told is often worse than the worst kind of a lie.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, you have said worse things than anybody else I have ever heard speak in this House.

Mr. BRUMM. I stand by them though. I do not slink away from them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama object to the proposed correction?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state the facts, which are that the expression "arch" did appear in my remarks, and that, with a desire to prevent a thing going into the RECORD which I saw had created some feeling on the floor, I did draw my pen over the expression in a way which showed that it had been used, leaving the RECORD to be discussed, as I rather thought it would be discussed, this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a general appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HATCH in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as now reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, appropriates $1,299,665 as against $1,919,713 appropriated in the corresponding bill passed last year. This apparent decrease, however, is owing to the fact that last year's bill included an item of $594,000 for the payment of awards of the French-American Claims Commission, and also an item of $100,000 for the international survey between the United States and Mexico. Neither of these items is included in the present bill. The Department estimates contain an item of somewhat over $15,000, the balance due upon the French-American Claims Commission awards, and also an item of $100,000 for continuing the international boundary survey. These were recommended by the Department to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but under the rules the committee was relieved from their consideration, and they will probably come before the House in the sundry civil bill.

This bill appropriates for the diplomatic service $536,845, and for the consular service $762,820—very much the same amounts that were appropriated in last year's bill. This bill is, in fact, a very simple one—merely a money bill; and the committee that reported it thought, upon consultation, that the House probably would not desire to occupy much time in its discussion. Variations from last year's bill can very briefly be stated to the House as the items are reached and are unanimously recommended by the committee. Therefore under instructions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad if the gentleman, before pressing that motion, would yield to me five or ten minutes.

Mr. BELMONT. Would not the gentleman be able to submit his remarks during the five-minute debate?

Mr. CANNON. I think I could shorten my remarks so as probably not to exceed ten minutes.

Mr. BELMONT. I suppose the gentleman's purpose is to facilitate the dispatch of business.

Mr. CANNON. I want to talk about the bill for a few minutes only.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to half an hour.

Mr. CANNON. For my own part I certainly shall not want that much time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that general debate on this bill be limited to half an hour? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BELMONT. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have not given this bill a great deal of consideration; yet I have read the report accompanying it; and the statements in that report differed so much from my recollection that I have taken a little pains to verify my recollection touching some of those statements.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman will permit me to say that since the report was presented to the House the committee has had under consideration certain recommendations from the Department of State and has agreed upon certain amendments; and in the summary which I have just given to the House of the appropriations embraced in the bill those recommendations are included. While they differ somewhat from the original report, yet, as I stated in the outset, they can very briefly be explained when we come to consider the items of the bill in detail. It seems to me perhaps best that the discussion of those items should be deferred until that time arrives.

Mr. CANNON. I was not referring to those items, but to other statements in the report. I read for instance:

The total amount appropriated by this bill is $1,254,165.

Mr. BELMONT. The statement which I have just made of the aggregate appropriation in this bill included the changes since agreed on. As I said, the bill as now reported appropriates $1,299,665.

Mr. CANNON. As you propose to amend it?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I was taking the bill without reference to any subsequent action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I cast up the figures with some care, and I find that in the bill as originally reported there is a slight error in the addition.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman will permit me to say there is no error at all, because the committee has instructed me in reporting the bill to ask that the amendments I referred to be adopted when we come to the particular items to which they relate.

Mr. CANNON. Those amendments are not now printed in the bill, are they?

Mr. BELMONT. They are amendments, for instance, in regard to the increase in the contingent expenses of consulates.

Mr. CANNON. But those amendments do not now appear in the bill?

Mr. BELMONT. They do not.

Mr. CANNON. I am not referring to the amendments that the gentleman now speaks of. I am referring to the bill as it was reported from the committee, read twice, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. A copy of the bill as thus reported and referred to the Committee of the Whole I hold in my hand. I am not dealing with the amendments the gentleman speaks of at all.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand the gentleman is speaking about the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I have not got that far yet, but will presently. [Cries of "Go on!"] A careful footing of the bill carries $1,279,665, an item between $25,000 and $30,000 more than the report states it. I should not have thought anything of that error of the clerk, perhaps——

Mr. BELMONT. I must insist I have explained that matter. Thirty thousand dollars was the amount the committee instructed me to ask the House to adopt in the way of amendments to the last item of the bill in regard to contingencies.

Mr. CANNON. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BELMONT. I have already answered it is not.

Mr. CANNON. It is not. If the gentleman will allow me to complete my statement he will see I am not referring to his amendment hereafter to be offered. I am referring to the error that committee made, or more probably its clerk made, when they footed the total of the appropriations recommended by the bill. The report states it at $1,254,165, whereas in fact it is $1,279,665.

I go a step further. The report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs states that the amount appropriated by the corresponding act for the present fiscal year is $1,919,713. Now the truth is the amount appropriated by the corresponding act for the current year is $1,242,925, $700,000, in round numbers, less than is stated in the report.

Mr. BELMONT. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman again, but I think the House ought to know——

Mr. CANNON. I am going to explain it. I have already explained it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. That there was included in this estimate as to the expenditure last year the amount for the French-American Claims Commission awards and the $100,000 for the Mexican boundary survey.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman would save himself trouble as well as myself by allowing me to state what I understand this bill shows and what I understand the report of the committee to be. I will be able to do it in about three minutes if the gentleman will allow me to complete my sentence.

The report I hold in my hand, I will say again, states that the bill for the current year corresponding to this amounts to $1,919,713, whereas it only amounts to $1,242,925, a difference in round numbers between the fact and the statement in the report of $700,000. The bill as reported recommends an increase over the law for the current year of over $35,000. The gentleman speaks of appropriation of $594,000 for the awards of the French-American Claims Commission and $100,000 for the Mexican boundary survey. Why, my friend, your committee never could have examined the law for the current year. It does not contain either item. They are both appropriated for in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and not in the corresponding bill to this.

Mr. BELMONT. I have already said to the House the committee had no instruction on the question of appropriation for the Mexican boundary survey, that it was discharged from its consideration, and that probably it would be presented to the House in the sundry civil bill. Five hundred and ninety-four thousand dollars for the French American Claims Commission awards was an item which appeared in the last year's appropriation bill, but did not appear in this.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, that is a question I desire to dispute and do dispute. The report shows just that, and now you repeat it, whereas in truth and in fact both items, one for $594,000 and another for $100,000, are not in the law for the current year. Your report mistakes when it says the act for the current year covers those items.

Somebody may ask what does all of this amount to? It amounts to just this, Mr. Chairman, and that called my attention to it in the first place: When the gentleman reported his bill from the committee and placed it upon the Calendar evidently the agent of the Associated Press made haste to analyze the bill and to read the report submitted, and what was the result?

The result was that there went out a report which appeared in every metropolitan newspaper in the land, the statement that this economical Committee on Foreign Affairs had reported a bill cutting down the expenses, as compared with the corresponding act for the current year, over $700,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I understood I had half an hour if I desired it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] to yield ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I shall only want a few moments longer.

Mr. BELMONT. I will yield to the gentleman all the time he desires.

Mr. CANNON. More than that, the report went out that this saving in this appropriation bill, that of $700,000, was the first fruits, showing the wisdom and economy of the House in adopting the new rules distributing the appropriation bills among the committees.

Mr. STEELE (from his seat). That is just where it hurts. That question has been settled.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Indiana says that question has been settled; so I grant you, it has been settled. The rule has not operated yet sufficiently to demonstrate its wisdom; but I do not say that it was not wise; nor am I grumbling about it, although an absolute misstatement of a saving of $700,000 in this report appears as one of its fruits.

Now I have not noticed any contradiction in the Associated Press dispatches, nor do I care whether they make the contradiction or not. But here is the report made to the House of Representatives from one of its committees, and I could not let that report go unchallenged, as it contained an error of this character.

Mr. LONG. What is the fact in reference to the amount of the appropriation; is it less?

Mr. CANNON. No; the appropriation for the current year is $30,000 less than that recommended by this bill; whereas the Committee on Foreign Affairs have gone before the country as having recommended a bill carrying $700,000 less than the bill for the current year. That is all I desire to say upon that point.

As the consideration of the bill progresses, unless somebody else undertakes to do it, I shall offer some amendments to correct certain errors that I have noticed in the arrangement of the bill. I find that there is a misarrangement of several items of appropriations with reference to consuls, &c.

Mr. RICE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RICE. Is not the difference to which the gentleman refers made up as shown by the very first paragraph of the report? Does it not show that the item of $594,000 for the awards of the French and American Claims Commission included in the bill for the current year are omitted in this? Also that $15,000 due on those claims has been omitted, and that $100,000 for the purpose of continuing the international boundary survey between the United States and Mexico has been omitted? If the gentleman will take these amounts and add them will they not bring the amount appropriated by the bill down to the aggregate sum as stated?

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Massachusetts has certainly not heard the statement I made at the opening of my remarks. Let me read for him the first five lines of the report.

The total amount appropriated by this bill is $1,254,165. The amount appropriated by the corresponding bill for the present fiscal year was $1,919,713. There was included in that measure an appropriation of $594,000 for payment of the awards of the French-American Claims Commission. No item on this account appears in the present bill.

Now, there is no item of $594,000 for awards of the French-American Claims Commission in the law for the current year. It never was in it, and when you say that the corresponding law for the current year bears that item and the other item of $100,000 for the boundary commission it is a clear misstatement, because the act for this year does not bear either of these items.

Mr. BELMONT. I of course took it for granted, Mr. Chairman, that when this discussion commenced the gentleman from Illinois desired, in asking for the time, to dispatch the business of the House. The point he raises I believe would certainly have been explained as we went on with the consideration of the bill; and if he would look at the Department estimates he will find the reasons which explain the arrangement of the bill. The Department estimates for the service, contained in the Book of Estimates, embody the items——

Mr. CANNON. I am talking about the law for the current year.

Mr. BELMONT. And I am seeking, since the gentleman has called in question the action of the committee, to establish before the House the methods it pursued in the preparation of the bill. The Book of Estimates for foreign intercourse contains many suggestions which the committee did not adopt; and it will be found as we proceed with the consideration of the bill that the misplacement as to the consuls, if the gentleman will permit me, at the proper time will be remedied by amendment, as I had proposed to suggest that to the House on the part of the committee, because I have had already under consideration that very fault in the printed bill.

The Department had recommended certain increases of salary, but under the rules of the House and the interpretation given to them we did not think we would undertake to recommend any changes of law in this bill, but would leave all such changes and increases for the general bill, which we hope to present to the House at an early day. It is easy to account for the misplacement as to the few consulates of which the gentleman speaks. The estimates of their salaries were sent in to the committee.

The increase in salary involves a change in the classification of consuls, consuls being classified under the present system according to salary. Therefore it occurred, as the gentleman suggested, that some of these consuls appear in the wrong place; but when we reach those lines there will be nothing more easy than to ask the striking out of the name of the misplaced consulate in the printed bill and its insertion in its proper place.

As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] explained to the House just now, the $600,000 which make the difference are accounted for by the fact that the Department in its estimates has sent a recommendation in regard to those items to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, supposing the amount for the Mexican boundary commission, the amount for the French claims commission, and also the amount for the Haytian commission belonged to the consideration of that committee. But I was instructed to ask that the committee be discharged from the consideration of those items; and, as stated at the outset, they will probably appear in the sundry civil bill. Therefore I fail to see how it can be said, after this explanation, that there is any danger of the House being misled as to the purpose of the committee in this bill.

I will ask that the Clerk commence the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Clerk will now commence the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following paragraph, under the heading "Contingent expenses, foreign mission:"

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, and traveling and miscellaneous expenses, and for printing in the Department of State, $105,000.

Mr. BELMONT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It does not increase the expenditure. It has been prepared on the advice of the accounting officers of the Treasury simply in order that the items may be clearly specified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph from line 88 to line 94 so that it will read as follows:

"For the purpose of enabling the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk-hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legations, and for printing in the Department of State, $105,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Hiring of steam-launch for use of the legation at Constantinople, $1,800.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of this item. This is a new appropriation.

Mr. BELMONT. It has been customary to have a steam-launch for the use of the legation at Constantinople, and it is absolutely necessary. The increase in this item is $800.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word, in order that the gentleman from New York may give an explanation.

Mr. BELMONT. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say this was a new item.

Mr. HOLMAN. New as to the amount.

Mr. BELMONT. The fact is the steam-launch has been used by the legation at Constantinople for years past; the minister being unable to reach the place of his official duties unless he has one.

Mr. WILSON. Is there an increase?

Mr. BELMONT. There is an increase of $800.

Mr. WILSON. Was that given because of the increase of the size of the minister?

Mr. BELMONT. The request of the minister has been very recently presented to the Department of State and to the committee, and there was not any difference of opinion that I know of in regard to the justice of his demand. I have in my hand the letter of the minister, which fully describes the necessity for this launch. I hardly think it necessary to have it read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to say a word, and therefore renew the amendment.

I shall not antagonize by my vote the increase of $800 for a steam-launch for the use of our representative at Constantinople. But I do want to call the attention of gentlemen on this side and on that side of the House to this fact, that this administration is Democratic.

Several MEMBERS. We all know that.

Mr. CANNON. And you Democrats say that it is an economical administration. Yet I find a very clever gentleman appointed to Constantinople—you all understand who; he has had long years of service on the floor of the House, and the first thing that is done when this administration comes into power is to pay him a salary as minister at Constantinople of $10,000 a year, whereas under the Republican administration the minister at Constantinople only received $7,500 per annum.

A MEMBER. We have got better men now as ministers.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish my statement. In addition to that, we have here an increase of $800 for the steam-launch. I recollect that steam-launch in former years, when this bill was being considered, begot discussions on that side of the House which, if put in the aggregate, would run for days, about the extravagance of that launch. It was declared there was no necessity for a steam-launch there, and all that sort of thing. I believed then, when the debate was going on, you did not know much about it. But now, when circumstances have changed, you find it is not only proper to increase the salary of the minister at Constantinople $2,500, and not only proper to give a thousand dollars for the steam-launch, but that it is very proper to increase the amount to $1,800, making his pay, including the steam-launch, $11,800, while General Wallace, the Republican minister, only received $8,500.

So be it. I do not want our representatives at foreign posts to appear at a disadvantage; I do not want them to have to be mean for want of sufficient appropriations to sustain the dignity and honor of the American people and the American flag at Constantinople or anywhere else.

But, having sat in this House and in former Houses for ten or twelve years past and heard this matter discussed Congress after Congress, and heard the statements made upon the Democratic side of the House about all this useless extravagance, and about the entertainments and the wines and things of that kind, having sat by and heard from year to year enough campaign thunder manufactured here to elect a great many men to Congress, as no doubt it did——

Mr. LONG. Champagne thunder. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Massachusetts suggests champagne thunder. I accept the amendment. I say, Mr. Chairman, having sat here and heard all this, I simply wanted to show the difference between then and now. I do not say that this appropriation is improper; I am not going to antagonize it, but I just wanted to stir up the pure minds of the gentlemen upon the Democratic side by way of remembrance of their former professions of virtue [laughter], and they have virtues, for they themselves said it. But now, when they get the administration, in this one item alone for your minister at Constantinople you make an increase the first year of $3,300. Gentlemen, if you told the truth about the extravagance of the Republicans when they were in power, how much greater is your extravagance now when you make these increases!

Mr. BELMONT. Before he takes his seat, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, for whose experience in these matters I have very great respect, whether he does not know that this appropriation is absolutely necessary?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend asks me whether I know that this appropriation is or is not absolutely necessary, I answer that I never was at Constantinople and can not say. I know that Mr. S. S. Cox, who was formerly a member of this House, is our minister there under this administration, and I have no doubt that he says the appropriation is necessary, and I am not going to antagonize it. However, it is no more necessary for the Democratic minister there than it was for the Republican who was there.

Mr. BELMONT. As the gentleman has been a member of the Committee on Appropriations, he must have investigated this subject, and must undoubtedly have found that our minister in Constantinople is compelled to have this mode of conveyance, and for that reason an appropriation has been made for it every year. If it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, to explain this matter further, I think the letter of the minister to which I have already referred may as well be read.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, before we get away from this subject I want to move to strike out this $800.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the letter read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[No. 124.]

UNITED STATES LEGATION, Constantinople, February 3, 1886.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 67 is received. Its requirements will be regarded, as will be seen by a dispatch which I will send by next mail as to the particular items, &c.

The caique will be disposed of.

For the steam-launch, as you are aware, there must be an annual appropriation.

The contract last year was for four months only, at $836.

Our accounts show the other expenses, coal, water, oil, porterage, repairs, crew, &c., to be $325.42 for the four months, or the total cost was at the rate of $290.37 per month.

The owner will not let it again, as he says, for the above sum.

It is desirable to have it for six months, at least, from 1st May to 1st of November, while the legations are outside the city on the Bosporus.

That should make the appropriation $1,800. It is desirable that you should have this estimate, as you may desire to recommend the same to the proper committee.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, S. S. COX.

Hon. T. F. BAYARD,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. EDEN. If my colleague [Mr. CANNON] is opposed to this appropriation why does he not move to strike it out?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my colleague from Illinois that I am not opposed to this appropriation. Your administration submits it and says it is necessary, although you always denied it to the Republican ministers at that court, and I am willing to take it at its word. I have only been calling attention to the difference between the attitude of gentlemen on that side of the House in regard to this matter now and their position in the past.

Mr. EDEN. I understand, then, that my colleague is in favor of this provision; and, if so, I do not know what he is complaining about.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have very little personal knowledge on this subject of compensation and allowances in the foreign service. Gentlemen of experience who have served on the Appropriations Committee and have investigated this matter in connection with former appropriations tell us the sum appropriated for this service for the present fiscal year is ample. This is comparatively a small sum and may be thought not very important, but it is admitted by all that when we have been heretofore very creditably represented at this foreign court $1,000 was sufficient for the boating part of this diplomatic service. I see no reason, therefore, why we should allow our present excellent representative an additional $800. I therefore move to strike out eight hundred. This increase, unimportant as it may appear, will be followed by larger ones if this is permitted to pass unchallenged.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, what is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to be read in order that gentlemen may know what the question is.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what we want.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 99 strike out "eight hundred;" so that the paragraph will read: "Hire of steam-launch for use of the legation at Constantinople, $1,000."

Mr. HEWITT. I hold in my hand a letter which I have received within a day or two from our friend, lately a member on this floor, the present minister at Constantinople, which relates to pretty much everything that he was in the habit of discussing in this House; and I believe during his long service here he discussed about everything, but at the conclusion of it occurs this very brief remark:

I received a copy of the dip. app. bill.

I take it that means this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That means the diplomatic bill; it is probably Turkish.

Mr. HEWITT (reading):

They have put in enough for the launch for six months, $1,800. I can only hire it for six months, and no one can live here in summer without it.

Now, gentlemen, if you want Mr. Cox back again you had better adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. If Mr. Cox can not go on and represent us ably abroad without unnecessarily adding to the expenses of the office I would like to have him back. In fact I would be glad to have him back anyhow. He was useful and did us more service here than he can do there.

Mr. HEWITT. I want him back. I miss him every hour. This House misses him every day. I have observed that there is a great deal less enjoyment in the House since he left it. We do not have the original jokes that he used to perpetrate in reply to the stereotyped jokes on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. It seems to me you are developing rather a fine power of irony. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. But, Mr. Chairman, as to the necessity for this steam-launch, I have been there myself [laughter]; and I want to say that it is absolutely impossible for the minister to get along without a steam-launch, and it is not possible to get along with a steam-launch that will cost less than $1,800. My friend from Illinois says the late Republican minister at Constantinople managed to do it; but he did not. I started out with him one day in his steam-launch. We proceeded for about a quarter of a mile when the British steam-launch came out and went by us; then the Italian launch came out and went by us; then the French launch came out and went by us; and as the only American flag that floats in those waters is the flag on the steam-launch, we had to submit to the humiliation of seeing it run away from by all the foreign powers.

A MEMBER. Why did you not put on steam?

Mr. HEWITT. We did put on steam. Our American blood began to boil, and the boiler began to boil. [Laughter.] The result was that when we got half way down to Constantinople the whole thing suddenly collapsed, and we were left in the open Bosporus.

A MEMBER. Why did you not swim?

Mr. HEWITT. The Republican minister said he had been trying to swim with his party for the last two years, and could not; he knew they were going out at the next election. As I knew I could swim at the next election, I did not try it there. [Laughter.]

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEWITT. Oh, yes; I want to defeat this amendment; so I am ready to yield to every gentleman.

Mr. SYMES. I desire to inquire whether in these days when the Democratic party are making their great effort to return to "Jeffersonian simplicity" the minister at Constantinople should not have a canoe, and "paddle his own canoe." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. The minister at Constantinople has "paddled his own canoe" so well that he has done what the rest of us have not been able to do—he has got out of this House and into a more genial climate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HEWITT. But, Mr. Chairman, I have not got down to the point of this business.

Mr. MILLS obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT. I thank my friend from Texas. I knew he would sympathize with our genial friend, Mr. Cox, whom we have lost.

Now, if a Republican minister could not get along with $1,000—and I am a witness to prove that he did not get along with it—I do not see how any Democrat can do so.

Mr. MORRISON. But that Republican did not ask for any more.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, he did. He not only asked for more, but he appealed to me as an American citizen to come into the House and make a statement of the humiliation which he and I both felt on that occasion. I have not yet recovered from the humiliation. I am sure if you will send for General Lew Wallace he will tell you that even after his glorious defeat at Monocacy, where he saved the Union Army, he never felt so much humiliated as he did when on this broken-down launch, with the British and French and Italian launches running away from him.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will $800 enable us to save the honor of the American flag?

Mr. HEWITT. It will, and no doubt it will prevent large appropriations of money in the way of subsidies.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to see how many Democrats value the American flag to the extent of $800. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. You will find that out by the vote on this amendment. As a matter of course we are going to vote down the amendment.

Mr. GUENTHER. Is this steam-launch an American-built vessel?

Mr. HEWITT. The one that broke down was not; but the one we intend to have, which will not break down, will be an American vessel.

Mr. GUENTHER. Can it sail under the American flag?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has expired.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, I have not received, as other gentlemen have, letters from Mr. Cox on this subject; but I have received from him a newspaper; and as I presume it may relate to this question, I send it to the Clerk to be read.

(A newspaper printed in French, at Constantinople, was handed to the clerk).

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman from Wisconsin will have to read his own newspaper.

Mr. GUENTHER. It is not my own paper, but a paper which I received from Mr. Cox. I presume it relates to the steam-launch business. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin oblige the Clerk by reading the extract in the paper which he sent up?

Mr. GUENTHER. I am not so proficient in the French language as my friend from Massachusetts, and I ask him to read it. [Laughter].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] has called attention to the increase by this appropriation over that of last year by way of suggestion to this side of the House. They had better regard the economical profession they have heretofore indulged in. On this occasion I am glad the gentleman has seen fit to do so, and that it seems to be a pleasure to other gentlemen from time to time, as appropriation bills come up, to call attention to the fact we are not as economical as we ought to be. It is a proper reminder to us. It does not cost them anything at all. If it did they would not indulge in it perhaps.

Now, whatever reductions were made in past Congresses were made against your protest, and made by that side of the House with almost perfect unanimity. But, sir, I would rather see them at last come to the conclusion the policy we adopted was the correct one, by constantly reminding us that although we think it is the correct one, we are nevertheless constantly departing from it. [Laughter.]

I confess on this occasion, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made a proper point. The Book of Estimates only requires $1,000 for this steam-launch. It is proper we should regard the Book of Estimates, coming to us from the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to be regarded in the amounts necessary to carry on the Government as of much higher authority under the law than any foreign minister can possibly be, and especially in reference to any matter in which the latter is himself personally concerned. I am unwilling this House should act on private matters upon the recommendation of any foreign minister when it comes in conflict with the estimates which come to this House from the source whence the law requires they should come.

Mr. HEWITT. There was a supplemental estimate in this case which the gentleman from Georgia overlooks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have seen that supplemental estimate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman respect the estimates when they are cut down or when appropriations are in excess of them?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman knows well what I respect. He can not forget when he has had to rely on this side of the House time and again when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to prevent his own side of the House from running up his own appropriation bills to an excessive amount.

Mr. HISCOCK. I only wanted to know how you regard the estimates as authority.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say oftentimes under your administration the estimates were as excessive as they have been under our administration. But so far as my opinion is concerned, for one I have felt it to be my duty to examine them and cut them down as you did. While I do not regard them as absolutely correct, I would take them in preference to the estimate of any foreign minister as to his own wants.

Before leaving this point, I wish to refer to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. There was a supplemental estimate from the Department in this matter. I have seen it. It is only a letter from the State Department covering a letter from the minister, without any recommendation at all. It was only transmitted to the House for its information.

The fact stated that the owner of that launch will not contract for a less amount does not exclude the idea another may not be had at something less. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will prevail.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I would not for a much greater sum than $800 humiliate or contribute to the humiliation of our minister, Mr. Cox, or his predecessor, General Wallace, or the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], when he next visits Turkey. But I do not believe we can buy rank at Constantinople or elsewhere abroad, nor do we seek to obtain rank or respectability abroad by the splendor of equipment. Until we depart from our ancient or earlier faith we must not expect to compete even at foreign courts in the maintenance of magnificent display. Even there we must depend upon other causes and undertake to be respectable for something else. [Laughter and applause].

What has been said by gentlemen of this item of expenditure and the humiliation of our representative at this court for lack of equipment and more expensive outfit may be said of all our representatives abroad with the same or as much propriety. I have made this motion because if this increase is made others can not be denied, especially if made on the reasons stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], for the same reason will apply to all the foreign services. I am not here to read lectures to nor to criticise gentlemen on the other side of the House. I have no right to do that in this matter, but I do want to say a word to my own party friends here and in all kindness. These increases in the cost and expenditures of the public service, however small they may appear to some of us, are hardly in accordance with the assurances which brought us here, and we should have a care how we act on these appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this item is vouched for in a peculiar way, and there is no intention on this side of the House or on the part of any gentleman here to crowd up your bill, I will say to the gentleman from New York. The gentleman's colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] says it is necessary. Everybody believes it to be necessary. Now, if there has got to be a sacrifice to economy do not select Mr. Cox. It will not destroy the Democratic party and it will not be subjected to the charges of extravagance because this peculiar item of $1,800 is inserted in this appropriation bill. I have great respect for the estimates of the Department, as high, doubtless, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], but here comes my colleague from New York who practically says that unless you give this $1,800 there is no need of giving anything. For one, I am in favor of allowing our representative at this court to live in a respectable manner. I hope that this amendment or this provision will be held in the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise more for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to whether or not we make provision of this character for any other minister than to make any comments on the proposition.

Mr. BELMONT. It is not necessary anywhere else than in Constantinople, and that is the reason for making it there.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand it, then it is an exceptional case. We propose to supply a yacht to our minister plenipotentiary at Constantinople in order that he may make a favorable showing and a successful race on the Bosporus with the resident ministers of other countries of the world.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania misapprehends entirely the purpose of the appropriation. Surely the gentleman does not mean to create a wrong impression as to the actual facts. He must know that all of the representatives of other governments at Constantinople are compelled to cross the Bosporus in the discharge of their duties, because they live in another quarter, they live in the European quarter, and they must cross the water in something, and it has been customary to allow this steam-launch to be used by our minister for that purpose.

Mr. STRUBLE. And the racing is simply incidental.

Mr. BAYNE. Then this is a new departure, and I cordially approve the position taken by my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]. I am disposed to think that if you begin to supply yachts and carriages and other things for our ministers abroad you will depart from a very correct principle. Our best plan is, I think, to pay a salary, and we do pay a very large one in these cases, and let our ministers expend that in supplying themselves with such things as they may need in the service.

Mr. BELMONT. How would the gentleman enable them to pay the rent, for instance?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BELMONT. What plan would you suggest to enable them to pay their rent? Would you recognize the system which has been in operation so long or reject it?

Mr. BAYNE. Why, if we are in the habit of paying rent let us pay it.

Mr. BELMONT. Well, we have been in the habit of paying for this particular steam-launch, which the gentleman will persist in calling a "yacht." It is a means of conveyance absolutely necessary to the minister in the discharge of his official duties, as he is compelled to live in the European quarter, where all the other legations are situated, and is obliged to cross the Bosporus in order to reach the officials of the Turkish Government.

Mr. BAYNE. If we supply anything for our minister there I think we ought to supply a yacht. I do not believe in supplying an ordinary vessel or one that will not compare favorably with those supplied by other nations. I think the appropriation ought to be very much larger if we supply anything.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the last word.

In line with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] I send to the desk to be read a part of the speech made by our very worthy minister at Constantinople on this very subject. It is dated March 4, 1882.

The Clerk read as follows:

On this floor, years and years ago, I have urged that the time would come when, by harnessing the forces of nature through steam and telegraph, we might be rid of most of this diplomacy. I have said it again and again in elaborate speeches; I said it to sodden ears who heeded not. My colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT] afterward, when he became a member of this House, made research and speeches in the same direction.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], who has honored our country at a foreign court, intimated the other day that he hoped the time would come for a happy riddance of the inutilities, forms, and fooleries of diplomatic etiquette and ostentation. I wish the world were ripe and ready for it now. Looking at the records of the English Parliament, I see that this sentiment is growing there, and that some practice has obtained to that end. In so far as such improvement has been made, it is to be noted for our instruction. Treaties are negotiated at home offices, and without the aid of embassies or ministers, in great emergencies, as at Washington and Berlin. Our recent fishing troubles were settled here in Washington without the intervention of our minister at St. James. Our telegraph expenses at the State Department will show how much is done now by the quick intelligence of the cable. In many places, by consolidating the various embassies under one head, through the aid of the telegraph and prompt travel, much more might be accomplished. All this, sir, I have urged and I concede.

Our committee, Mr. Chairman, in moving in this direction are pursuing by this bill the thought of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] and my colleague from New York [Mr. HEWITT]; they are pursuing the thought, though not completely, of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and of members of the last Congress and of the Congress before that, when we consolidated these Central American missions into one. For the benefit of the service, as well as in the line of economy, we have still pursued this idea in the present bill. We are combining Holland with Belgium, and by making the Scandinavian nations, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, one in our representation. We have attempted it somewhat in South America. We might go further and adopt the plan of my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], but let us do it more heedfully than in his proposition, for that is subject to much criticism; let it be done, if you please, after advice by the Secretary of State and after examining all our relations of comity and commerce.

In this bill provision is made for every proper representation of our Government abroad. We have economized on ministers to the amount of some $15,000. Most of this we add to the efficiency of the consular service. Moreover we have on the whole cut down from last year some $11,125.

This bill is therefore ample for all our diplomatic and commercial work, and it is ample in so far as economy is concerned. It takes from the ornamental minister to give it to the useful consul.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I deprecate, I must be permitted to say, the reproduction of things as ancient as that in the consideration of an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that two pro forma amendments are pending already, and unless an amendment be withdrawn another would not now be in order.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the amendment I offered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I congratulate the House upon the attention which the chairman gives to the forms of debate. I was saying that I deprecate the reproduction of matters as old as that in debate on this floor. Why, I have seen wave after wave of economy and reform go over the Democratic party in the House, but it does not last but a year; it is not intended to last but a year. I remember that famous debate from which the quotation is read. My friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], whose pride is so stirred for the honor of the American flag to-day, participated in it.

Mr. HEWITT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not open my mouth in that debate. The gentleman is a little off his feet there.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It was the one preceding that.

Mr. HEWITT. I have had several debates with the gentleman.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have not forgotten the man or the occasion. His proposition was diplomacy on wheels. His idea was we should have one grand mogul who should travel from one end of Europe to the other, and with that easy facility which he himself ever possesses for acquiring all sorts of information and misinformation should get thoroughly acquainted with the habits of the people of different countries on a flying trip, and do business with them all at one salary. [Laughter.]

That was a charming debate; but it meant simply nothing. It meant simply the Democracy was in opposition and they chose that particular method of manifesting it. So all these speeches I have heard for the last eight years when the Democracy come into power have not been put to the slightest practical use.

I can remember when my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was convulsing this country on the subject of free raw material. He never rose in his place, his mouth never opened without free raw material issuing forth. [Laughter.] But he has forgotten it all. The whole thing has passed from his mind. Now his particular point is tariff taxation. Why, sir, the other day he told us that the people of this country were reduced to such terrible straits by taxation that the limit had actually been reached, and that the good anarchists of this country could not stand it any longer; and yet for the honor of making the American flag stream ahead in that procession of representatives of the effete monarchies of the Old World he proposes to put on a people already burdened beyond the verge of human endurance what in my country is a large sum of money—the sum of $800. [Laughter.]

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, do not let your mind be troubled by this thing; it will pass away like all the rest. Tariff taxation, free raw material, letters to Jay Gould in favor of protection, they all take their regular course like the old jingle, "soldiers, sailors, tinkers, tailors." It is the regular old song. That is what we have heard right along. And what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] called the attention of the Democracy to was not, as the gentleman from Georgia supposed, by way of reproach. It was not for the purpose of reminding them of their old fame as economists. It was only to remind the Democratic party that they really never meant anything by it; and they all know it. [Laughter.]

I shall take occasion some day in some other debate to point out the flattering compliment which the Democratic party pay to us in administration as it does in every phase of human belief by following us. Why they do it now, when they have control of the Government, just as they used to do it on the stump, only they were always a year or two late.

Mr. BELMONT. I wish I could accept the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has sugested. But it seems to me that Mr. Cox having so long served on the Democratic side of this House is surely entitled to this amount of consideration so far as his opinion goes; his opinion is that the service of this steam-launch absolutely requires that amount of money, and it surely is not in me to refuse him that request.

This question of the usefulness of the diplomatic service is a very old one, and I know no better statement of it than that which was made in a report of the Secretary of State to President Jackson. Surely that is going far enough back in the past. Yet nothing has been said which more clearly to-day defines the usefulness of the diplomatic service or tends so well to correct the misapprehension which seems to exist at times in every national legislature.

In the extract which has been read from Mr. Cox's speech there is reference to some action in England, and after hearing what our own Secretary of State said in 1833, I will ask the House to listen to what was said in Parliament on the same subject.

In 1833, Edward Livingston, then Secretary of State, in a report made to President Andrew Jackson, and found in House Executive Document No. 94, second session Twenty-second Congress, said:

Ministers are considered as favorities, selected to enjoy the pleasures of foreign travel at the expense of the people, their places as sinecures, and their residence abroad as a continued scene of luxurious enjoyment. Their exertions, their embarrassments, their laborions intercourse with the governments to which they are sent, their anxious care to avoid anything that might on the one hand give just cause of offense, or to neglect, or to abandon the rights of their country or its citizens on the other, are all unknown at home. Even the merit of their correspondence is hid in the archives of the Department, and rarely sees the light.

And this criticism appears to be true to this day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. BELMONT.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Frelinghuysen sent a report to this House from which I think I may as well read an extract. He says:

Diplomatic representation is a definite factor in the political economy of the world, and no better scheme has yet been devised for the dispatch of international affairs, or for the preservation of friendly relations between governments. With an unprotected coast; without an effective navy; with a population energetic in commerce and fond of travel, pushing themselves into all countries for purposes of trade, pleasure, or instruction, or as missionaries pursuing their self-sacrificing labors among a hostile population; with a national and necessary policy forbidding European political intervention on this continent; with a system of government regarded by many other countries with disfavor, and with a production greater than we can consume, which must seek foreign markets, it is vitally important to the United States to sustain a sufficient and well-compensated diplomatic and consular service.

Lord Palmerston's answer to Messrs. Cobden and Bright, when questioned by them as to whether the telegraph and rapid mail service did not supersede the necessity of a foreign diplomatic corps, has been quoted before when this subject has been under consideration by Congress. He said:

No; your embassador can tell the minister of a foreign country that your interests are so and so; that the public opinion of your country runs in a certain direction and has obtained a certain height; that there are certain things that your government can do and certain things it can not do; and by making the minister of that country aware of these facts he places under the consideration of the government to which he is accredited matters which may greatly influence the conduct of that government with regard to things which may involve questions of peace or war; which, at all events, may involve questions deeply affecting the commercial interests of the country; and therefore I should think that the change which has taken place with regard to the transaction of public affairs in Europe tends to make diplomatic agents of more importance rather than of less importance.

But whatever prejudice there might be against this service, we entered at the Congress of Vienna in 1815 and three years later at Aix la Chapelle into agreements by which certain rules of international intercourse between nations was established. And the greatest writer on international law, Mr. Wheaton, himself an American, says that—

International assent to the system for a long period of time has given to the customs the force of an obligation upon all civilized powers.

In regard to the suggestion which was contained in the speech read at the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, I think it is only just to say on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that the subject of the consolidation of these missions was carefully considered. A plan was formulated and presented to the Department of State. The Department of State made a very careful examination into the expediency of such an arrangement, and, although no formal action was taken by the committee on the subject, it became very clear it was impracticable at this time to recommend any consolidations. Moreover, a change in existing law would be necessary and could not take place on this bill.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I wish to state that in asking to have that speech read I did so for the purpose of saying that I believe if Mr. Cox were here he would vote for the proposed amendment as being in the direction of economy.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, as the subject of the necessity for the diplomatic service has been brought somewhat into view in this debate I desire to say a word upon that rather than upon this particular amendment. The diplomatic service at one age of the world was necessary. When the world was ruled by monarchs, and when there were but few liberal legislative bodies in existence, it was deemed necessary to have ministers resident at every foreign court for the purpose of bribing officers of state and acting as spies upon the governments to which the ministers were accredited. That is not a very flattering notion of the use of ministers plenipotentiary in former ages but it is the use that history says they were put to at that time. That was at a period when there were no telegraphs, when there were no railroads, when there were no newspapers of the kind we have at the present day, when there was little intercommunication between nations, when the secrets of state were very carefully kept and when each state was watching all the others for the purpose of getting some advantage or some opportunity for self-aggrandizement. How different all is now!

The world has outgrown the whole diplomatic system and the necessity for it. We now have rapid intercommunication by steam navigation; we have intercommunication by the still more rapid mode of railway transportation, at least as between governments on the same continent; we have telegraphic communication which brings to the capital of every civilized nation the action of the various governments, so far as it has been made public, in every other capital of a civilized country throughout the world. We know the news from all parts of the world that is material to be known the day after it transpires.

If the object is to promote commercial intercourse, the active, vigilant, intelligent merchants of the country are the men who acquire and avail themselves of all the information that is necessary to the successful prosecution of mercantile pursuits. They never go to the State Department to get mercantile information. If we desire to promote friendly relations with other nations we live in an age of the world when we have but to be just. No nation now will undertake to use its foreign ministers as instruments to extract the secrets of other cabinets. That is not what they are expected to do. I remember that a few years ago there were read upon this floor some dispatches from our minister in Persia, I believe it was——

Mr. HOLMAN. And from Greece also.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes. In that correspondence there were very interesting accounts of balls and receptions, but nothing was found in it referring to the political relations of that country with this or with the other commercial nations. At the present day some of our ministers may chance to deal occasionally with a political question, but they are more likely to be occupied with questions of etiquette and of precedent. The truth is, they have simply become an expensive ornament unsuited to the civilization, the progress, and the intelligence of our age, and we would be just as well off without them; we would save what they now cost us, and at the same time avoid what has been referred to here, the humiliation of having ministers at foreign courts who have not as great salaries or as splendid outfits as are furnished to their ministers by the monarchies of the Old World.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it would be in order to move to limit debate on this steam-launch to two hours and a quarter. [Laughter.] If so, I hope that motion will be made.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. MORRISON striking out from line 99 the words "eight hundred;" and there were—ayes 58, noes 87.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no quorum present, but as my Republican friends are voting against me and my Democratic friends are at the races, I will not call for a quorum. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] why he does not give force and form to his ideas with reference to the diplomatic service by introducing a bill on the subject?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not attempted to do so because I am not a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and also because I am engaged in other duties which occupy my whole time, but I have hoped, year after year, to see some action taken toward abolishing the diplomatic service.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, in saying that these waves of "economy" that pass over the Democracy are transient, I am bound to admit that with the gentleman from Texas they are permanent. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending before the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, in the course of my life I have witnessed the broad face of the full moon on a bright evening and the placid joyousness which the observation of it was calculated to produce; I have witnessed the brilliancy of the setting sun and the expression of pleasure and of self-satisfaction produced by observing it; but I have rarely seen anything that indicated so much self-satisfaction and complacency as the gentleman from Maine seems to derive from the jests which he gets off here from time to time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE B.

Salaries, consular service (class 1):

Consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, and Rio de Janeiro, at $6,000 each, $24,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out line 144, "salaries, consular service (class 1)," and inserting in lieu thereof "salaries, consuls-general."

Mr. HOLMAN. If that amendment is subject to a point of order, I wish to reserve the point.

Mr. CANNON. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] to the fact that if this heading is intended to conform to the current law it is misleading. The amendment which I have offered will make it conform to that law.

Mr. BELMONT. The gentleman will observe that this is a classification of officers of the consular service; that there are in this class a number of consuls-general and two consuls, one at Liverpool and the other at Hong Kong, the one at $6,000 and the other at $5,000. These consuls belong in this class, and therefore the heading simply describes the class—"salaries, consular service (class 1)." I do not see any necessity for the gentleman's amendment; in fact, I think the change might be somewhat misleading, from the fact that there are included in this class two consuls, one at $6,000, the other at $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend will observe that this part of the bill provides for consuls-general——

Mr. BELMONT. And two consuls.

Mr. CANNON. And these consuls-general are not consuls of class 1. The bill in this heading departs from the current law.

Mr. BELMONT. I do not object to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I suspect that the gentleman from New York intended to make this appropriation bill correspond perhaps to some change in the classification hereafter to be made—possibly embraced in legislation to be reported by his committee. But I do not believe it is a very good idea to depart from the usual form.

Mr. BELMONT. There is no change attempted in this bill. The classification here is according to the old plan; that is to say, according to salaries. The classification recommended by the committee in the other bill is on an entirely different basis.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; then my amendment is proper if the gentleman wants to conform to the existing classification.

Mr. BELMONT. I am perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's suggestion, but again call his attention to the fact that there are two consuls included among these consuls-general.

Mr. CANNON. But they are not consuls-general.

Mr. BELMONT. They are consuls.

Mr. CANNON. When we reach the proper place they ought to be transposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not been able to understand the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] as to this rearrangement. I do not understand the motive for it.

Mr. BELMONT. Schedule B, "Salaries consular service (class 1)," includes all the consuls-general and two consuls—one at Liverpool at $6,000, and the other at Hong-Kong at $5,000. Class 2 includes consuls at $3,500 and $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then in Schedule B there is no change in the number of officers or in salaries; it is simply a rearrangement—nothing more?

Mr. BELMONT. Nothing more.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul-general at Matamoras, $2,000.
Consul at Liverpool, $6,000.
Consul at Hong-Kong, $5,000.
Consul at Antwerp, $2,500.

Mr. BELMONT. In the line last read there is a clerical error. I move to strike out the line "consul at Antwerp, $2,500," and shall move its insertion later on.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I think the clerk, in making up this bill, has fallen into a mistake. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, strike out lines 162, 165, and 166; preceding line 163 insert "salaries, consular service," and preceding line 167 insert "class 2."

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York will allow me to suggest that if the lines which I propose to strike out be transposed to line 203 they will then come under the proper class.

Mr. BELMONT. I was about to propose that line 165 be struck out; and further on I shall move to insert it in the proper class.

Mr. CANNON. My amendment will put these consuls in the proper class.

Mr. BELMONT. It seems to me the gentleman's amendment would transfer to class 2 the consul at Liverpool and the consul at Hong-Kong, both of them now belonging to class 1. I think the gentleman will see that.

Mr. CANNON. I think not. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment again.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was again read.

Mr. BELMONT. Under the operation of that amendment where would the consulates at Liverpool and Hong-Kong be?

Mr. CANNON. They would appear immediately after that.

Mr. BELMONT. If that is the arrangement it would be perfectly proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is adopted.

Mr. KING. In the rapid reading by the Clerk I did not notice when he reached St. Petersburg. I ask by unanimous consent to offer an amendment the effect of which will be to curtail expenses. I do not think any one will object.

Mr. BELMONT. It seems to me that we had better proceed in regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. We can only return to the paragraph by unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. We would like to know what the amendment is.

Mr. KING. I send the amendment up to be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That at the city of St. Petersburg, Russia, the offices of consul-general and secretary of legation shall be consolidated, one person filling both offices, and shall receive $4,000 per annum.

Mr. BELMONT. That would be a change of existing law, and of course could not be entertained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. BELMONT. I will have to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul at Ningpo, China, $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out what has been read and inserting it exactly as it is after line 178. The object of the amendment is to put that consulate at Ningpo, China, under the heading of class 3, where it properly belongs.

Mr. BELMONT. That is correct. The salary of $3,000 shows it has been included here by mistake, and should be under the heading of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, consular service (class 3).

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike that out and insert "class 3."

Mr. BELMONT. That seems to be immaterial, and I will not object to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain and British dominions: Consuls at Manchester, Glasgow, Bradford, Belfast, Demerara, Ottawa, and Singapore, at $3,000 each, $21,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the object of this paragraph? The salary of these consulates is fixed by the class to which they belong, and as they belong to class 3, the salary is fixed by law at $3,000 a year. What necessity is there for the repetition of the salary here?

Mr. BELMONT. It not only avoids confusion, but to my mind makes the provision of the bill more clear.

Mr. HOLMAN. The consulates by law were arranged in classes, and the salary of each class was fixed. In the bill heretofore they were referred to as class 2, 3, and 4; that, it seems to me, avoided confusion. In addition to the class this bill also names the salary. I admit the only difference is by repetition to swell the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, consular service (class 4).

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out "salaries, consular service (class 4)" and insert "class 4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Belgium: Consul at Brussels, $2,500.

Mr. BELMONT. Line 165, "Consulate at Antwerp, $2,500," was stricken out, and I now move to insert after "Brussels" "and Antwerp;" so it will read: "Belgium: Consuls at Brussels and Antwerp, $2,500 each." This is merely a transfer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I express my regret again that the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has deemed it necessary to make a change by repeating the salaries of these foreign consuls. Instead of avoiding, in my judgment it creates confusion and uncertainty as to the grouping of these consuls.

Mr. BELMONT. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has unanimously reported to this House and will ask for the consideration of a bill changing the basis of this classification. It will be found, I think, to be a great improvement on the old system.

Mr. HOLMAN. How can it be an improvement?

Mr. BELMONT. When the House comes to consider the bill the gentleman himself I think will admit it. We are trying to carry out as far as possible the old classification in this appropriation bill, but when the House comes to consider the bill for the reorganization of the consular service it will be found the classification recommended is much better in every way than the old system.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and the policy has been, through all these years since this present classification has been in existence, from time to time to change the arrangement of consuls and regulate them in accordance with the importance of the consulate they fill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, consular service (class 5).

Mr. CANNON. I offer the same amendment in reference to that: To strike out the words "salaries, consular service," so that it will stand "class 5."

Mr. BELMONT. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mexico: Consul at Acapulco, $2,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out that line——

Mr. BELMONT. The hour of 5 o'clock has about arrived, and I ask unanimous consent that the House go on with the consideration of the bill, as I think we can complete it within a short time. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. Regular order!

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the committee will rise and report to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

And then (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of S. I. G. Scott, executrix, praying that war claim of John Scott, deceased, late of Culpeper County, Virginia, be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 13, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2851) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department favoring an appropriation of $100,000 for the continuation of work on the public building at Rochester, N. Y.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting additional information in response to a resolution of March 26, 1886, relative to money due the commissioners appointed to examine and report on the damages against the Government occasioned by the erection of dams on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with Senate resolution of April 6, 1886, the first annual report of the Commissioner of Labor; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought it not to be referred to the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report is presented in the form of a printed document, and therefore the order to print will not be made except upon the recommendation of the committee to which it is referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the 8th instant from the Chief of Engineers, and a copy of a report of the 4th instant from S. T. Abert, civil engineer, United States agent, in response to Senate resolution of the 25th of February last, directing the Secretary of War to cause to be made a careful examination of the Aqueduct Bridge at Georgetown and report its present condition, especially as to its safety for ordinary travel when the aqueduct is filled with water; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

VISIT TO MARYLAND BATTLEFIELDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1886.

SIR: It has been found necessary to postpone the visit of the First Army Corps Association to the battlefields of South Mountain and Antietam from May 14 and 15, instant, to May 17 and 18, instant, and on behalf of the association I have the honor to extend the invitation heretofore given you and the members of the honorable body over which you preside to the last-named days instead of May 14 and 15.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

EDW'D S. BRAGG,
Chairman Committee.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President United States Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association and 786 farmers, praying for the passage of House bill 8328, imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound on, and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of, oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 12 citizens of Zanesville, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. I present a petition of citizens of Rutland, Vt., in relation to imitation butter, not asking that its manufacture be prohibited, but demanding that it shall be sold under its true name. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of H. D. Tinker and 104 other citizens of Suffield, Conn.; the petition of Curtis H. Case and 32 other citizens of Bloomfield, Conn.; the petition of James B. Olcott and 25 other citizens of Manchester, Conn.; the petition of Roswell Flower and 32 other citizens of Bolton, Conn., and the petition of B. C. Hatch and 32 other citizens of New Milford, Conn., praying for legislation regulating the sale of imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS presented petitions of 567 farmers of Kansas, praying for the passage of House bill 8328, defining butter, and also imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of 2,181 farmers of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of House bill No. 8328, imposing a tax of 10 cents a pound and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of farmers of Chester County, Pennsylvania, praying that a tax of 10 cents a pound be imposed on imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present an additional statement of Clara B. Davidson, widow of General John W. Davidson, deceased, who is an applicant for an increase of pension, for consideration in connection with the bill which has been introduced for her relief. I move the reference of the paper to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of dairymen and buttermakers of Flag Springs, Mo., praying for the adoption of the bill of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, introduced by Hon. WARNER MILLER, of New York, in the Senate, and by Hon. W. L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, in the House of Representatives, placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States and imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a letter addressed to me, intended as a memorial, from the Armour Packing Company of Kansas City, Mo., engaged in the manufacture of oleomargarine, butter, and other such articles, remonstrating against the passage of a law imposing a tax of 10 cents a pound or any internal-revenue tax upon these manufactured articles, and giving reasons why such a law should not be enacted. I ask that it be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be received and so referred, if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of 71 citizens of Cedar Keys, Fla.; a petition of 43 citizens of Parish, Fla.; a petition of 148 citizens of Gainesville, Fla., and a petition of 35 citizens of Sarasota, Fla., praying for an extension of the time for the completion of the road of the Florida Railway and Navigation Company; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of 3,000 farmers residing in different parts of the State of New York, praying the passage of Senate bill 1837 defining butter, and imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Farmers' Club of Hanover, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter at 10 cents per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MILLER. I present a petition of the Northern New York Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of 228 ministers and representing 25,000 church members. The petition recites some of the outrages which have been perpetrated upon the Chinese in Wyoming Territory and elsewhere in the West, and closes with this prayer:

We therefore petition your honorable body to enact without delay such measures as will enable the officers of the law to suppress all efforts to persecute and drive out the Chinese, and secure to them, wherever they may be in our wide domain, the same protection afforded to all other persons in "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." And for this your petitioners will every pray.

This petition is properly certified to and signed by the secretary of the conference. It is substantially the same that was sent some time ago from the New York conference. I shall not read it further nor ask to have it spread upon the record. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. I present memorials of citizens of the United States resident in La Plata and San Juan Counties, in the State of Colorado, protesting against the location of the Southern Ute Indians in the southeastern corner of Utah immediately bordering on the line of Colorado.

I will state in this connection that the Committee on Indian Affairs have already reported the bill to the Senate with an amendment which was proposed by the Indian Office of the Interior Department which seems to meet the views of these citizens. The amendment is one which I have already offered and I think will meet the case, but I thought it best to present the memorials. The bill with the amendment as I understand conforms to the views of the memorialists, and I think they are right about the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will lie on the table.

Mr. SEWELL presented fourteen petitions of 479 farmers of New Jersey, praying for the passage of House bill 8328 imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of bankers, merchants, and business men of New Jersey, praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of 103 farmers of Nebraska, praying for the imposition of a tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SPOONER presented a memorial of E. B. Wolcott Post, No. 1, Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of the recommendations of the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present sixty petitions signed by 1,997 farmers of the State of Iowa, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1837, imposing a tax of 10 cents per pound on and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I present numerous petitions from farmers in different sections of the State of Illinois in the following language:

The undersigned dairymen and butter-makers respectfully petition your honorable body for the adoption of the bill of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, introduced by Hon. WARNER MILLER, of New York, in the Senate, and by Hon. W. L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, in the House of Representatives, placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States, and taxing it 10 cents per pound, &c.

These petitions are signed by numerous farmers of different parts of the State of Illinois. I move their reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution adopted by the Chicago (Ill.) Live Stock Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of any law prohibiting or taxing the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 29 farmers of Gurnee, Ill., and a petition of Lafayette Morton and 39 citizens of Will and Kankakee Counties, Illinois, praying for the imposition of a tax of 10 cents a pound on imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CONGER presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Columbiaville, Mich., praying for the enactment of a law prohibiting the employment of persons under twenty-one years of age more than eight hours a day; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CONGER. I present a large number of petitions from different parts of the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of a bill in regard to the sale of oleomargarine or butter substitutes. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I present a petition numerously signed by business men and firms of Meriden, Conn., praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of wholesale grocers of Chicago, Ill., praying for the abrogation of the Hawaiian treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of veterans of Southwestern Minnesota, praying to be granted arms for their encampment; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the reference of the bill (S. 1967) to refer the claim of Clinton G. Colgate, of the city of New York, to the Court of Claims, being a claim for the use of his patent, be changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Patents. This is not technically the report of the committee, but I take the responsibility as a member of the Committee on Claims of making that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it will be referred to the Committee on Patents. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I make a similar request in regard to the bill (S. 1954) for the relief of Eli Ayres, that it may be taken from the Committee on Claims and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is a claim for an Indian depredation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs if there be no objection.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7470) for the relief of William Fisher, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections, to report it with amendments. As the bill relates to matters solely connected with the House of Representatives, I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 7365) for the relief of Nancy Franklin;
A bill (H. R. 3043) granting a pension to Lewis W. Scanland;
A bill (H. R. 6670) granting a pension to Susan Malone;
A bill (H. R. 6120) for the relief of Richard Horrigan;
A bill (H. R. 6452) granting a pension to Samantha A. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 6718) granting a pension to William H. Starr;
A bill (H. R. 6135) granting a pension to James W. Stanford;
A bill (H. R. 7614) granting an increase of pension to Hezekiah Tillman;

A bill (H. R. 7222) granting a pension to Callie West; and
A bill (H. R. 4730) for the relief of Mary Murphy.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1534) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2355) granting a pension to Edward R. Shubrick, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5472) to increase the pension of Henry Brooks; and
A bill (H. R. 3054) granting a pension to Sylvester Root.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4023) granting a pension to Caroline Sturtz, widow of Jacob Sturtz, deceased, late of Company G, Twentieth Maryland Volunteers; and
A bill (H. R. 5438) for the relief of Elias Sheads.

Mr. LOGAN. I report from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 778) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war for the Union, by consent of the committee, without recommendation either for or against it, except that I am authorized to present the report that I submit for myself with the bill. I ask that it be printed, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and the bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of the customs of the district of the city of New York, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2416) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Wirth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2417) for the refund of duties exacted in error upon the importations of steel railway blooms; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2420) granting a pension to Sidney Denton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 2421) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria C. McPherson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2422) granting a pension to Mrs. Belle Griffith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 2423) for the relief of Grafton Munroe; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2424) granting an increase of pension to George W. Kincaid; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2425) for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2426) to prevent improper selections of the public lands of the United States under the act entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim the swamp lands within their limits," approved September 28, 1850; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GRAY and Mr. SEWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

REPRINTING OF BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM. I have received several dispatches requesting a copy of the interstate-commerce bill as it passed the Senate yesterday evening. I ask that an order be made to print the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce as it passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill (S. 194) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools has been out of print for some time, and there is great demand for it. If the Senate will make a like order in regard to that bill, I should feel greatly obliged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. SPOONER, it was Ordered, That Lewis D. Allen have leave to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate, for use before a committee of the House of Representatives.

PRE-EMPTION LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate bill (S. 2299) providing among other things for the protection of parties who have innocently purchased lands after final proof and entry and before the issuance of patent entered under the pre-emption laws: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to suspend action in the Land Department in all cases where the rights of such innocent purchasers are alleged, until Congress shall have passed upon the legislation proposed by the aforesaid bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C., agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. ROWELL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PEARSON C. MONTGOMERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. INGALLS. That stands on a motion to reconsider. Let it be passed over.

STATEN ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. FRYE. I gave notice ten days ago that when I had an opportunity I should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 121, known as the Staten Island bridge bill. I make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Senate will go through with the Calendar in its order and consider first the unobjected cases. I gave notice last week that I should while I was able, and by instruction from the committee of which I am chairman, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, insist upon taking up the Calendar and going through with the unobjected cases, and then with the other cases, as rapidly as we can, and finish the Calendar. The Calendar has become very large, and there are bills of public and private interest scattered through the whole length of the Calendar which can not be reached——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator from Michigan that debate or discussion is not in order on a motion to take up a bill. Debate is not in order in the proceedings now on a motion to take up a particular bill.

Mr. CONGER. But the regular order of business is to take up the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a remark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the Calendar, but the rule provides also that upon the motion of any Senator the Senate may proceed to the consideration of a particular bill, and that motion must be submitted without debate. The Senator from New Jersey asks the unanimous consent of the Senate for what purpose?

Mr. SEWELL. Just to make a remark on the proposition of the Senator from Maine, which simply is that the bill to which he refers can not possibly be taken up and disposed of in the morning hour. Myself and my colleague are instructed by our State, and will at least consume several hours in its discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 121) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road.

Mr. MAXEY. Is it proposed to take up the bill by a vote of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By a majority of the Senate; but if that is declined then the Calendar will be in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. FRYE. I will call for a division. This is a matter of great public importance, and I want to do my duty. I call for a division of the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a single remark to the Senator from Maine upon his proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator from New Jersey that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not propose to debate it. I simply wish to state to the Senator that a good many documents which will be necessary for my use in the discussion of this measure I have not with me this morning; they are at my house. I shall be very glad to assist the Senator at any other time in getting up the bill; I have no wish to postpone its consideration; but so far as I am concerned I am not ready to go on with the discussion this morning. Therefore I ask the indulgence of the Senator for its postponement, as it is an important bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As many as are in favor of proceeding to the consideration of the bill referred to will rise and stand until counted.

There were on a division—ayes 11, noes 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is lost. It is proper for the Chair to state that the divison discloses the want of a quorum, but there is a quorum present by actual count.

Mr. FRYE. I am not going to press the motion. The indication of the Senate was against me, and I make no further request.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PEARSON C. MONTGOMERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 18) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. INGALLS. That has already been objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill goes over under the rule.

L. MADISON DAY.

The bill (S. 266) for the relief of L. Madison Day was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] who reported the bill is absent, and I shall not insist upon action on it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over. Shall it go over without losing its place?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go over under the other rule. It can be called up at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, and will take its place on the Calendar under the ninth rule.

WILBUR F. STEELE.

The next bill in order was the bill (S. 1223) for the relief of Wilbur F. Steele.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over to the other Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there any objection to that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, being objected to.

YAKAMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1211) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the confederated tribes and bands of Indians occupying the Yakama reservation, in the Territory of Washington, for the extinguishment of their title to so much of said reservation as is required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

WALKER RIVER RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1056) to accept and ratify an agreement made by the Pah-Ute Indians, and granting a right of way to the Carson and Colorado Railroad Company through the Walker River reservation, in Nevada, was announced as next in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I object. That seems to be a long bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon what is the objection to the other bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The objection is simply that it will take the whole morning hour.

DEVIL'S LAKE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1057) granting a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railroad Company through Devil's Lake Indian reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. W. SHARRETTS.

The bill (S. 1069) for the relief of George E. W. Sharretts was announced as next in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the consent of the Senator who made the objection to be permitted to make one statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the objection so as to hear the statement.

Mr. HOAR. This is the claim of a very worthy, a very aged, and very poor man, as I understand. He rendered a great service to the Government in preparing pay tables. Originally the claim was for $30,000. The committee sent the case to the Court of Claims, and on their report we reported an amendment which pays the man $1,200.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. It is a case which has given the committee a great deal of trouble. I once on very full and thorough study of the case made a report to the Committee of Claims for a large sum, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. On further reflection it was sent to the Court of Claims, and a very small allowance reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report to amend, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert "one thousand two hundred;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. W. Sharretts the sum of $1,200, in full compensation for his time and services in the preparation of his salary tables used by the Government, and in lieu of all royalty or value of said tables, of which he is the inventor and author, as appears by the findings of facts of the Court of Claims, filed February 2, 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The bill (S. 922) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is a case adversely reported, and I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

ARMY HOSPITAL STEWARDS.

The bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army and to fix their pay and allowance, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in section 2, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" and before the word "dollars," in line 4, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the section read:

That the monthly pay of hospital stewards of the first class shall be $40, and the monthly pay of hospital stewards of the second class shall be $30; that each class shall receive the increase pay for continuous service now allowed by law; and that the allowances of quarters, fuel, rations, clothing, &c., shall be as now, or may hereafter be, fixed by law or regulation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIME FOR MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Mr. HOAR. The next bill on the Calendar (S. 1406) fixing the time for the meeting of Congress relates to the same subject as a constitutional amendment which has also been reported favorably, and I would like to have the two subjects considered at the same time. I therefore object to the bill for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the two propositions will be considered at the same time. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 1406 will be passed over without prejudice.

JUDICIAL CIRCUITS.

The bill (S. 1286) to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that be read for information in the first place.

The bill was read; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider it. It proposes to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes, so as to make a part of it read:

Eighth. The eighth circuit includes the districts of Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, and Colorado.

Ninth. The ninth circuit includes the districts of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri.

Tenth. The tenth circuit includes the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

The bill further provides that hereafter the present judge of the ninth judicial circuit, comprising the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada, shall be the judge of the tenth judicial circuit; and there shall be appointed a circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit as now designated, comprising the districts of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. The title should be amended.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the title be amended to correspond with the terms of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In what respect?

Mr. CONGER. So as to state the object. I suggest that it should read "A bill to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes relating to circuit courts, and for other purposes."

Mr. ALLISON. I think that the real purpose is to establish a new judicial circuit, and that ought to be stated in the title. It is really to establish a new circuit and appoint a new circuit judge.

Mr. CONGER. It defines also some other circuits. I desire that the title of the bill should give some indication when we look at it of what the subject-matter is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will propose an amendment the Chair will submit the question.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest "A bill to amend section 604 of the Revised Statutes in relation to circuit courts, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the title ought to be "A bill to change the limits of the eighth and ninth and tenth circuits."

Mr. ALLISON. "And appoint another circuit judge," because that is the principal thing here. It is to establish a new circuit and appoint a new circuit judge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan has submitted an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I accept the suggestion. All I want is that the title of the bill should give some indication of the contents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Massachusetts repeat his amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I will suggest that the title read in this way: "A bill to change the limits of certain circuits and to establish a new judicial circuit."

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I think this bill changes the ninth circuit to the tenth circuit. How does it affect the ninth circuit?

Mr. INGALLS. The present eighth circuit includes the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Colorado, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri, the places for holding court extending from Saint Paul on the north to Little Rock on the south and from Saint Louis on the east to Denver city on the west—a region of country that is obviously so enormous in extent that it is impossible that the duties can be discharged by a single judge. This bill proposes to divide that circuit, interfering with no other judicial area within the United States, and creates a new eighth circuit which instead of embracing that whole territory shall include the States of Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, and Colorado, and makes the ninth circuit consist of the districts of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri, and as to the tenth, which is now the ninth, it merely changes the enumeration, that circuit including the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Making what is now the ninth circuit the tenth circuit?

Mr. INGALLS. It merely changes the enumeration as to that circuit.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is the only way that it affects the ninth circuit?

Mr. INGALLS. In no other respect whatever. Of course it provides for the appointment of a new circuit judge. The interests of the public service inevitably require that this should be done. While I hear in various quarters suggestions that this will result in the appointment of a judge in sympathy with the present administration, I do not regard that as a sufficient reason why an act of great public necessity should not be accomplished by this Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title is amended as proposed, and the next case on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate this morning passed Senate bill No 1286. I merely enter the motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT January 29, 1886, declaring that executive nominations shall hereafter be considered in open session, which was reported adversely by Mr. INGALLS from the Committee on Rules February 8, 1886, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to say one word about that matter. I should be very glad to take the vote on the resolution at this time, but I understand there are Senators who desire to discuss it and I suppose there is an understanding that it shall be taken up after 2 o'clock when the pension bill reported by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and the Des Moines lands vetoed bill and the bankruptcy bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There is a bill I have had considered in the morning hour which ought to be taken up with the pension bill and the Des Moines bill.

Mr. PLATT. I understand there has been substantially an agreement as to the order of business relating to certain measures, and I understand the agreement to be as I have stated. At any rate I ask that this resolution may be passed over on the Calendar for the present without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over without losing its place.

Mr. MILLER. As the statement of the Senator from Connecticut goes on record that there is an understanding in the Senate as to the time when this measure is to be taken up, I wish to say that I do not think the Senate has made any such understanding or agreement which is binding on any one.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand that it is an order or agreement of the Senate, but I think it is an order which is well understood by a majority of the members of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I do not so understand.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose I am betraying no secret—if I am I shall consent to be expelled in case it is deemed that I deserve expulsion—when I say that the Republican Senators in this body requested six or seven of their number to look over the order of business and see what would be a convenient order, and that they unanimously, after consulting every Senator they could find, three or four weeks ago agreed on a certain order and then proposed it to the other side, all the Senators they could find over there, and they agreed that it would be a convenient way to do. That was then stated to the Senate, I think, by the present occupant of the chair, if I am not mistaken.

I do not understand that the Senate is bound by any such thing, but there is a general expectation certainly that this order of business will be followed. That settles the time for the discussion of the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut; and other matters embraced have been made special orders by the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not understand it to be a fact——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind Senators that this debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must enforce the rules. The next bill in order will be stated.

ELON A. MARSH AND MINARD LAFEVER.

The bill (S. 500) for the relief of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lafever was announced as next in order.

Mr. CONGER. As to that bill there is an attempt to harmonize the parties interested, and I ask that it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that course will be pursued.

STEPHEN N. SMITH.

The bill (S. 708) for the relief of Stephen N. Smith was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that be read for information.

The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, being objected to, goes over.

Mr. ALDRICH subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 165, being the bill (S. 708) for the relief of Stephen N. Smith, be restored to the Calendar under the eighth rule. I have satisfied the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] about the character of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be restored to the same position it held on the Calendar under the eighth rule.

WILLIAM C. DODGE.

The bill (S. 301) for the relief of William C. Dodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. Who is this man William C. Dodge? Is he an officer of the Army?

Mr. PLATT. No, sir; he has been a patent attorney, I think, in Washington, and never was connected with the Army at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Patents will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendments reported by the Committee on Patents are, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to fill the blank by inserting "ten thousand," and to fill the blank in line 13, before the word "dollars," by inserting "ten thousand;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William C. Dodge, of Washington, D. C., the sum of $10,000, for a cartridge-loading machine furnished by him to the United States upon an order from the Ordnance Department, and for the use of his invention of the same, and of the patent therefor, dated July 17, 1866, and for his improvement in cartridges patented July 4, 1865, and for the infringement of his said patents by the United States; which said sum of $10,000 shall be in full satisfaction of all claims for such use and infringements, and for the relinquishment of all right to claim any further compensation for the use of the same by the United States.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That is the committee to which matters of that kind have always gone heretofore, so that they could be investigated. There is a rule in reference to patents used by the Government that I do not think would comport with this bill, and I would like to examine it. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think it ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been before the Committee on Patents at former sessions of the Senate. It was reported favorably last year for the same amount and passed the Senate last year. I hardly think when a matter has come to the time for consideration it is a fair thing to take it away from a committee that has considered it several sessions and refer it to the Military Committee. I have no objection to the bill being passed over, that the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Military Committee, may have all the time he desires to examine it.

Mr. LOGAN. Is there a report?

Mr. PLATT. There is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is subject to objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that the Senator from Illinois, who made the objection to the bill (S. 301) for the relief of William C. Dodge, is perfectly willing that the bill should go over without prejudice, and I wish that to be the understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

BUSTS FOR THE SENATE CHAMBER.

The next business in order was the resolution reported by Mr. VOORHEES from the Committee on the Library, February 8, 1886, that marble busts of those who have been Vice-Presidents shall be placed in the vacant niches of the Senate Chamber, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That marble busts of those who have been Vice-Presidents of the United States shall be placed in the vacant niches of the Senate Chamber; that the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, subject to the advice and approval of the Senate Committee on the Library, to carry into execution the object of this resolution, and the expenses incurred in doing so shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me that the cost ought to be paid out of some other fund than the contingent fund of the Senate. I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SEWELL. It will not involve much at any one time.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. I think it would be well to put in the resolution the words "from time to time" or some other words which will imply that the whole cost is not to come in any one year.

Mr. SEWELL. It is left practically to the Library Committee.

Mr. HOAR. But the Architect might consider it a direction to do it all at once. This ought to be spread over ten years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move an amendment?

Mr. INGALLS. After the word "Chamber," in the third line, I move to insert "from time to time."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "Chamber," it is proposed to insert the words "from time to time;" so as to read:

Resolved, That marble busts of those who have been Vice-Presidents of the United States shall be placed in the vacant niches of the Senate Chamber from time to time, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. SMITH.

The bill (S. 13) for the relief of William J. Smith, late collector of customs for the port of Memphis, State of Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, in lines 4, 9, 11, and 13, to strike out the word "collector" where it occurs in each of those lines and insert "surveyor;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That in the settlement of the accounts of William J. Smith, formerly surveyor of customs at the port of Memphis, State of Tennessee, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to credit the said William J. Smith with the sum of $2,004.99 in the settlement of his accounts as late surveyor of customs, on account of the embezzlement and defalcation of N. D. Smith, deputy to the said surveyor, he being no relative, and it clearly appearing that the embezzlement and defalcation were no fault of the surveyor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William J. Smith, late surveyor of customs for the port of Memphis, State of Tennessee."

MILITARY TELEGRAPH OPERATORS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 845) for the relief of telegraph operators during the war.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That all persons engaged in the operation and construction of military telegraph lines during the war of the rebellion are hereby declared to have been a part of the Army of the United States, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prepare a roll of such persons, and to issue to each, upon application, unless it appears that his service was not creditably performed, a suitable certificate of honorable discharge, reciting this act and the term and character of his service, as well as the relative rank of such person assimilated to that conferred by law upon commissioned officers of the Army receiving a monthly pay most nearly approximating that of such person at the time of his discharge: Provided, That this law shall not be construed to entitle the persons herein mentioned to any pay or allowance other than that heretofore received by them.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether the exception contained in the proviso is intended to include pensions?

Mr. LOGAN. It was intended to include pensions.

Mr. HOAR. Should not the word "pension" be inserted then?

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to its being inserted. The intention of the bill is merely to give these persons a recognition and assimilated rank, which means nothing more than to recognize them as of a certain grade without pay or allowances other than those which they have received.

Mr. CONGER. Why not insert "bounty or pension?"

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend, which will meet the suggestion, by striking out, after the word "pay," in line 16, the word "or," and after "allowance" inserting "bounty or pension;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That this law shall not be construed to entitle the persons herein mentioned to any pay, allowance, bounty, or pension other than that heretofore received by them.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he intends that a telegraph operator on the military lines or at the different stations of the Government during the war, who received $125 a month compensation, and who may never have got near the sound of a gun, shall have the assimilated rank of a first or second lieutenant and be placed in the position of claiming the pension of a commissioned officer? If that is the intention, I object to it.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir, there is no such intention. That is provided against in the bill itself. The bill provides that they shall not receive any pay, and as amended now shall not receive any bounty, allowance, or pension other than already received.

Mr. SEWELL. What is the object of the bill then?

Mr. LOGAN. Merely to recognize them; they have never been recognized, and they did good service.

Mr. SEWELL. I have no objection to their going on the pension-roll if they were wounded in service; but when privates during the war got from ten to thirteen dollars a month and risked life, and the telegraph operators got $125 a month, and some of them I know were in the field and acted very gallantly and were wounded, I do not believe the operators ought to be placed in a position for recognition to pension merely because of the services they rendered as operators, for the reason that they were not part of the military establishment in reality.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill provides expressly that they are not to have pensions.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Were these persons so employed "an integral part of the Army of the United States?" The Senator from Illinois can state.

Mr. LOGAN. They were no part of the Army in the strict sense.

Mr. INGALLS. Then would it not be well to omit the preamble and give them the rank to which they would be entitled, omitting this declaration that they were "an integral part of the Army," which I did not know before?

Mr. LOGAN. I will explain to the Senator. When I say that in a certain sense they were no part of the Army, it is in the sense that they were not performing strictly military duty and had no rank or pay as officers. They were not in that sense part of the Army; but in the sense that they were under the control of the military authorities, under their direction, subject to arrest and subject to trial by court-martial, they were an integral part of the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. Their service was entirely voluntary, I suppose; that is to say, they could terminate it whenever they pleased.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not say that they could not, and yet they were employed as telegraph operators and came under the law.

Mr. INGALLS. So long as they remained in service.

Mr. LOGAN. So long as they remained in the service; and the man at the head, who was nominated brigadier-general and died here not long ago, had them organized the same as other military organizations. The orders were delivered to them in the same way, and as I say they were subject to the orders of the military commanders. For instance, they were subject to the orders of any officer having the command of a district or department; they could be arrested and tried by court-martial for any improper conduct, and they were entirely under military control.

Mr. INGALLS. The recitation in the preamble does not appear to be strictly accurate, and I suggest that it be omitted inasmuch as the principal purpose is gained by the enactment of the statute.

Mr. LOGAN. The recital in the preamble is the only thing that notifies the world really what their services were; and it is only that recital which, carried on the bill, gives them the standing they were really entitled to as a part of the military of the country.

Mr. HOAR. The bill speaks of "all persons engaged in the operation and construction of military telegraph lines during the war of the rebellion." Were there not persons engaged in the construction of those lines who were mere laborers and who were constructing them in territories which were not actually the scene of danger or of military operations?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. This applies to persons employed as military telegraph operators and constructing and operating such military lines.

Mr. SEWELL. Allow me to ask the Senator the meaning of this language of the amendment:

And to issue to each, upon application, unless it appears that his service was not creditably performed, a suitable certificate of honorable discharge, reciting this act and the term and character of his service—

The recital of the preamble makes the telegraph corps "an integral part of the Army." The amendment proceeds—as well as the relative rank of such person assimilated to that conferred by law upon commissioned officers of the Army receiving a monthly pay most nearly approximating that of such person at the time of his discharge.

You are by an act at this late day creating these gentlemen officers of the Army who served as telegraph operators.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. SEWELL. Practically you are doing that and giving them a discharge as such. I have no objection to recognizing the services of telegraphers; it came under my personal observation that many of them were very gallant men; but as they were paid well for their services, I object to our now twenty years afterward taking that pay and making it the basis for assimilated rank with the officers of the Army who were discharging active duties in the field.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know that the Senator made this objection to the bill when it was before the committee; but that is immaterial. I tried to draught the bill so that it would not confer a commission on any one, and it certainly does not, and so that it would not give any additional pay, which it certainly does not. The mere fact that it gives to these men an honorary title is a matter of no consequence. There were many persons who served in the Army who had what was called an honorary commission or title from the governors of various States and received discharges as such, and yet they received no pay on that account. It was an honorary commission giving them the rank of major or lieutenant-colonel. They have their commissions and have their discharges, but have never claimed to be entitled to pay and never have received any. There are many persons who served in such capacities. I know one who was a newspaper correspondent who had a major's commission, but it was a mere honorary commission carrying no pay. It was given to him, I suppose, for the purpose of giving him certain facilities that he might desire. I know nothing about why it was given, but I know that was the fact.

The first clause of the preamble recites that—

Whereas, except commissioned officers, those persons engaged in the military telegraph corps of the United States during the war of the rebellion, although performing strictly military duties, whereby some lost their lives and others were wounded or imprisoned, have received no official recognition for their fidelity, intelligence, bravery, and efficiency.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I will say that this language clearly defines who are the people that are to be recognized. They are not persons who were engaged in building military telegraph lines in Illinois or in the Senator's State, but it applies to the military telegraph corps which was organized as a corps in the Army and subject, as I said, to the orders of the commanding officer. The chief of this corps received his instructions and orders from the general commanding, the same as a subordinate general did. They were compelled to keep secrecy and to perform very important duties, and some of them behaved very gallantly. The preamble says:

Whereas, except commissioned officers, those persons engaged in the military telegraph corps of the United States during the war of the rebellion, although performing strictly military duties, whereby some lost their lives and others were wounded or imprisoned, have received no official recognition for their fidelity, intelligence, bravery, and efficiency; and

Whereas, as an integral part of the Army, they ought to have been accorded a military status corresponding in rank to the service so meritoriously performed.

If they performed services that corresponded with the services of a private soldier they would have their discharge the same as a private soldier. If their services and pay were similar to those of a second lieutenant they would receive a discharge with the assimilated rank of a second lieutenant, and so on. That is the meaning of it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator that under the rule his five minutes have expired.

Mr. SEWELL. I had no idea when the Senator got the consent of the committee to make the report in this way that the bill had this provision as to assimilated rank in it. I should have objected to it in the committee if my attention had been called to it. If the Senator will allow me, I will move to amend by striking out commencing with the word "receipt" in the tenth line to the word "discharge" in the fourteenth line.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to commence with the word "as" on line 10, covering the words "as well as the relative rank."

Mr. SEWELL. Yes; I move to strike out from the word "as" in line 10 to the word "discharge" on line 14; that is, to strike out the words "as well as the relative rank of such person assimilated to that conferred by law upon commissioned officers of the Army receiving a monthly pay most nearly approximating that of such person at the time of his discharge."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the proposed amendment, in line 10, after the word "service," all down to and including the word "discharge," in line 14, as follows:

As well as the relative rank of such person assimilated to that conferred by law upon commissioned officers of the Army receiving a monthly pay most nearly approximating that of such person at the time of his discharge.

Mr. LOGAN. Then how will the bill read?

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as proposed to be amended would then read as follows:

That all persons engaged in the operation and construction of military telegraph lines during the war of the rebellion are hereby declared to have been a part of the Army of the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prepare a roll of such persons, and to issue to each, upon application, unless it appears that his service was not creditably performed, a suitable certificate of honorable discharge, reciting this act and the term and character of his service: Provided, That this law shall not be construed to entitle the persons herein mentioned to any pay, allowance, bounty, or pension other than that heretofore received by them.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think that amendment ought to be made to this bill. The proviso certainly covers everything. Under it these operators can receive no pay, no allowance, no bounty, no pension. They have already been discharged from the service, but discharged merely as telegraph operators. Now, if you are going to give them any title or confer any honor at all upon them for the services performed in a meritorious way, you have got to designate them in some mode. They have been already discharged as military telegraph operators.

Mr. SEWELL. They are designated as in the Telegraph Corps. The objection I have to it is that you are creating a commissioned officer twenty years after the service performed.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not create a military officer at all, it does not give a commission. Let us see; the bill says:

That all persons engaged in the operation and construction of military telegraph lines during the war of the rebellion are hereby declared to have been a part of the Army of the United States; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prepare a roll of such persons, and to issue to each, upon application, unless it appears that his service was not creditably performed, a suitable certificate of honorable discharge.

That is all, "a suitable certificate of honorable discharge," not an Army discharge, but a certificate of the service that he performed and declaring his discharge as a part of the Army. What else?

Reciting this act—

That is reciting this law—

and the term and character of his service as well as the relative rank of such person assimilated to that conferred by law upon commissioned officers of the Army.

The certificate that he receives with this recital in it, reciting just what this preamble does, is for the purpose of identifying him as one of the corps of military telegraph operators. In other words, it is to designate him so as to distinguish him from other telegraph operators during the war who did not serve as military operators. That is all it means; and this certificate of discharge is a discharge with a rank, not a rank in the Army but assimilated rank. There is a very great difference between rank and assimilated rank. Assimilated rank carries with it no pay, carries with it no power, carries with it no authority to command, carries with it nothing except that which the law gives, carries, in other words, nothing whatever except that which the law confers upon the rank.

Assimilated rank means nothing except that the operator is given a certificate that he was employed and that his pay was a similar pay to that of a lieutenant, and therefore as a military operator in the military corps he was entitled to a lieutenant's rank in that corps.

I hope the amendment will not be made, for I certainly do not see anything in the bill that would draw money or give any rank.

Mr. CONGER. If the discussion of this question is to take up the rest of the morning hour I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

The bill (S. 78) to extend the time for filing certain claims for compensation for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This and the three cases following having been reported adversely will be passed over as under objection and placed under the ninth rule.

Mr. LOGAN. Who objected to the military telegraph operators' bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. I objected because it was taking up all there is of the morning hour for discussion. The rule limits discussion to five minutes; but that bill was taking all the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The four cases reported adversely will be considered as objected to and passed over.

Mr. LOGAN. My friend from Michigan was kind enough to object to the telegraph operators' bill just about the time we were going to vote upon it. I want to say one word in relation to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can be only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask a question. Under the rule has not the Senator the right, notwithstanding the objection, to move to proceed to consider the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not make that motion.

Mr. LOGAN. Really I did not know it had been objected to. I did not hear the objection when it was made.

What I want to say in justification of myself is that the print shows on its face that the original bill was entirely stricken out, and the amendment was agreed to after discussion in the Committee on Military Affairs. I must say I was a little surprised to find objection to it here; but inasmuch as some of the committee object to it, having forgotten perhaps that they agreed to it in the committee-room, I ask that it may be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that gentlemen may fix it there in a way that they will not object to it when it is returned to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, Order of Business 170, being the bill (S. 845) for the relief of telegraph operators during the war, will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

CASES REPORTED ADVERSELY.

Mr. HOAR. I desire respectfully to call the attention of the Chair and the Senate, if I may be pardoned for a moment, to the great inconvenience of the ruling made just now. There are a great many cases reported adversely from the Committee on Claims. Perhaps some Senator who has introduced the bill at the request of a constituent, when the report is made, in order that he may examine it, asks to have it put on the Calendar. If that adverse report is considered as an objection to discussing and disposing of the case under the five-minute rule, these cases do not get disposed of at all, and the result is they come back the next year and the next and the next. Now, in nine cases out of ten when they come up under the five-minute rule, although the report is adverse, nobody would object to their being disposed of and ended. It seems to me, with due respect to the Chair, that although the adverse report shows that somebody objects to the passage of the bill—indeed that the whole committee object that has made the report—it does not at all follow that any Senator objects to considering it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recall the ruling in case there is objection; but the Chair considered an adverse report from a committee as equivalent to a single objection.

Mr. HOAR. But that is not an objection to considering such a bill under the five-minute rule, but only an objection to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the first of the bills adversely reported will be placed before the Senate.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES.

The bill (S. 78) to extend the time for filing certain claims for compensation for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States was announced as in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I reported that bill adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs. It was introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]; he is absent, and at his request it was placed upon the Calendar. I should dislike to have it postponed indefinitely now in his absence, and therefore I object to its consideration and let it go on the other Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

PROPOSED DAILY RECESS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN, February 3, 1886, providing for a recess of the Senate from 2 o'clock to 2.30 p. m. each day, which was reported adversely from the Committee on Rules by Mr. FRYE, February 9, 1886.

Mr. CONGER. That being reported adversely let it be passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not move its indefinite postponement?

Mr. CONGER. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I move the indefinite postponement of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate will take a recess on each day at 2 o'clock and be in session again at 2.30 p. m. This order may be suspended by a vote of a quorum required in case of adjournment, to be had without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to postpone the resolution indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL LOT IN CHICAGO.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to call up Senate bill 1394, in reference to the sale of public property in Chicago. There was an amendment made to it by the House, and I wish to have the amendment concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois, pending the consideration of the Calendar, moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1394) to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property.

Mr. CONGER. That can come up after 2 o'clock.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take it up now. I desire to have the amendment concurred in. It is a very important matter, and time is very precious in connection with it.

Mr. CONGER. Every minute taken from the morning hour is so much lost.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not doubt that, but it will not take any more time now than on any other occasion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House amendments to this bill.

The motion was agreed; to and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1394) to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was stated to be on page 2, line 5, section 1, to insert, after the word "three," the word "disinterested;" in line 5, after the word "persons," to strike out the words "officers of the United States."

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to name, within ten days after the passage of this act, a commission, to consist of three disinterested persons, whose duty it shall be to ascertain and report to said Secretary, within twenty days after their said appointment, the cash market value of the lot above mentioned in the city of Chicago; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to sell and convey the said lot to the said Chicago and Great Western Railroad Company, at such price, not less in any event than the value thereof as appraised and reported by said commission, as he and said railroad company shall agree upon; the said price, when agreed upon, to be paid in cash: Provided, however, That if said Secretary and said railroad company shall be unable to agree upon the price to be paid for said property, the same shall be finally fixed by a board of three commissioners to be appointed as follows: One, upon the application of the railroad company, on notice to the district attorney of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, by the district judge of the United States in and for said district; another to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the two thus chosen to select a third, who shall be competent and disinterested. The said board thus constituted, or a majority thereof, shall fix the price (not to be less, however, than the first appraisal thereof hereinbefore provided for) at which the same shall be sold to said company, and upon payment to the Secretary of the Treasury of said price the title to said property shall vest in said company, its successors and assigns, upon the following express conditions: That all non-competing railroads not now having right of way into Chicago, desiring to use the tracks, switches, depots, and terminal facilities of said Chicago and Great Western Railroad, shall be, by said company or its assigns, permitted to do so, to the extent of the capacity of said company to furnish railroad terminal facilities, upon fair and equitable terms and regulations; and in the event the companies interested can not agree upon such terms and regulations, then the same shall be fixed and determined by three disinterested persons, one of whom shall be selected by said Chicago and Great Western Railroad Company, one by such other company as may desire to use said tracks, switches, and terminal facilities, and the third by the two persons so selected. If the purchase-price of said land, as agreed upon or finally fixed as hereinbefore provided, is not paid within ten days after the same shall have been so agreed upon or fixed as aforesaid, this act shall be null and void.

SEC. 2. That all costs incurred under the provisions hereof in appraising said property, or ascertaining the price to be paid therefor, shall be added to the said price as agreed upon, or as the same may be finally fixed hereunder, and paid by said railroad company.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest the purchase-money of the said lot received by him, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the purchase or acquisition by condemnation of a site, and in the erection thereon of a suitable and commodious warehouse, for the use of the United States local appraiser of customs and other Government uses, in the city of Chicago. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the purchase-money received by the Secretary of the Treasury for the lot mentioned in the first section of this act; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said purchase-money received by the Secretary of the Treasury under this act, for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Illinois shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. And the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Chicago, Ill.," approved March 3, 1885, is hereby repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the first part of that bill? What does the bill describe? What is the property to be sold, and what is it now used for?

Mr. LOGAN. I can state——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the Secretary just read the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator refers to the preamble.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Chicago and Great Western Railroad Company, a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Illinois, is constructing its railroad within the city of Chicago, and possesses, under its charter and under the ordinances of said city, a franchise to construct, maintain, and operate its railroad to Harrison street, in said city, for which purpose it has acquired, and is acquiring, by purchase and otherwise, the real estate lying between Taylor street and said Harrison street, and west of Fifth avenue; and

Whereas the United States owns the south half of block 87, in school section addition to Chicago, which is in the center of the property so acquired and being acquired by said railroad company for terminal facilities, and is vacant, and is indispensable to said company in exercising said franchise and affording to the public the terminal facilities for which said company has so purchased the property as aforesaid: Therefore,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rest of the bill has been read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The preamble states the case. Now will my friend from Illinois explain the situation?

Mr. LOGAN. The situation is just this: The railroad terminal point is north of this lot several blocks. This lot is a vacant lot belonging to the Government, that was set aside for the purpose of an appraiser's office. The railroad has to pass through it. It is entirely out of the way for an appraiser's office. The object is to let the railroad purchase it, inasmuch as they have to go through it, and take the money and buy a lot for an appraiser's office nearer the custom-house, where it will be more convenient, much better for the Government and for all parties. This is a bill that nobody in Chicago has ever objected to that I have heard of, but all think it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator one question about the House amendments? I thought I heard the Secretary read that this sale was to be upon a condition subsequent or a stipulation subsequent, that all non-competing railroads should have facilities in that depot and over that ground. Is that right? If we are to sell this property, why do we not sell it straight out, or if we are to make a provision for common facilities why not make it for all roads?

Mr. LOGAN. I can not tell the Senator why we do not do that. I can only tell him that the bill passed the Senate for an absolute sale without objection and went to the other House, where they put on these amendments, and the parties would rather have the bill with the amendments than to have it thrust back and forth between the House and the Senate and probably get in the end something that nobody would agree to. That is all there is in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It simply makes a distinction between railroads that does not seem to be very valuable.

Mr. LOGAN. That I have nothing to do with. The other House put the amendments on, and I would rather take the bill with the amendments than take the chance of not having the bill at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right; go ahead.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

OVERVALUATION OF AUSTRIAN FLORIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar will be resumed.

The bill (S. 599) to refund excessive duties caused by extraordinary overvaluation of the Austrian florin in the year 1878, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CONGER. That being reported adversely, I object.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAMERON. Perhaps some one who is not in the Senate now requested it to be put on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know of any one else except the present occupant of the chair who feels an interest in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

EUGENE WELLS.

The bill (S. 504) for the relief of Eugene Wells was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

EFFICIENCY OF THE INFANTRY.

The bill (S. 137) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army was reported by its title.

Mr. MANDERSON. I presume that will have to go over under the ninth rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made by another Senator.

OBSERVATION OF ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

The bill (S. 1298) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to fit out an expedition to observe the total eclipse of the sun which occurs on the 29th of August, 1886, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. In the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I ask that that bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You ought not to interfere with the eclipse of the sun.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object, as the Senator from Vermont wants it considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be a great pity to stop the eclipse of the sun.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont, who thinks it ought to be passed immediately.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is there a report accompanying that bill? If so, let us hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Instead of saying "the Navy Department" it should read "under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy." I move to amend by striking out "Navy Department" and inserting "Secretary of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN KENOFSKY.

The bill (S. 1219) for the relief of the heirs of Martin Kenofsky was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the heirs or legal representatives of Martin Kenofsky $8,861 in full of all demands for and on account of the claim of Kenofsky for the proceeds derived from the sale of $4,992.50 of gold coin belonging to him and used in the service of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Secretory read the following report submitted by Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, February 10, 1886:

Your committee, to whom was referred Senate bill 1219, for the relief of the heirs of Martin Kenofsky, find that Martin Kenofsky, a Prussian subject, was a resident of Grenada, in the State of Mississippi, in 1864; that he was a man of Union sentiments; that he converted his possessions into gold, amounting to $4,992.50; then started for Memphis, at that time occupied by the Union forces, was seized within the lines, his gold taken from him, and he cast into prison, from which he was discharged without trial, and without any restoration of his property. The gold was converted into currency, realizing $8,861. By authority of military officers in command this money was used for military purposes, contrary to law and the regulations of the Treasury Department. It should have been covered into the Treasury.

The claimant was industrious in pursuing his remedy, commencing at once, in 1865, by application to the Secretary of War, and continuing without cessation until his death in 1880. Then his widow petitioned Congress for relief, but died pending its hearing, in 1881, leaving seven children in destitute circumstances. The authorities of the Widows and Orphans' Home, of New Orleans, and friends of the family then petitioned Congress for relief. No laches can be charged against the claimants.

The United States have had the benefit of this money; it was not justly exposed to confiscation; it should have been in the Treasury to-day, subject to the disposal of Congress; and in the opinion of your committee, justice requires that, notwithstanding it was never covered into the Treasury, having been committed to the use of the Army contrary to law, this money should be paid to the legal heirs of Martin Kenofsky, and they accordingly report back the bill referred, with an amendment striking out the words "eight thousand eight hundred and sixty-one dollars," in the sixth and seventh lines, and inserting instead thereof the words "four thousand nine hundred and ninety-two dollars and fifty cents," with the recommendation that as amended it ought to pass.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "$8,861" and in lieu thereof to insert "$4,992.50."

Mr. LOGAN. It is stated in general terms, but I should like to inquire where this man was attempting to go, whether to pass through the lines with his money, or whether he was intending to invest it—what he intended to do with it. If there is any information on that point I should like to have it.

Mr. FRYE. The statements contained in the evidence on file were that this man had remained down at Grenada as long as he felt it was safe to remain there and that he sold out everything that he had, converted it into gold, and started for the Union lines, to get within them at Memphis, Memphis being then occupied by the Union troops, and that as he was entering he was taken prisoner, and the money taken away from him. General Washburne says in his letter dated Memphis, May 27, 1865, forwarded to the Secretary of War:

I found Kenofsky in prison and in irons when I took command, and soon after released him and sent him out of the lines that he might return to Grenada, Miss. Federal officers who were in Grenada in 1863 assure me that he showed our officers and men great attention, and officers now occupying the post of Grenada assure me that it is known that he was always a friend to our Government.

I think he was roughly handled, probably more so than the facts would justify.

The money was used by General Washburne in part and by his successor in part, for the use of the United States Army, contrary to the rules and regulations then prevailing of the Treasury Department, as it should have been covered into the Treasury. I see no reason why the amount of money which was taken should not be restored. The former report of the Committee on Foreign Relations was in favor of paying the $8,861, the value of the money in currency.

Mr. VEST. How was it used in the military service? In what way?

Mr. FRYE. General Hurlbut says:

The gold, the amount of which I can not now give, was sent under my direction by Captain Williams to Saint Louis or Chicago, and converted into paper currency at proper premiums.

My headquarters were removed to Cairo; at that place the messenger in charge reported to me the amount of United States notes the produce of the exchange, $8,861.

This amount was taken up by me and has been lawfully used in the secret-service of the United States, for which I am at all times ready to account and display proper vouchers.

That is General S. A. Hurlbut. This man's money was used.

Mr. VEST. That may be so, but to make the United States Government responsible for the unlawful conduct of one of its officers, civil or military, on such a statement, without showing what the expenditure was for, would seem hardly to be justified on legal principles.

He says it was used for the secret service.

Mr. FRYE. Hurlbut says further:

The annexed account will show the statement of this particular fund up to the 4th May, 1864, when I ceased to command the Sixteenth Army Corps.

The amount of $5,001, charged to Lieut. Col. W. H. Thurston, assistant inspector-general Sixteenth Army Corps, was left with him for use of my successor in command of the corps. No successor was appointed, and that sum was paid back to me by him and expended in the Department of the Gulf.

Mr. VEST. How?

Mr. FRYE. He does not say.

Mr. ALLISON. Great injustice seems to have been done to this man, who was endeavoring to get within the Union lines. It seems that the military officer there immediately put him in irons. I should think it was rather hard treatment for a Union man who was trying to get into our country to put him in irons and take his money away from him. Then General Washburne, it seems, who had charge of this case, afterward thought it wise under the circumstances to send the man back to Grenada, Miss.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I reported this bill from the Committee on Foreign Relations during the Forty-eighth Congress. I examined the case with care and became satisfied that the amount of money reported in the bill then presented to the Senate should be paid to the heirs of Martin Kenofsky. It was a case of very great hardship. His money had been taken from him and had been used for the benefit of the Government, but in violation of the law and Treasury regulations. I do not think there is any doubt at all but that the heirs of Kenofsky are entitled to that money.

The bill was passed by the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress and went over to the House, and there by delay failed in its passage.

Mr. FRYE. The man and his wife are both dead, the widow dying last and leaving seven little children. They are now supported, or were when this report was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], by an orphan asylum in New Orleans; and there was a largely-signed petition from New Orleans in favor of this repayment. It seems to me that the United States, having used the money, can afford to let these children have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I simply wish to say that as I now remember in the multitude of affairs that we have had, I was not able to concur in this report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was under the impression that this man was a man who was operating, as it might be, on both sides of the line at that time; and I was not satisfied of his loyalty or the impropriety of his having been seized and his money confiscated. I do not make any point, if he was loyal and had this money, on the fact that it did not get into the Treasury. It was taken by military power. But I was not myself satisfied that this person at the time was otherwise than an enemy of the United States, coming into our lines for improper purposes, which led to his being put in irons by the general in command; and then, when that general was superseded, his being released and sent back into the confederate lines, instead of having been sent North, if he was then believed to have been a Union man.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. At the time of the arrest of Kenofsky and the appropriation of this money he was a subject of the Czar of Russia. The case was brought to the attention of our Government by the Russian minister. It was considered in the War Department, and finally found its way into Congress and into the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The only proof in the case, as I remember it, tended to show that so far as Kenofsky was concerned his sympathies and his actions were all entirely on the side of the Government, and that is supported by the statements of Union officers. But he was not a citizen of the United States; his money was taken in an unlawful manner and used unlawfully, and it does seem to me that his minor children now ought to have the benefit of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I would not deprive minor children or any other character of children from that to which they are lawfully entitled. I asked what testimony, what facts, demonstrated the truth of this man's assertion that he was coming to our lines for protection.

It is very easy for Senators, who perhaps only get their knowledge from the facts which are presented to them here, to sympathize with these cases; but there are men on this floor on both sides who know that all over that section wherever the Army approached, wherever the flag of the country appeared, there were men who had not taken the oath of allegiance, who floated "free jacks," as the phrase was. That was a common thing. I have seen hundreds and even thousands of them, I might say. Knowing what may come from the establishment of such a precedent as this, I want to be certain as to the facts before I assist in returning the money, for if we are to pay for everything that is now considered to have been unlawfully done this Government will never be able to do it.

I have known many persons who did not speak plain English coming into our lines, who were engaged in other pursuits than in aiding and assisting the Union Army, and many who did speak plain English who were similarly occupied, who were trading between the lines and professing friendship to whichever army happened to be in the closest proximity to them; and so I am always suspicious of claims of this kind. I know that in my travels through that country (and I was down through Mississippi a little) I failed to find loyal men. I heard of a great many of them, and I know many now claim that they were loyal, but I did not form their acquaintance at the time the "unpleasantness" was going on. I know now they are all right enough, and if they had to organize themselves they would have an immense army and there would have been no necessity for our going down there. I find them now, but I did not find them then, either man or woman. I do not pretend to say they are not all right now. I have not said that, but I say at that time the fact was as I have stated. These cases are novel to me.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up and consider Senate bill 503, Order of Business 638 upon the Calendar, which relates to the supreme court of Montana Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield for that purpose?

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator to yield for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Oregon asked me to yield for a like request and I declined.

Mr. BERRY. Let us have the regular order. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made on the right of the Chair, the request of the Senator from Minnesota can not be entertained.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the bill has already been before the Senate on two occasions, but has received very little consideration upon either. I desire to discuss its provisions for a short time, and, if there be no objection, before proceeding to do so I will call the attention of the members of the Committee on Pensions and others to a few verbal amendments which ought to be made in the bill itself.

Since the bill was reported I have received many letters from soldiers who were in the first Bull Run fight, and who saw other active service, whose term of enlistment was three months, but who rendered valuable service, who were the earliest of the volunteers, and who feel hurt that they are not included within the terms of the bill as it now stands, which provides that the service must have been for a period of six months. I am satisfied, as I have been on former occasions, that the bill should provide for those who rendered not less than three months' service; and I ask that a substitution be made in the seventh line of the first section, that the word "six" be stricken out and the word "three" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 7, after the word "of," it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "three;" so as to read:

> For the period of three months during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that is done by the direction of the committee?

Mr. BLAIR. I have conferred with some members of the committee and I call the attention of other members to it now.

Mr. MORRILL. It was not in the original report?

Mr. BLAIR. It was not in the original report.

Mr. MORRILL. I think, then, the Senator had better wait until a quorum is present before moving such an amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I move a call of the Senate if the Senate is not in a condition to proceed with business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves a call of the Senate. All in favor of the motion will say "ay." [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will call for the yeas and nays we shall secure a quorum in that way.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand. I know how the Senate is engaged just now. This is a mere verbal amendment, and if the members of the committee have no objection and a majority of the committee is present——

Mr. SEWELL. I think there will be no objection to letting the amendment go over for the present.

Mr. MORRILL. It should go over until the Senate is fuller.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well. I make a like request in regard to the insertion of the word "manual" before the word "labor," in line 11 of the first section, which is an amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], a member of the committee.

I shall also make a like request, after the word "support," at the end of line 11, to insert the words "or upon the contributions of others not legally bound thereto," the same phraseology used in the second section, which treats of the dependent parents, and which should have been inserted in the first section.

In the fifteenth line, after the word "disability," I propose to insert the words "and dependence," and in the twentieth line, after the word "dollars," the words "per month" should be inserted.

In the tenth line of the second section, after the word "laws," the words should be inserted "as modified by this section."

I think there should be added at the end of the fourth section the following clause:

> And so long as any person shall claim pension under this act he or she shall be held to have waived pension under any other provision of law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not hear one solitary word, and I object to all these amendments unless I can hear what is proposed.

Mr. BLAIR. They are not being made at this time. They are amendments which I propose to move.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh!

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask the attention of members of the committee and of the Senate at this time to an amendment which may be offered, a new section to be inserted, as follows:

> The widow of any person who served in the military or naval service and was honorably discharged therefrom as mentioned in the first section, who shall not have remarried and who shall be dependent upon her own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound thereto for support, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authorities, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States at the rate of $12 per month during the continuance of such widowhood and dependence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments intended to be proposed to the bill will be noted.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, this bill is taken in all its substantial provisions from what is known as the Mexican pension bill of the last Congress, a bill which primarily made provision by a service pension for the soldiers of the Mexican war. Coming from the House to the Senate and being referred to the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, that committee moved as an amendment to it what was known in the last Congress as the Cullom bill. That Cullom bill had been modified in committee, so that its substantial provision was the same as was discussed previously in the Forty-seventh Congress to a considerable extent, the purpose of it being to make provision for those soldiers of the war of 1861 who, not being provided for under existing pension laws, or who, being embraced within the provisions of existing pension laws, found it impossible or exceedingly difficult by reason of the death of witnesses or the destruction of testimony, documentary or otherwise, or for other causes without fault on their part, causes based upon misfortune, to establish their claim under existing law; so that all soldiers who should have served in that war for a period of three months or more, who may have been disabled from any cause not occurring through their own fault, and who, whether that cause originated in the service or not, being thus disabled and further dependent upon their own manual labor for support, should receive assistance from the Government to an amount in case of total helplessness not exceeding $24 down to a smaller sum less than $24, according to the actual disability from which they were suffering.

That amendment which was moved to the Mexican pension bill embraced dependent parents, widows of the soldiers who might be dependent, and some other classes which are not embraced in the present bill.

When this session opened there was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions the Mexican pension bill as amended with the provisions I have specified in the last Congress, and it was the desire of many members of the committee, and I think of the Senate, that the entire bill with its multifarious provisions, covering as it did nearly all cases of hardship or alleged hardship growing out of the pension laws actually existing, or actual hardship which was not embraced in any law—I say it was the desire of the members of the committee that that bill as a whole should be presented in this Congress and that action should be had thereon. But another plan was adopted, and so we have come to have in the present Congress a great variety of little bits of bills, a little in this, a little in that, and a little in another, and the whole pension legislation which had been thus symmetrically arranged has been chopped up and divided about, and is scattered here and there and yonder in the two Houses of Congress.

The bill now before the Senate contains probably the most important features, not excepting the Mexican bill proper, which are found in any of them. I do not mean to say that it is the most important in the sense that it involves the largest appropriation of money should it become a law. By no means.

The arrears-of-pension bill, which is one of those now pending, by the estimate of General Dudley, the former Commissioner of Pensions, would require at least $246,000,000 in order to adjust the claims which have been filed since July, 1880, and have been allowed since that time, and also the claims of those filed since that time, which in all probability, judging from what has been evolved from previous action of the office in such cases, will yet be allowed, the $246,000,000 by his estimate covering, I say, the amount which will be involved in the enactment of that law to settle claims which have been filed since that time which have since been allowed, and those which in all human probability will yet be allowed by the office.

This estimate makes no provision, of course, for the claims yet to be filed, whether the limitation upon the payment of arrears should be repealed or not. What amount would be involved in that case is purely one of conjecture, because the claims not yet having been even filed it is impossible that we should have any reliable data whereon to form a judgment.

The present Commissioner of Pensions, in reply to a call from the committee made recently, has furnished a letter, which has not been read before the committee, for the reason that it was not received until last night—it has, however, come into my possession—in which he quite elaborately, and apparently with great care and good judgment, makes an estimate covering precisely the same cases which I have mentioned as was involved in the calculation of his predecessor, that the cost of the enactment of the arrears-of-pension law would be $222,000,000; I think that is the amount—less than $230,000,000. That, of course, as in any other case, does not cover the conjectural ground.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if, under the arrears act, as it is called, of 1879, we have not paid about $25,000,000 already?

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps the Senator does not understand me.

Mr. VEST. I did not catch the Senator's remark distinctly.

Mr. BLAIR. We have adjusted all arrears of claims that were filed prior to July 1, 1880, which have been already adjudicated. There is, of course, a certain number—we do not know how many—yet unascertained, which will be allowed, of claims filed prior to July 1, 1880, that have not yet been adjudicated. The letter of the Commissioner I shall insert in the RECORD:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, transmitting a copy of Senate bill No. 35, and asking for a detailed estimate of the amount required to meet the payments necessary in the event that the said bill becomes a law.

The proposition submitted is twofold. The proposed legislation will repeal the limitation as to the commencement of pension now imposed by the second section of the act approved March 3, 1879, and it will, secondly, repeal the provision now found in the act of March 3, 1885, that the presumption of prior soundness in the adjudication of pension claims authorized by said act may be rebutted.

I shall find it necessary therefore to consider each point separately.

Section 2 of the act approved March 3, 1879, provided that all pensions should commence at death, discharge, or termination of prior title, if the application were made prior to July 1, 1880.

Since July 1, 1880, there have been allowed the following number of cases in which, by reason of said limitation, no arrears have been granted: Invalid, 46,867; widows, minors, and others, 29,558; the figures being calculated to June 30, 1885.

Of the invalid allowances there were filed in 1880, 26,027; in 1881, 4,812; in 1882, 6,189; in 1883, 5,678; in 1884, 3,351; in 1885, 810.

If we fix July 1, 1865, as the average date of discharge and $100 as the average yearly rate, it will appear that to pay the arrears in these cases it will require approximately the following sums:

When filed.	No. of pensioners.	Yearly value.	Amount.
1880	26,027	$1,500	$39,040,500
1881	4,812	1,600	7,699,200
1882	6,189	1,700	10,521,300
1883	5,678	1,800	10,220,400
1884	3,351	1,900	6,366,900
1885	810	2,000	1,620,000
Amount required to pay invalids now on rolls			75,468,300

The twenty-nine thousand five hundred and fifty-eight allowances to widows, minors, and others include the pensions to minors against whom no limitation has run, as well as to dependents whose title did not accrue in many instances until the death of the soldier and of another person.

In the case of a widow the title will accrue at the death of the soldier. It is difficult, therefore, to fix the dates from which to compute the probable amount to become due.

Assuming nine years as the average period and $100 as the average yearly rate, the amount required to pay arrears in ten thousand (estimated) cases will be $9,000,000; add to pay invalids, $75,468,300; total amount to pensioners on rolls, $84,468,300.

To state the amount likely to be required to pay arrears in cases still pending in this office will be to indulge largely in conjecture.

It may, however, be stated that on the 30th day of June, 1885, there were pending in this office 171,402 invalid and 61,582 widows' and other applications.

Assuming that 60 per cent. of these will receive favorable consideration, that the average arrears period will be eighteen years and that $100 will be the average annual rate, the amount required to pay these cases will be as follows:

Sixty per cent. of 171,402 = 102,841 × $1,800 = $185,113,800.
Sixty per cent. of 61,582 = 36,949 × $900 = $33,254,100.

But of the pending invalid cases 73,415 and of the pending widows and others 26,656 were filed prior to July 1, 1880, and, if allowed, arrears will be paid to them without regard to the pending legislation.

To determine the net additional cost to the Government by the passage of the present bill, it is essential therefore that these be deducted from the total number of cases.

Upon the same basis of allowances, the amount due in said cases will be as follows:

Sixty per cent. of 73,415 = 44,049 × $1,500 equals	$66,073,500
Sixty per cent. of 26,656 = 15,994 × $900 equals	14,394,600
Total	80,468,100
From the total cost	218,367,900
Deduct this amount	80,468,300
	137,899,800
Add amount to pay pensioners on rolls	84,468,300
Additional total amount to pay pensioners and in claims already filed	222,368,100

The foregoing estimates are substantially those submitted to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives by letters from this office dated January 25 and February 5, 1886, addressed to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, chairman of said committee, in response to a similar inquiry. I know of no reason for departing from the estimates submitted to said committee.

Your inquiry will, however, include in its scope not only the cases already allowed and those now pending in this office, but also those which have been already rejected, as well as those which may hereafter be filed.

Up to June 30, 1885, there had been rejected 85,589 invalid claims and 45,837 widows' and other claims, all of which had been filed since July 1, 1880.

How many of these cases, will upon re-examination receive favorable consideration it is impracticable to state with any degree of accuracy.

The repeal of the limitation will greatly stimulate the filing of cases, it is conceded, but how many will be filed and how many of them when filed will receive favorable consideration are entirely conjectural.

The second proposition is the probable cost to the Government resulting from the repeal of the proviso contained in the act of March 3, 1885, that the presumption of prior soundness in pension cases may be rebutted.

I should not be able to intelligently reply to this question without requiring an examination to be made in each of the 85,580 invalid cases and 45,837 widows' cases now upon the rejected files of this office, all of which, have been filed since July 1, 1880, and also 48,780 invalid and 33,217 widows' cases also upon the rejected files, all of which were filed prior to July 1, 1880, to determine the causes of rejection.

The magnitude of this work, as well as its impracticability, you will at once appreciate.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
Acting Chairman Committee on Pensions,
United States Senate.

Mr. CAMDEN. Can the Senator state how much was paid under the act for the payment of arrearages up to the time it went out by limitation?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know the amount. It is stated in some of the reports. It can be ascertained by a reference to the reports of the Commissioner of Pensions. I have not examined the matter for a year or two; but it will not be difficult to find it. I do not care, however, to go into that matter at any length at the present time. I merely wish to indicate in round numbers something of the relative importance of these various propositions, considered from the pecuniary point of view.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the Senator any estimate made by the Commissioner of Pensions or by the Committee on Pensions as to the probable amount of the drafts upon the Treasury resulting from the bill that his committee has reported?

Mr. BLAIR. The present bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, the pending bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I will speak of that in a few moments.

But however the matter may be, the argument in favor of the payment of arrears of pensions based upon justice and equity is one that I have never yet seen replied to. The arrears-of-pensions act applies only to those soldiers who rendered service, contracted disability therein, and who had they applied for pension at any time since their discharge, and upon making due proof would have been entitled to receive it. If this measure (the arrears-of-pension bill) becomes a law soldiers will make application after the lapse of this great length of time, a lapse of time which, as we all know, results in very greatly increased difficulty in the establishment of their claims by the necessary proof. The witnesses are dead, the documents are destroyed, and by reason of the lapse of time in the public mind and in the mind of the adjudicator there grows up an impression that the claim being stale may not be just. So that suffering under all these presumptions, lapse of time and otherwise, the soldier nevertheless finally makes out his case against an adverse adjudicator, against the Government which is to pay the money, and the judgment is rendered by the Government or its officers against itself. Finally, under all these increased difficulties the claim is allowed, and in the allowance of the claim what has been established? The primary fact established under all these increased difficulties is that the man contracted the disability while in the service and line of duty, that he has had all this time the right to a pension, not that he has failed to assert the right because he did not possess it, and by reason of the lapse of time he hopes to impose upon the authorities of the Government, and to obtain an adjudication by perjury and fraud. It is not that, but in spite of all these adverse conditions he has finally obtained a verdict by the Government against itself.

Why, under these circumstances, should the Government come in and say that because this man who the Governments admits had a right all the while to pension has not claimed it, so that the Government has had during all these years the use of his money—why, I say, should the Government be heard to say that this man shall be deprived of the principal as well as the interest which he has already given to the Government?

Such, sir, is the argument as it strikes my mind, and the whole question is with me remitted to this: It is one of choice, of discrimination among many worthy claimants or different classes of claimants, and the question of the enactment of such a law is to be decided not with reference to the obligation of the Government but rather to its ability at the time to pay. If there is to be any discrimination, if there is to be any question as to whether the soldier who has a just or equitable claim upon the Government for compensation is to be paid or not, if there is any question of that kind then it us for us to say who should be paid first, and where would be the greatest hardship if we fail to adjudicate favorably upon all the claims which may rightfully exist.

It is only in that light that any collision can possibly, in my mind at least, arise between those who claim under the proposed arrears act against the Government and those who claim under such an act as the committee has submitted to the Senate here and various other classes that I will not stop now to enumerate, because they relate to classes less numerous, and perhaps being partially provided for it is less important just now to discuss them.

Nearly all, in fact all, cases of necessity are provided for to some extent under existing law except those soldiers who, having rendered service and having contracted disability subsequent to their service without their own fault, are now poor and dependent and obliged to be assisted by somebody. The law does not reach their case, and yet as Senators will see those men having passed through their terms of service without wounds, without sickness, without disabilities which interfered with the discharge of their duty as soldiers, are the very men to whom the Government is under the greatest obligation for service actually received. The great mass of the men who will be benefited by the bill now under consideration are men who rendered one, two, three, four, and in some cases nearly five years of service, all the while on duty. They are the men who really put down the rebellion, rather than the men who died on the field or who were disabled. So that the actual service in the subjugation of the rebellion was not rendered even by the dead in battle, as it was rendered by the class who are embraced in the bill.

I do not wish to be too prolix upon this matter, and so I will approach the point suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] as to the amount of money that would be involved in the bill if it should become a law. But before I come to that I wish to mention another point that had escaped my mind. All through the country, especially in the northern part of the country, and it is to some extent so in the South, are to be found men who put down the rebellion, who served throughout their terms, but who did not contract disability or in whose case the disability did not appear during the term of service and who are now in want. They are suffering for lack of proper relief at the present time. They are becoming disabled; they are dependent upon their labor. Somebody has to assist them. It is a crying want to-day. Those who can establish their claims under the existing law are receiving pensions. The men to whom the arrears-of-pension act would apply are prosecuting their claims under existing law, or have already received them; they are either receiving or expecting soon to receive relief from the Government. Whether the Government owes them in equity or in law the arrears or not, they are for the time being provided for either in fact or in law, so they are not starving for help. They are not charges upon the charity of their friends or of the Grand Army or upon the ordinary pauper system of the various States. They are provided for against the exigency of hunger three times a day, of cold, and nakedness; but the men to whom this bill applies are not thus provided for.

If now it be claimed that the condition of the national finances is such that we can not spend the $250,000,000 which are necessary to meet the requirements of the proposed arrears act, and that we can not increase the pensions of the various classes which are now being paid under existing law, but who do not consider that their pensions are as much as their necessities require—if such be the condition of the public finances and the capacity of the nation to endure taxation, what can any man say if we enact this bill into law and by its provisions give to every man who is in need the support which he must necessarily receive from some source if we should deny it?

Many soldiers of the late war come to us with claims for a service pension. Senators may remember that in the last Congress, if I recollect aright, between eleven and twelve hundred posts of the Grand Army besought the Government to enact a service-pension law with reference to the soldiers of the war of 1861, the same as was being enacted for the soldiers of the Mexican war, the same that we did enact in 1871 for soldiers and their widows of the war of 1812, and as our fathers did for the soldiers and their widows of the Revolutionary war

There is a strong tendency and demand on the part of the soldier element of the country for a service pension, a service pension applicable to all the soldiers of the late war irrespective of want and of necessity, which every one must see presents an astounding aspect so far as public taxation is concerned. When this demand is made upon the American people by any class of men who served the Government, who protected our Treasury, who preserved to us the power of taxation and our form of national existence, when they make their demand upon us and we say to them we are not able to pay it, but that we will go further than we have hitherto gone and say that for the man who is in anything like actual need, who is disabled not by reason of his own fault or crime, who requires help from somebody, we will tax ourselves and furnish that aid to the extent of his necessity. When we say that, it seems to me that that will be met by the soldier element of the country with an admission that on the whole our proposition is fair, equitable, and just. When it can be demonstrated that the country is in a condition to pay further, to pay the arrears which, as I have undertaken to show, are a just claim upon the Government, let them be paid. If we can do so now let us do it now, but at all events let us take care of this class of meritorous claimants whose service was of the greatest importance and most valuable character, but who are now in actual want.

The bill undertakes to reach that class of soldiers. It also undertakes to provide for the dependent parents of soldiers who have died in the service. Those are the two leading features of the bill.

As to the cost which will be involved in the bill, that is very largely problematical. There are limits which we can fix, but whether it will be $20,000,000, $25,000,000, or $15,000,000 it is impossible for anybody to say. It may be more than $25,000,000, but there is some data and it is as available to one gentleman as to another. It is as available to us as it is to the Commissioner of Pensions.

From this data I think we can form a rational judgment. The late Commissioner of Pensions, in a communication to Congress made upon this subject, estimated the number of soldiers surviving at between 900,000 and 1,000,000. I think it is fair to assume that the number is not over 1,000,000. When we endeavor to ascertain how many would be embraced in the language of the bill, those who are disabled and who are dependent upon their manual labor for support, we are of course involved in great difficulty. I have satisfied my own mind that when we have eliminated those who are in good circumstance, when we have eliminated those who are already upon the pension-list, who are a quarter of a million, and when we eliminate those who are claiming pensions under existing law, and those not dependent, not in any want, under the provisions of this bill probably about one-fourth of the million would be able to establish their claims against the Government. I do not think it could at any one time possibly exceed that number, for it is to be considered that before a claim is allowed to be paid at all applications must be made, clerical force must be provided, facts must be proven, adjudications must take place, and the right be established. I think at no one time under the operations of the provisions of the bill would there be more than a quarter of a million of soldiers and others placed upon the pension-rolls. Possibly there might be more, but I think the probability is rather less than more. We are to consider that the pension-roll would be constantly diminishing, and there might be from time to time additions made to it, but with the uniform decrease in the future of the soldiers and their relatives I think there would never be more than a maximum of a quarter of a million.

If we can assume that to be substantially true, and I do so in my own reasonings upon the matter, I shall proceed to consider some other points in the case which bear upon the general question of the probable cost of this bill if it should become a law.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator in charge of the bill be kind enough to state before he proceeds to his next point whether he has made a calculation in accordance with his estimate of adding a quarter of a million to the pension-list, as to how much annually would be the appropriation needed hereafter to meet it?

Mr. BLAIR. That is what I am now approaching.

Mr. BROWN. We have lately increased the pensions by an act passed at this session.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not dealing with the increase to widows or to the soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. BROWN. I want to get at the entire amount of pension-money that we should have to appropriate, say next year, if we passed this bill, including those now on the roll and those who would be put on the roll under the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I will give the Senator the data on that point as I go on.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions contains a table which shows the rates per month at which invalid pensions are now being paid for disability to the various pensioners. There are of invalid soldiers now upon the roll 244,201 names. This statement is made up to June 30, 1885, the period covered by the Commissioner's report. There are 244,201 names in all. The table is as follows:

Statement showing number of pensioners at different monthly rates, on the pension-roll June 30, 1885.

Rates.	Number.	Rates.	Number.
At $1	1,260	At $18	1,598
At $1 to $2	1	At $18 to $20	153
At $2	26,134	At $20	1,328
At $2 to $4	3,976	At $20 to $24	116
At $4	60,268	At $24	15,020
At $4 to $6	2,629	At $24 to $30	342
At $6	34,639	At $30	7,927
At $6 to $8	1,729	At $30.75	3
At $8	44,775	At $31.25	135
At $8 to $10	1,806	At $31.25 to $36	2
At $10	9,297	At $36	36
At $10 to $12	612	At $37.50	64
At $12	15,480	At $37.50 to $40	2
At $12 to $14	1,184	At $40	14
At $14	3,413	At $40 to $50	11
At $14 to $15	38	At $50	834
At $15	1,849	At $72	930
At $15 to $16	15	At $75	1
At $16	4,488	At $100	1
At $16 to $17	44
At $17	2,019	Total	244,201
At $17 to $18	28

I was myself surprised, as I doubt not Senators will be on perusing this table, to find how comparatively few are being paid at the higher rates. I had an impression, and I doubt not others have had it, that a very large proportion of the list was being paid at the higher rates of pension.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator pardon me for asking one more question? Is that statement made up so as to include the additions made by the act passed at this session, for instance, increasing the widows' pension from $8 to $12 per month?

Mr. BLAIR. I stated that this was taken from the Commissioner's report and came down to June 30, 1885.

There is another point to which I will call the attention of the Senate. I am now leading on to a calculation and giving my reasons for what I believe will be the cost of this bill. The bill relates to soldiers who are to be pensioned in proportion to their disability. The table I read comprises the invalid soldiers, not the widows and dependent parents now upon the roll but those who are being paid according to disability; and the point of the table is to show even with these high rates possible, which may be up to $72, that a very large proportion of them are $24 and less and a very large proportion of them are even less than $8.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will pardon me. What I wanted to get at is an estimate as to the probable amount of pensions to be paid next year in the event this bill should become a law.

Mr. BLAIR. I will give it to the Senator before I get through. I am, in my slow, methodical but I think logical way, giving my reasons as I go along. I shall try to show the Senator, as near as I can, the additional amount which I think will be required should the bill become a law; and I will also give the Senator, from the reports, the other data for which he asks, if he will pardon me for doing it a little later.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly. I simply want to get at those facts.

Mr. BLAIR. I have the data here, and will furnish all the evidence I can in that direction.

Of the 244,000 invalid soldiers whose names are now on the roll all of them, with the exception of 10,302, are at the present time drawing a pension at the rate of $24 or less. The first section of the bill which relates to soldiers provides that under its terms no more than $24 shall be allowed for a case of total helplessness, which is a case that under the existing law will entitle the soldier to receive a pension at the rate of $72 per month; and I ask Senators to note this almost fundamental feature of the bill, which so very largely limits the possibilities of the expenditure under its terms.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator says that under the present law a person receives $72 for total helplessness. I wish to inquire of him if he is sufficiently accurate in that respect? As I understand it, those who were pensioned for such total helplessness as required the attendance of another person prior to June 16, 1880, get it, while those who have been pensioned from the same cause since only get $50 a month.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is correct in regard to that. A bill is pending to remedy that defect; but my point is still the same. The highest pension which can be paid under the existing law is $72 per month, and the great mass of soldiers pensioned receive $24 or less. That is the highest sum which this bill proposes to pay in any case whatever, for the reason that the disability may not have been contracted in the service. The chief object of the bill is like that of the Revolutionary pension act of 1818, to provide for those who must be provided for by somebody, and who should be chargeable upon the nation at large, which has received their service, if upon any one.

Deducting, then, that 10,302 it leaves about 234,000 invalid soldiers, whose rating is $24 or less. There are 15,020 at the rate of $24, and at various sums exceeding $8 and up to $24 there are 43,468. There are between $12 and $24, 16,293. There are between $8 and $12, 11,715, and there are at exactly $12 15,480. Then at $8 there are almost 45,000; at $6, almost 35,000; at $4 there are 60,000; at $2 there are 26,000, and at $1 there are 1,260. These ratings are all made upon the examination of a medical board of the country, and even upon existing ratings for disability the great mass are at $8 and below that. There are 60,000 at the rate of $4, and 26,000 at the rate of $2.

This bill provides for cases of total helplessness—which is of course a condition requiring the attendance of one or more persons, an absolute incapacity not only to perform manual labor, but a condition requiring medical attendance and other attendance, one of continual and great expense—only the sum of $24. The rate is by the terms of the bill to be fixed according to the proportion of disability, from total helplessness down; so that it will be seen that under the operations of the bill if it becomes a law the great mass of allowances to the soldiers would be $8 a month or less. If we may assume that there are one-fourth of a million of soldiers who would be provided for under the terms of the bill, and also assume this to be a calculation quite in the direction of a too heavy expenditure under the bill, not one calculated to impose upon the public by a false estimate of the smallness of the expenditure—if we should, I say, make the calculation in the way I now indicate, I think it would be at least just to the Treasury.

If we should say of the two hundred and fifty thousand that one hundred and twenty-five thousand be rated at $4 per month, the yearly expenditure would be $6,000,000; if fifty thousand at $8 a month, there would be an addition of $4,800,000; if fifty thousand at $10 a month, there would be $6,000,000; averaging all between $10 a month and $24—if experience of the Department can be any guide to us, there will be at $12 per month, $3,600,000, which would make the total actual yearly expenditure under this clause of the bill $20,400,000, which I believe would cover it all.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask upon what data he estimates for a quarter of a million of persons under the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill would only bring pensions to those who are unable to get pensions, although disabled?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. We have not over a quarter of a million of disabled men who were wounded, sick, and discharged from hospital and everything else as pensioners, and I do not think there is any reason to believe that there would be any more than half the number stated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. A great many think as the Senator does.

Mr. LOGAN. The men whose applications for pensions have been rejected because they could not prove that they became incapacitated on account of disease contracted in the service would come under the bill; and men who have become disabled since the war would come under the bill. Those are the only two classes.

Mr. BLAIR. That is all very true, and I remember an estimate made by the former Commissioner of Pensions, to which I shall refer.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think it would be half the number mentioned. That is only my judgment, of course, but I do not believe there would be.

Mr. BLAIR. I remember an estimate, I am not sure that it reached the Senate in an official form, but an estimate which was attributed to the late Commissioner of Pensions, to the effect that this provision as found in the former bill would not require an expenditure of over $12,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That is what I understood.

Mr. BLAIR. So far as the observations of the Senator from Illinois are concerned, his knowledge of the condition of the soldiery of the country is better than mine. I would be especially anxious that no misrepresentation should be made to the Senate or to the country as to the probable expenditure under the bill, and I have endeavored to make these calculations as I think in excess of what would be actually called for should it become a law.

But this is to be considered, that the disability which I think is fairly covered by the bill is not merely one resulting from accident or from actual disease. It would cover a disability which grows out of or results from increasing age, or from hardship and exposure, by reason of which a man hitherto able to do his full day's work is able only to perform a lesser amount. Being dependent upon his manual labor for support, if he can now perform only three-fourths of a day's work, although there may be no positive disease about him and although there may be no loss of limb or severe physical injury, he ought under a fair construction of the bill, if it should become a law, to be allowed by the examining board for that diminution of his capacity to do the work whereby he gets his living.

If he may do but three-fourths of a day's work his wages are diminished one-fourth, and he ought to be allowed one-fourth of the pension, I should say, which would be $6 a month. Perhaps that would not be a proper estimate, but it should be such an adjudication in reference to the degree of total helplessness, which is $24 a month, as may be just and fair under the law. I believe that the amount which I estimate, $20,000,000, is all the expenditure which the country will be subjected to under the provisions of the bill.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] suggests that there will be a large percentage falling off every year. That is true, but at the same time others will be growing older and more enfeebled, and for some years to come at least these will be placed upon the roll. There is not a very large number, I suppose, that is, large in proportion to the million of the surviving soldiers of the war of 1861 who are absolutely and wholly dependent upon their manual labor for support, but still there is a large number when you speak absolutely, and I should not be surprised if all the beneficiaries under this measure came to the number I have mentioned.

The law will reach another class that perhaps the Senator from Illinois did not in his own calculation embrace. It will give to all the men who have really a disability contracted in the service but who have been unable to establish their claims, whose cases are now lingering and have lingered some of them for ten or fifteen years, the option of abandoning their existing application and making a new one under the bill. Of course the remedy under this measure is slight to what many of them would receive if they were able to establish their claims by obtaining the proof under existing law, but no doubt many men discouraged and heart-broken and in absolute want will abandon the apparently hopeless chase of their rights through the existing forms of procedure and embrace the provisions of this act, for under the provisions of this act it will only be necessary to establish the service, the honorable discharge and the actual disability existing at the present time, without fault on the part of the applicant, together with dependence upon his manual labor or the charitable contributions of others for assistance.

The other provision of the bill which relates to dependent parents will give to all parents a pension who lost their sons in the service and who are now dependent upon the contributions of others who are not legally bound for their support, whether they were thus dependent at the time when the child sacrificed his life in the service of the country or not. It will be remembered by the Senate that such is the law at the present time that the dependence upon the son must have existed at the time of his death. Otherwise, the parent is not entitled to receive the aid of the Government. It seems to me that this is a most inequitable condition of the law.

There are a great many cases all through the country of parents who sacrificed every son they had, those who were their only prospective means of support, but yet just at that particular time were not dependent upon them. They may have had property, or physical capacity to labor; they were able to take care of themselves, but who since have lost that physical capacity, and who by the misfortunes of life have also been deprived of their estates as well and are now in abject want, with old age fast upon them. Many of them are very old, and dependent upon the pauper systems of their States for the means of life. The bill proposes not to reach the case of any parent who can establish the claim under a former law, but to reach the case of a parent who is in actual need, who sacrificed her boy and has no means of present support. The amount which would be called for under that class is problematical, as in the other case, but the number of dependent parents in the country as shown by the existing pension-roll is comparatively very small. It is very much less than that of the widows of the soldiers of the country, and I do not look upon that feature of the bill as one very likely to burden the Treasury.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] made some inquiries as to the existing condition of pension expenditures as the roll now stands. I read from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions coming down to June 30, 1885:

> There were at the close of the year 345,125 pensioners, classified as follows: 241,456 Army invalids; 78,841 Army widows, minor children, and dependent relatives; 2,745 Navy invalids; 1,926 Navy widows, minor children, and dependent relatives; 2,945 survivors of the war of 1812, and 17,212 widows of those who served in that war.
> There were added to the roll during the year the names of 35,767 new pensioners, and the names of 1,835 whose pensions had been previously dropped were restored to the roll, making an aggregate of 37,602 pensioners added during the year. During the same period the names of 15,233 pensioners were dropped from the roll for various causes, leaving a net increase to the roll of 22,369.
>
> The average annual value of each pension at the close of the year is shown to be $110.36, and the aggregate annual value of all pensions is $38,090,985.28; an increase over like value for the previous year of $3,634,384.93.
> The amount paid for pensions during the year is $64,933,288.12; an increase in amount over the previous year of $8,024,690.52. It will be observed that the amount actually paid exceeds that of the annual value of pensions several millions of dollars, and this excess—

And this it is important to know—> and this excess represents the first payments of pension known as accrued in new pensions.

The first payment, of course, covers all the preceding time embraced in the application, and where the application was made prior to July 1, 1880, it reaches back to the date of the disability, which under existing law must have been contracted in the service, and covers all the time back to the war, unless it may be the case of a widow, whose pension commences at the termination of the primitive pension from which hers is derived—that is to say, her husband's—and in that case she draws back to the death of her husband. That is the reason why what the Commissioner calls the actual value of the pension-list is increasing. It is based upon the amount that is drawn from year to year by the law as it stands, and excludes this excess drawn in the form of arrears from the date of application or date of disability contracted in the service down to the issue of the certificate and first payment. The Commissioner of Pensions further states:

> The amount paid to 37,839 new pensioners during the year upon first payment was $27,115,912.21, and there remained in the hands of the several pension agents 3,677 of this class unpaid, in which there was due $2,243,567.54.

The Senator from Georgia will observe that the Commissioner says the entire payment the last year, that is to say the amount due and appropriation required to be made, which was the Senator's question, was $64,933,288. If the calculation which I have made, which as the Senator has seen I think I have endeavored to make honestly as large as it ought to be, is worth anything it would in its leading feature add to that $64,000,000 $20,000,000.

I do not think that the clause relating to dependent parents can amount to more than $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 at most, that is parents who may be added by reason of the enactment of this bill into a law should it be passed. Probably it would be less than $3,000,000, probably less than half that amount; but still, as I said before, no man can tell just how this will be any more than he can know how many people will die next year in this country. We can form some good estimate, a rational guess, so to speak, and we can fix outside limits beyond which it is quite apparent the amount will not go; but it is as impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to calculate with anything like mathematical accuracy as it is for any one of us.

In the last Congress when we called on the Commissioner of Pensions to make the calculation and give us the benefit of his judgment, he said he could not do it in a way to be held responsible, but he thought, as he made known in some way, I remember, that the amount would not exceed $12,000,000. During the discussion upon the Mexican pension bill in the last Congress in speaking of the probable or the maximum expenditure as it was in my mind under the proposed amendments which covered the disabled soldiers, the dependent parents, the widows, minor children, and some other classes, I said I thought the amount might be $50,000,000. I very likely estimated the sum too large. I had not then given the subject as much careful thought as I have done at the present Congress, and my estimate is very considerably diminished. I imagine that under this bill if it becomes a law the increased expenses of the country in the way of pensions would be probably $25,000,000 a year, giving it in round numbers. I will detain the Senate but a little while longer, during which I wish to make a few general observations upon this subject.

The true object of the art of war is the defense of nations and of society; that is to say, the true end of war is peace. Those who engage in it assume its dangers and hardships, not from any special interest which they have in the result, more than others of their countrymen, nor are they under greater obligations to risk their lives for the common good. One citizen is just as much interested as another in the preservation of law and order; that is to say, of life, liberty, and property, and to contribute of these last to secure the establishment of the former and the integrity and independence of the nation to which he belongs. Therefore, when for the common good, including of course his own, he renders a service, he becomes entitled to compensation from the whole body politic, of which he is a part, according to the degree of the service rendered or the nature of the injury suffered. Hence the laws of the land provide payment in wages and salaries for his time and labor, in camp and field, and pensions for wounds and disabilities contracted in the line of duty.

Recognizing that every man is the special defense and support of his parents, his wife, and his children, the state, for whose defense he is called upon to risk the sacrifice of them all, assumes by law and necessity the discharge of these natural obligations of the individual, in so far as he shall be rendered unable to fulfill them. Thus it is seen that pensions themselves are but the payment or discharge of an orginal obligation which the soldier, as a member of society, was bound to perform to himself or those who were dependent upon him, but which society assumes in order that he may render a still higher service by the devotion of his life even for the defense of all.

True, it may be said, and is said, that pensions are a gift, and that they may be conferred, revoked, or wholly refused, even after service rendered and disability contracted, while the law expressly provided for them; but no one can seriously claim this, save upon the ground that if the nation becomes too poor to carry the burden of taxation, then the obligation may be repudiated; just as in like case the individual is discharged in bankruptcy so the state may refuse from necessity to pay its debts. The pensions for which the nation provides, and which are so many of them still withheld through inadequacy of required proof, or imperfection in the laws or in their administration, are the natural and legal right of the disabled soldier, when surviving, or of his dependent relatives when for the common defense he has died. Any other doctrine, by whatsoever authority advanced, is a repudiation of the fundamental principles of natural justice, and is subversive of the true interests of society.

The claimant of such pensions is not a beggar; he is a creditor, and should be a preferred creditor of the nation. He holds the bond of his country written in his own blood. He demands a right, and to him is due the performance of a sacred obligation, and not a gratuity. And as it is the duty of the debtor to find and to pay his creditor, and not to put the creditor to endless and ruinous loss to establish his claim by interminable suits at law, so it is the duty of the state itself, at its own expense, to ascertain and to meet at once all just claims for pensions, or at least to provide every facility for their adjustment, and to pay the costs when the claim is delayed in the process of adjudication.

It is the duty of the Government to ascertain and to pay the pension to the soldier just as much as it is to ascertain and to pay his wages while in the field. It is a practical denial of his right to throw obstacles in his way by interposing trivial or technical objections, or by depriving him of the right to employ competent counsel and assistance, in refusing fair remuneration for services necessarily performed in order to establish his claim.

The denial of the right to pay a reasonable compensation to counsel is a denial of the right to emply counsel, and the greatest evils and grievances under which the applicants for pensions have suffered and continue to suffer, the worst horrors of the "pension tragedy," as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] once so strikingly said, have grown out of the denial by the Government (denied to no other litigant, but rather protected by the most sacred provisions of the laws) to employ and pay a reasonable price for competent and honest counsel and assistance in the establishment of his claim. Hence the business has passed beyond the scrutiny of the community where public opinion can be brought to bear upon the merits of each particular case and upon the action of those who may be engaged in its prosecution.

Too often dishonest or incompetent men defraud both Government and claimant, or life is worn out in heart-crushing, deadly delays. The upright and competent home counselor is the soldier's best friend, and of the Government also; but such has been the law, enacted from the best of motives, that unless his services were nearly gratuitous, which as a rule he was unable to make them, the home counselor could not be employed at all.

The dishonest and incompetent claim agent has been the consequence of the law. The chief evils of the system—the concentration of the business in great centers and the innumerable delays and frauds and failures, of which the applicant has reason to complain, and which constitute the most terrible and pathetic chapter in real life of which I have any knowledge—are in my deliberate judgment principally chargeable upon two things: The denial of the right to employ counsel by the denial of the right to pay for skillful service, and the failure to provide a proper tribunal to try the facts where the party lives in as close analogy as possible to the provisions of the common law in all those cases where, after a fair inquiry at its own expense, the Government sees fit to litigate the case as one of substantial doubt. In both these directions great and radical changes should be made in our system of pension administration.

The Government, as the result of much effort and as a partial concession to urgent demands for legislation which should place upon the nation the burden of ascertaining its debt at its own expense, has instituted the order of special agents, who accomplish great good in pending and long delayed cases by investigations on the spot where the evidence and the party are to be found; but the system is very imperfect and inadequate, and there is as yet no provision made by which a poor and honest claimant can obtain an informal investigation into the validity of his claim, such as would in most cases be sufficient at once for its decision, without compelling him to resort to the elaborate chancery of the system now in force.

Under a proper system of informal preliminary investigation by a competent person, instituted upon application made by the soldier or his dependent relative, or, better still, in advance of any application by the Government itself, I believe that a great majority of the worthy cases throughout the country could be disposed of within a year. Such facilities exist for obtaining reliable information by inquiry of reputable citizens of the vicinity, of the Grand Army, and in all such ways as enable business men to obtain the evidence upon which they act in their important affairs, that the Government would be in no serious danger of imposition or mistake; and even if there should be an occasional wrong it is better that the whole people should lose a little until discovery furnishes a remedy by suspension, rather than this national crime of non-payment of just pension claims should be prolonged until they are settled by death.

In our form of government it is sometimes difficult properly to apportion the burdens of taxation among the people who are at the same time citizens of the nation and of the States, but there can be no doubt of the general proposition that the expenses and disabilities resulting from a war for the preservation of the nation should be borne by the nation. This principle has been fully recognized by the Government hitherto in the payment of wages, pensions, bounties, and the like, and the assumption of many of the expenses of the States in the raising, equipment, and transportation of troops to and from the seat of war. The nation has gone still further by the appropriation of the public money in special recognition of glorious actions on land and sea, and for all services even for very brief periods of time in great emergencies of national life. Millions are even now yearly paid to the surviving soldiers and their widows of the war of 1812, which ended seventy years ago, and this regardless of any disability contracted in the service and of any necessity of pecuniary assistance to the recipient.

Whatever rewards distinguished and dangerous public service tends to promote patriotism and just pride in the preservation and greatness of the country. It is wise to teach the coming generations that this Republic is not ungrateful and that our glorious institutions are worth struggling and dying for. Ancient as well as modern nations have found it both necessary and noble to build monuments and expend the public treasure in the commemoration of valor and virtue that the memory and manifestation thereof might not fail from the earth.

But it is evident, on the other hand, that every man owes something himself to the institutions and laws which he finds already provided for him at his entrance upon life, and upon the preservation of which he is dependent, the soldier as well as others, for all that separates him from destruction or the savage state. Therefore it is that the nation as a whole must not be held as matter of right to pay for mere glory, for service pensions or monuments, any further than it may deem to be consistent with the condition of the public revenues and the ability of the people to endure taxation for other necessities of the public service.

A service-pension bill, when providing only for the survivors of war, regardless of disability or necessity, has been opposed by men who, like myself, believe that the nation can not afford to pay money where there is no want of money and no disability contracted in the service; but we have always sought to amend it so as to give pensions to all, and only to those who really required help in order to relieve them from the hardships of labor, and to give them in honor the comforts of life. For a Mexican pension bill like this I have always striven, and no man can, I think, after due consideration, say that the laboring masses of this country, who bear chiefly its public burdens, can be justly called upon to pay pensions to those who are not in need and would only add them to an already overflowing bank account.

Besides, the principle, if admitted at all, must of necessity be applied at once, or very soon, to the men of wealth and fortune who served in the war for the Union, and to those connected with them. Under such a law, I believe that at least a million of names would sooner or later, most of them at once, become entitled to be placed upon the pension-roll. Such a law would increase the public burdens not less than $100,000,000 a year, and would be liable to break down greatly the whole system of pensions, those for disabilities with the rest. In my judgment no wise friend of the soldiers and of their dependent relatives can labor to promote the passage of such a law.

In addition to pensions for disabilities contracted in the service, pay to every soldier, who, after any considerable period of actual service or liability to service, was honorably discharged, or deserved to have been honorably discharged, and to his dependent parent, widow, and child, whether he was disabled in the service or not, an honorable pension according to disability and need, not the result of his own folly or wrong, and to none else. Less than this justice will not withhold; more than this she can not give. Public duty and national honor demand only this; nothing less nor more. Of the ability of the nation to pay what by this rule justice requires there is no dispute, nor of the further fact that national taxation falling so largely upon luxuries is much more easily borne than that imposed by the States or voluntary contributions from sources which now supply the wants of soldiers and their dependent friends.

The question whether assistance shall be given in the form of pensions to those soldiers and their dependent relations who are in need of relief is only the question who shall bear the pecuniary burden. Shall the soldier suffer for the want of relief? Can his friends and relatives, generally as poor as himself, provide for it? Shall the uncertain charity of the community be depended upon to supply this constant and ever-increasing demand? Will you turn over the soldier to the tender care of the pauper systems of the States? Shall the Grand Army, composed so largely of the very men who by reason of advancing age and decreasing productive powers require the aid, continue to tax themselves to support each other? The Grand Army can not much longer march under its increasing load. I believe that as many soldiers with their dependent relatives are to-day receiving aid from these various sources or suffering for the want of the common comforts of life as are now assisted by pensions from the nation.

The burden exists; the want is a great fact, and is manifested in the form of deprivation and suffering, or it is met by the sacrifice and charity of individuals and communities—by the pauper system of the State or by the Grand Army of the Republic which has so largely hitherto performed the great work, and which, in the nature of things, it becomes, with every passing year, less and less able to carry on.

The question proposed to the country by this bill, in behalf of the soldiers of the war for the Union, is this: Shall the nation, which, as a nation, received the benefit of their services and sacrifice, and which by reason thereof, with all her unbounded resources, exists to-day—shall the nation, as a nation, perform this great duty which is not now performed, and which must be performed by somebody in some way, or untold suffering is to follow, because it is left undone—shall this rich nation take care of the preservers of its own life? That is the question. It must be answered. Inaction is the worst answer, for it paralyzes all other sources of help. It grows more pressing every day.

Once the American Senate has answered "yes."

What shall be its reply to-day?

I wish, Mr. President, to add one or two things more. I have here quite a list of letters, which I selected from a great mass, and which, if there is no objection, I will ask leave to have printed in the RECORD that Senators may examine them. They are not numerous. They are rather specimens of a mass of others received, and they tell the story, the need from the standpoint of the soldier himself. I think, as evidence coming here from the people themselves whose rights and interests are concerned in this bill; the Senate will find it worth while to examine them as they will find them in the RECORD:

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., April 27, 1886.

SIR: I trust you will pardon the liberty I take in asking if the bill presented in Congress this session, granting pensions to the dependent parents of the soldiers of the rebellion, has been passed?

I am a dependent mother—widowed and dependent. My only son, on whom I depended for help and support in my declining years, volunteered, on the President's first call, April, 1861, and went with the Hawkins Zouaves; first lieutenant, Company A, Ninth Regiment; promoted after to be captain Company G, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteers; was wounded at battle of Antietam; served his time, and was honorably discharged, and returned with health broken down; died 1868.

I am now nearly sixty-nine years of age, and unable longer to work for my own maintenance, and am therefore entirely dependent.

Will you please let me know if there is a law granting me a pension, and oblige,

Yours, respectfully,

MRS. S. WILLITS.

Senator BLAIR, Senate, at Washington, D. C.

LAWRENCE, KANS., January 5, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Would like to call your attention to the fact that there are thousands of soldiers of the late war who have become disabled since their discharge by diseases contracted through exposure while in the service who have no proof of such disabilities being contracted in service. All have alike placed their life and health in jeopardy, and it seems to me that this Government is under as many obligations to provide for the necessaries of life for him who has become disabled since the expiration of his term of service as though such disability had been received while in actual service.

I would, therefore, respectfully ask of you to give this a careful thought, and if, in your opinion, it is an act of justice that you introduce a bill to pension all disabled soldiers no matter when such disabilities were received, pension to date from date of such disabilities, and that you endeavor that it become a law at the earliest convenience.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. EBERHARD.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS.

RINSE BANK, CONN., April 17, 1886.

SIR: Why do they not pass a pension bill so that all soldiers can get something? You take nine out of ten that get a pension, they are able to work, and there is thousands that can't work or have not been able to work since the war that can not get a pension no way they can fix it. I know of several men that are entirely disabled, and have been ever since the war, and because they are poor they keep them out of it. One fellow in particular, and he served all through the war and he has spent quite a lot of money to go and be examined and everything. No favorable, and he waited three years and heard nothing from it until some friend took hold of it and they found the papers had never been sent on to Washington. I served three years and ten months. If they would pass a law so that each soldier could get a little it would be the right way to do business. Give them $5 from the close of the war, if nothing more. I would be satisfied with 75 cents this morning; that would feed me for one day.

Please answer this in some way, if you do not send more than a blank piece of paper.

Yours, with respect,

WM. W. WILBER,
Stamford, Conn.

Mr. BLAIR.

SWINTON, OHIO, March 26, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Please have the pension bill that you reported passed as soon as possible. Please call it in morning hour of the Senate Monday morning next, without fail. This is the kind of a bill that ought to have been passed a long time ago. It is a shame and disgrace that twenty-three years after the war has closed thousands of soldiers have to go to the poor-house just because they can not comply with the red tape of the Pension Office requirements under the existing laws. Do not fail to press this bill at once, and please make this move on Monday morning without fail, as this is the most important bill before the Senate, I think, and should be passed at once, as no time is to be wasted if you want this bill to become a law.

Very respectfully, a friend of the soldiers,

JAMES M. CURTIS.

Hon. Senator BLAIR.

ELROY, WIS., March 26, 1886.

DEAR SENATOR: Your endeavor to recognize the services of men who during the civil war were there and who afterward through accident became crippled is indeed a meritorious one.

I have been a cripple since three years after the war, and am hobbling through the world with all the disadvantages that would have obtained had I met with the loss (a leg) during my three years of service.

I only see one thing in the bill that I feel is wrong. I think pension should date from disability instead of application because other pensions do, and if this act is just now it would have been just at the end of the war.

There is but a handful of us that the act will benefit, and no one could object to dating from disability because of cost to Government.

Your obedient servant,

T. P. WENTWORTH,
Lt. Company H, Twenty-first Wisconsin Volunteers.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR.

I served about four years in the late war, and although my clothing was cut and skin burned many times by the rebel bullets, yet I received no wound that would entitle me to a pension; and I had also served one and a half years in the Mexican war with like results; and when discharged from the late war my health was completely broken down. I am now sixty years of age and not able to work at anything. For the last fifteen years I have held the post-office at this place, to which I emigrated soon after the war. The office, together with a few goods to sell, has made me a living; but now in my old age to come under the Democratic ban of offensive partisanship and have to step out, and not able to work, I very naturally look to you, &c.

J. M. WADDELL,
Ex-Postmaster, Deerfield, Mo.

EXPOSITION BOULEVARD, NEW ORLEANS, LA., April 22, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been watching with interest your efforts in behalf of invalid soldiers. I belong to that class who made "no hospital record." Although sometimes sick and racked with pain I was too stubborn to report on sick-list or to be taken to the hospital. I have suffered from rheumatism since 1863. Served in the Fourteenth and One hundredth Ohio Infantry from April, 1861, to July, 1865. Have been practically helpless since 1876, and unable to walk a step in thirty months; legs and arms are bent badly; hands and feet crippled. Applied for pension No. 506631, Now stand rejected.

I have no means of support, and rather die than have to ask for private aid, when my Government should care for all such as I. Have written to Senators Collum and Conger, also several members of the House.

Curtis & Burdett, Washington, D. C., are my attorneys. Thanking you kindly for your aid, I am, dear sir, fraternally yours,

JOHN EASTWOOD.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C.

Senator BLAIR:

DEAR SIR: In the pension bills before Congress is there any provision for the aged and widowed mothers of soldiers and sailors of the late war who left orphan children?

I have no doubt there were many parents left entirely destitute by the death of their son, because there was a widow or children to come before them.

I think such were entitled to some consideration. There was no help for such but the alms-house or the charity of friends that took compassion on their condition. I know of one case where the only son and only support of his aged and widowed mother was killed. She was left entirely destitute at seventy years of age. There has been nothing provided for her because there were two orphan children to draw the pension allowed by the Government, which expired in 1869. That aged mother has been cared for and supported by an unmarried daughter, who has had to labor for a support for both her mother and herself. The mother is now over ninety years of age; her daughter far advanced in life and in broken health. I do not believe this a singular case; there are many such, and I think our Government that has been so liberal to those who lost by the war should not forget such cases as I have stated. If the laws do not provide for such mothers, could a pension be allowed by special application to Congress? If it can, please reply, and direct what course to pursue.

Very respectfully,

Miss FRASER.

MARION, WAYNE COUNTY, NEW YORK, April 22, 1886.

PORTLAND, OREG., February 2, 1886.

SIR: Soldiers of our late civil war, who served three years and were then honorably discharged, and veteran volunteers who were honorably discharged at the close of the war, now have great difficulty in obtaining a pension, though according to law entitled to one, especially if their regimental surgeons are dead, and many of them now are. These soldiers have not the advantage of their disabilities being recorded on the rolls and returns of their respective companies, as those that were discharged for disability have.

Congress should grant them some relief, even if all who served three years or more in the Army and Navy during the civil war should receive a pension. Are they not as deserving as any whom it is now proposed that Congress should help?

Veteran volunteers who were promoted from the ranks lost all of their bounty not then due, and if one of them now receives a pension for a wound received prior to his promotion, it is as an enlisted man; thus, where a part of his bounty could be withheld he was an officer, and when his pension can be diminished he is an enlisted man. Is that right?

Respectfully,

WILLIAM S. McCREADY,
Veteran Eleventh Wisconsin Infantry.

Hon. HENRY W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C., United States Senate.

SWANZEY, N. H., April 16, A. D. 1886.

DEAR SIR: Five years have now elapsed since I applied for a pension for disabilities contracted while in the war of 1860-'65. I have proven all that I have been requested to. I enlisted by the name of William Baxter, my right name is David S. Aldrich. I have not seen a member of my regiment or company since our discharge on July 11, 1865, but have procured evidence of two of my comrades, enlisted men, and also the first sergeant of said company.

P. S.—My proof what I have furnished has been strong indeed. I have requested the Commissioner to favor me with a reply in regard to a letter I sent some four weeks ago for more evidence, if required to furnish more, in order to facilitate an early settlement, for I am poor and not able to do a day's work.

P. S.—DEAR SIR: My last evidence sent to the Pension Office and called for in regard to identity from the first sergeant of my company.

P. S.—I can not find a commissioned officer or addresses of them. I have been advised by friends [to] apply to you, dear sir, as being a soldier's friend, and would assist them. I am sorely in need of the pension of which I am justly entitled. And now, dear sir, I should esteem it with feelings of everlasting gratitude and kindness to favor me in this.

Yours, very truly,

DAVID S. ALDBICH, alias WILLIAM BAXTER,
Swanzey, N. H., P. O. box 78.

To the honorable Senator H. W. BLAIR,
Washington, D. C.

[Extract from a newspaper.]

And now yet another pension bill has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, namely, to increase the pensions of all those who lost a limb below the elbow or knee to $30 per month; above the elbow or knee, $36; and at the shoulder or hip joints, $45 per month.

First came the "widdies," bless their hearts, for an increase from $8 to $12, and now come the armless and legless legion for their increase.

And just here a thought strikes me. Is a soldier who perhaps has lost an arm or a leg really much worse in regard to helplessness than one who lost his former robust health while wearing the blue and has been lingering in suffering and misery for the past twenty years with perhaps the chronic diarrhea, dysentery, piles, the various forms of rheumatism, &c.?

To the man minus an arm or leg many avenues of employment are open, provided his general health is good, and many a one now receiving a good round pension has besides been earning large salaries as book-keeper, clerk, salesman, &c.

But who wants the utterly broken-down old soldier, who, with tottering steps and trembling tongue, asks for employment? Who wants him? No one.

There are hundreds—yes, thousands—to-day leading a cheerless and rayless life by reason of suffering through one of the many diseases contracted while in the service, who are mere wrecks of their former selves, and who are drawing but from $1 to $6 per month.

These men are not able to do a good day's work on account of their disabilities, and I have thought it would surely be in order not to overlook them, and if this increasing business still continues, why give them the benefit of it too.

The widows of the men who "fought, bled, and died" for our common country are a deserving class, but give the living husbands of some of the future widows "a show for their white alley."

If the soldier who now receives but $2, $4, or $5 per month dies from the effect of his disabilities, his widow will draw $12 per month. Consequently, why not now give the same to the old soldier while he is yet alive and kicking? He who did the fighting is surely entitled to as much from the Government while living as his widow would be entitled to at his death.

There is too much discrimination made in this granting of pensions. There is no equalization in the manner it is granted. While one man receives enough to keep him in comfort and above want, another, whose disability perhaps is much greater, gets barely enough to pay for a little medicine now and then.

I hope some of our Congressmen who are championing the soldiers' cause will think of this, and act upon it, and endeavor to procure for all soldiers entitled to it a more uniform pension.

Yours,

E. G. B.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator proceeds further——

Mr. BLAIR. I am nearly done.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will excuse me for asking him one more question. The Senator is remarkably well informed on the whole matter of pensions, I see. Has he data at hand which will enable him to state to the Senate how the pensions we already pay to the soldiers of the late war and the pensions proposed by the bill now in charge of the Senator compare with the pensions paid by the leading powers of Europe, say, for instance, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia?

Mr. BLAIR. I am not able to state the pensions which they pay. Great Britain provides a home for every soldier of her army. He is never permitted to want. As to the amount of money that may be given, I do not know. I have not data on that point; but in ancient and in modern times all great nations have cared for the soldiers upon whom their defense depended.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to state that I am willing to vote as liberally and to go as far in pensioning our soldiers as any other enlightened power on earth goes, and——

Mr. BLAIR. I trust the Senator would be even disposed to do more, because we value our institutions more highly than those of any foreign power.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator took the words out of my mouth. I was going to add that I was willing to go further than any other power had gone, but I think there ought to be some limit, that the burden on the tax-payer should be considered, and I want to get at the fact whether the limit should be here or where it should be.

Mr. BLAIR. This bill proposes no new idea. It stops this side of the Mexican pension bill, of which the Senator is a very earnest advocate.

Mr. BROWN. I am.

Mr. BLAIR. So am I. The Mexican pension bill enacted into law, as it is presented and agreed upon Congress after Congress, would have placed on the roll several millionaires, several men who were members of Congress, men who were in no more need of a pension than the railroad magnates of the country. In 1818, as long ago as that, our fathers, in their poverty-stricken and crippled condition, soon after the war of 1812, before prosperity had revived, and when they were hardly able to support their own families, enacted a law which gave a service pension to every officer and soldier of the Revolutionary war who was in need of help from his country.

Mr. HOAR. Thirty-five years after the war ended, was it not?

Mr. BLAIR. Thirty-four years—perhaps thirty-five; from 1783 to 1818 is a calculation easily made. In 1832, only fourteen years later, they gave a service pension like that proposed in the Mexican bill to all officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary war, irrespective of necessity, and their widows as well. That was a step beyond the provision of this bill, and this bill, the Senator will observe, stops a long way this side of the Mexican pension bill. It only undertakes to provide for those who must be provided for by somebody. It adds nothing to the public burden or to the burden of maintaining the soldier. Either his relatives or his friends, the local community, the pauper system of the State, or the great organization known as the Grand Army, which undertakes to care for every soldier having an honorable discharge who belongs to its membership—and others also as well—some of these agencies or private charity must afford this relief. This bill only steps in to furnish relief to him who is disabled to some extent to earn by manual labor his daily bread; it only proposes to give to him when he is dependent on that labor enough to make up the deficiency occasioned by his disability; that is all.

Here is no increase of expenditure. Just as much money comes out of the American people as a whole in one case as in the other, and the theory of the bill is that this man having rendered service, according to the way which I have endeavored to describe in the earlier part of what I had to say, shall be helped by the nation to which he has rendered this great service rather than fall back upon the unreliable resources which I have named.

Mr. BROWN. I call attention to the fact that the case as between the Mexican soldiers and the soldiers of the war for the Union is not exactly similar.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly not.

Mr. BROWN. The Mexican war had terminated twelve or fourteen years before the late war commenced, and the Mexican war soldiers, therefore, as a class, are a great deal older; and a great deal larger proportion of them are dead than of the Union soldiers.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. If it was as long a time since 1865 as since the Mexican war terminated there might be good reason for saying we ought to pension everybody who served in the Union Army.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not what this bill undertakes to say, and the Mexican pension bill does undertake to say just that, that everybody who served at all, irrespective of necessity, shall receive a pension. This bill only undertakes to discharge a burden from the national coffers that must be borne by somebody, and although the period of time is not quite as great as that which elapsed between the Revolutionary war and the legislation of 1818, nevertheless, when we take into consideration the relative ability of the nation in 1818 to make that contribution and the ability of the nation to-day, with overflowing coffers, to take care of these men, I think the Senate will admit that we are rather tardy in recognizing the obligation as compared with the action of our forefathers. I have no doubt the time will come—and I alluded to the danger that there may be pressure which will be difficult to resist, and it may come very soon—to place all the soldiers of the war for the Union on the same footing as it is proposed to place these of the Mexican war; that is, to give a service pension which will carry at least a million names onto the pension-list, whereas this bill proposes to place there only one-quarter of that number.

I think it is a conservative bill. I think it is a bill which might be favorably considered by our friends on the other side of the Chamber who will not at this late day claim that they received any less benefit from the efforts of the soldiers in the war for the Union than did we of the North. I think they will admit that the unity and integrity of the country which these men preserved to us all has been to them as great a benefaction as it has been to that section of the country where these men mainly live and whose army they constituted. I think this obligation is one that all Senators from all sections of the Union will be likely, upon reflection, to recognize, and I trust they will consider the bill as a conservative bill, for I assure Senators that it is not a difficult thing to surmise that in the kaleidoscopic condition of our politics the time is not remote when every department of this Government will be again in the control of the men who were dominant from 1861 to 1885. Should that be the case and taxation continue, as it must be imposed upon all parts of the country alike, they may find in the South as in the North that there is an increase of expenditure growing out of the fact that there is a general service-pension law providing for the expenditure of five or six hundred millions to commence with, and a permanent increase of one hundred and fifty or two hundred millions to the pension-roll with which the financiers of the country will be obliged to grapple from year to year.

But when you enact a law of this kind, to this demand you can say "we have by our legislation provided for every soldier who needs anything," and what has the soldier to say? Shall we tax the common people of the country, as poor many of them as the soldiers themselves, to give money to those who do not need it, whether they who bear such taxation were soldiers or not? That is the reply which might well be made. Many of them will be benefited under the Mexican bill to which I propose to make no more factious opposition; indeed I have never made factious opposition, but opposition based upon sound principles, of opposition to payment by taxation to any man not disabled in the service and who needs no help, but it has been pressed so much and so long that I am willing it shall go through as soon as it can be reached, according to the original terms, and then you have a service pension for Mexican-war soldiers. It is not worth fighting about any longer. Let them have it, though I think it is an abandonment of a great principle, and I am not yet willing to see that principle applied even to the soldiers who preserved the country in its integrity at present, because I do not believe that the national finances as yet could bear the strain.

I am willing to see the nation, as soon as it properly can, and immediately if it is able, undertake the payment of the arrears of pension, because that is a debt absolutely due, and by delaying it the country has benefited already very largely. But, as I said before, I do not believe that we can safely incur the danger of a service-pension law which would add a million names to the pension-list, not now at least, but the time will come after many of these men have passed away, when the gratitude of the country will do as it proposes now to do with the soldiers of the Mexican war, as it has already done with the soldiers of the war of 1812 and their widows, and as it did with our forefathers who took part in the grand Revolutionary struggle—give these men and their widows and dependent relatives, if there be any surviving, a service pension, but the time ought not to be yet, and this bill providing for an immediate necessity is in the interest of deferring that period to a more convenient season when the nation can better discharge the obligation.

In regard to the special acts in reference to which the Senate and Congress has been very greatly criticised, roughly, improperly, ignorantly, I wish to say one word. This bill, if it goes into operation, will take from the room of your Committee on Pensions and of the other House at least three-fourths of the cases that now absorb their attention. The controversies over those cases which come to our committee, very many of them originate in the Pension Office on account of failure of proof. They come to us because we are supposed to have a legislative equitable jurisdiction; and if the applicant produces on the whole the belief that his claim is just, although he may not be able to marshal the testimony which is required under the rules of law, we are expected to allow the claim, and we do it. But I assure any one who imagines to the contrary that every case is designed to be very thoroughly, carefully, patiently, impartially, and justly adjudicated, giving, as every humane man ought, to the soldier the benefit of the doubt where there is no evidence of fraud.

And considering the great mass of business that is pressed in upon us, I think those cases which come from your committee, and so far as I can judge from the statements of facts and general situation the environment of cases that come from the other House, they are as carefully adjudicated and decided as the ordinary verdicts of juries in our courts of law. And when after a careful inspection of a thousand of these cases it may be found that here and there is a mistake of an initial letter or a misspelling of a given name, or some other trivial accident may be discovered, I do not believe that is any general impeachment of the care and the justice with which these claims are decided. However that may be, a general law of this kind will remove the difficulty very largely.

I ought perhaps to apologize to the Senate for occupying so much more time than I had myself designed to, but this bill is an exceedingly important one. It is important not only with reference to the interests of those who are concerned in its provisions, but to the nation, and it is not wholly a matter of indifference with reference to the probable lessening of the future expenditures of the nation in this same direction. I say, as I have said several times before, it is a conservative bill, it is a bill which it would be well for Congress to enact. If they would save money let them do justice to the extent that the provisions of this bill require; better do it early, far better do it now.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate proposes to place upon the pension-rolls the names of all soldiers who served in the Union Army during the late war for the period of six months or longer, and who have from any cause become or may hereafter become disabled, and who are dependent upon their own labor for support. There is no report from the committee accompanying the bill. There is no estimate, so far as I am advised, of the number of soldiers now living and not drawing a pension from the Government. There is no estimate of the number that this bill, if it becomes a law, will add to the list.

There is no estimate of the additional cost per annum for which it will be necessary to provide. We are asked by the committee to vote with our eyes closed as it were for a bill that confessedly involves a vast outlay of money; but whether the sum required will be twenty-five or fifty millions of dollars annually, we do not know. Whether or not our present receipts will be sufficient to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government, the interest on the public debt, and meet the additional cost of this bill, or whether it will be necessary to levy additional taxes, we are not informed.

It is true that the Senator from New Hampshire has given us an estimate that in his judgment it will not cost exceeding $25,000,000 per annum, but he admits himself that that estimate is vague, indefinite, and not satisfactory to his own mind. He admits also that that does not include pensions for the widows and minor children of soldiers who have died from causes other than wounds or disease that they contracted during the war.

But, judging from the number who are drawing pensions on account of being disabled during the war, and by the time that has elapsed since the war closed, and considering the exposure to which they were subjected, I think it safe to say that within two years from the passage of this bill fully 95 per cent. of the surviving soldiers of the war will be able to prove that they are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and will be claiming a pension from the Government. I heard this morning one prominent Republican member of this body estimate that within one year 99 per cent. would be able to make this proof if this bill became a law.

From a petition to Congress by the Citizens and Soldiers' League I copy the following paragraph, which shows that the petitioners think all are disabled. The petition says:

> And that as it is a self-evident truth that all the Union soldiers are more or less disabled, either in the service or in consequence thereof, never recovering the full vigor which they once possessed, but will carry the effects of exposure and privation and malaria to their graves, we respectfully petition your honorable body to grant a pension of $8 a month to all honorably discharged United States soldiers and sailors of all wars who are not drawing a pension, commencing on the national anniversary, July 4, 1883.

It will be seen from this that they claim, and no doubt can prove, that all are more or less disabled. If it is the object and purpose of the committee to pension all, I submit that the better way would be to say so directly and specifically, and not make it necessary to incur the expense of a medical examination and subject the soldier to the inconvenience and expense of procuring witnesses to prove his disability when the result will be the same in either case. The question, then, which this bill presents for our consideration is, Are we prepared at this time to say that it is the duty of the Government to undertake the support of the surviving soldiers of the war? Is their claim for such consideration of a nature and character that it imposes upon the Government an obligation to assume its payment without regard to and without considering the means at our command to discharge it?

If this bill becomes a law I have no doubt, and I think the Senator from New Hampshire has no doubt, that it will speedily be followed by another bill giving to the widows and minor children of all deceased soldiers a pension, whether the disease from which they died was contracted in the service or otherwise; and I confess that I can see no argument in favor of this bill that will not apply with equal force to that; and if both are passed it is admitted that instead of lowering the taxes and reducing the amount of revenue collected by the Government, it will be necessary for the Ways and Means Committee of the House to determine what articles will bear an additional tax, or to provide for a loan and the issuance of new bonds.

Mr. President, no one denies that the soldiers who gallantly defended the flag in the hour of danger are entitled to the gratitude of the Government. No one, and least of all those who were arrayed against them in the late contest, would wish to deprive them of a single honor won by their valor, or in any way underrate their services to the country or seek to lessen the obligation that the people have always felt was due them. It may be admitted that the citizen who voluntarily enlisted in the Army, who endured the hardships and suffered the privations incident to a soldier's life, who fearlessly exposed his life upon the battlefield, and who quietly and peacefully returned to civil pursuits at the close of the war should be honored above his fellow-citizens; but it does not follow from this that every other obligation should be disregarded, and that we, out of gratitude to the soldier, should be unmindful of the rights and unjust to the claims of the vast number of people of this Republic who were not soldiers.

I submit that the condition of the country at this time is not so prosperous, that the taxes levied are not so low, that the demand for labor or the compensation paid therefor is not so great as to justify us in imposing upon the people in addition to the obligations now resting upon them the additional duty of supporting all soldiers who can bring witnesses to prove that they are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support. For the soldiers of America I entertain the greatest respect, their love for their country, their devotion to duty, their readiness to obey orders, to make sacrifices, to submit to privations, their cheerfulness and hopefulness in defeat, and their moderation in the hour of victory, are all worthy of the highest commendation; and it seems somewhat strange that men of their character and self-sacrificing disposition should demand of Congress the passage of a bill that involves an expenditure so great that the committee has declined to estimate the amount.

I do not like to believe that men so brave as those who composed the Union Army would wish to be dependent upon their fellow-citizens; that they would be willing to be relieved from daily labor and daily toil if thereby additional labor and greater toil should be imposed upon laboring men, upon their friends and neighbors, many thousands of whom find it already difficult to meet legitimate demands, and who are often sorely pressed to find support for themselves and the wife and children who look to them for bread. There is at this time a spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction abroad in the land that has no parallel in the past—a feeling in the minds of many that the times are out of joint, that the gap between capital and labor is rapidly widening; a belief that evil times are upon us; a fear that there are dangers and difficulties in the future that will require all the wisdom and patriotism of the American people to successfully meet. And this feeling can not be laid to rest, this belief can not be removed, and this fear can not be dissipated by a reckless and extravagant expenditure of the public moneys. Some other means must be adopted, some other plan devised to allay discontent, to adjust existing difficulties, and to restore confidence. That which would, as I firmly believe, go far toward securing peace and order in the future, that which would bring hope and confidence to the American people, that which would tend to protect and preserve our free institutions, would be an earnest effort upon our part to check extravagance in any department of the Government, and return as far as may be to that economy and simplicity in the conduct of public affairs which was the chief strength and beauty of our system in the earlier days of the Republic.

The nation has already shown gratitude and generosity to the soldier in a degree not equaled by any other nation. The amount paid for pensions to the 30th day of June, 1885, is reported to be the sum of $765,092,640.18. It is estimated that under the present laws we will have paid by June, 1887, $900,849,840.18. It is also estimated that the applications pending for pensions which will be allowed, the increase in the widows' pensions, and the private bills passed at the present session will swell the amount paid annually to $100,000,000.

Steadily and continuously, Congress by Congress and year by year, the amount has been increased. Democrats and Republicans, either from a sentiment of gratitude for services rendered the country by the soldier or from the less worthy motive of obtaining the soldier vote and the soldier influence, have disputed with each other who should be first to increase the number of soldiers drawing a pension from the Government, and first to increase the amount paid to each; and while this feeling has prevailed and legislation has been secured without difficulty for the soldiers of the late war, the claims of the soldiers of the Mexican war, those who so gallantly and successfully bore our flag forty years ago in a foreign land, have been ignored, neglected, or denied.

It seems to me, and I think a large portion of the American people are of the same opinion, that the time has come to call a halt. It seems to me that our duty to the great mass of toiling people requires us to put on the brakes; that we should not assume obligations which will force us to increase taxes or borrow money. If the Democratic party, which won the Presidency by so narrow a majority in 1884, hopes to retain power in this Government it will not be secured by increasing expenditures during the present administration.

When we go before the people we can not appeal to them to give us their support because we have expended many thousands of dollars in building monuments to departed statesman, however great their fame or patriotic the services they have rendered the country. Nor can we gain their confidence by showing that we have appropriated many thousands more in subsidizing American ships, building ship-railways, or cutting canals. Neither do I believe that we can base a claim for support upon the fact that we have passed three hundred pension bills in one day and have by the passage of this bill added twenty-five or fifty millions to the amount already paid for pensions.

I am afraid also that the people will be unable to fully appreciate the great benefit that has accrued to the country by sending a civil service commission from State to State to propound a number of questions to those who are ambitious of serving their country as clerks in the various Departments, many of these questions having no reference to or connection with the duties that the clerk is expected to perform. Nor is it at all probable that we can arouse the Democratic voters to any very high degree of enthusiasm by showing that a large proportion of the Federal offices are still in the possession of their Republican opponents.

But if we can truthfully state to them that we have made good our promises of 1884, that we have discharged all superfluous and supernumerary officers, that we have reduced all excessive and extravagant salaries, that we have been brave enough to disregard the charge of demagogue that is brought against any man who dares to raise his voice against extravagance in the expenditure of public moneys, and that we have given the people better government, at less cost to the country, than our Republican predecessors, I have no doubt that they will rally to our support and secure to us a long lease of power. Mr. President, the grave and serious objections to the passage of this bill at this time can not be answered by appealing to our sympathies; they can not be answered by picturing the veteran soldier, who rallied to the flag and saved the nation in her hour of danger, as utterly helpless and destitute, appealing in vain to his countrymen to save him from starvation or the poor-house. This bill means something more than providing for the helpless and destitute.

The words "disabled and dependent" are words of indefinite and expansive meaning when applied to proving or granting a pension claim. I think the Senator from New Hampshire will hardly deny that this bill practically opens the door to all surviving Union soldiers, and that it will be followed by one to pension the widows and minor children of all soldiers, whether the soldier died from disease contracted in the service or from any other cause. Nor do I believe that any large number of those soldiers are utterly helpless and destitute, as has been said. Men who were able to overcome the South and bring the war to a successful close were, as a rule, men of such energy and determination that they are able to take care of themselves, without calling upon the Government for aid. I judge them by my knowledge of their opponents in the contest.

The confederate soldiers of my State returned from the war in 1865 to find grass-grown and uncultivated fields, broken and ruined fences and lone chimneys marking the places that had once been peaceful and happy homes, and although the soldiers were without money and without credit, without stock and without farming implements, without aid from the Government or elsewhere, they bravely went to work to build up the waste places and if possible to regain their lost fortunes, and while I have often seen the soldier with but one arm and the soldier whose lost leg was supplied with one made of rough-hewn wood following the plow from day to day, I have never known a confederate soldier in Arkansas to beg for bread or become dependent upon the public. I know full well, Mr. President, that by many it is regarded as little less than treason for one who was engaged in the rebellion to vote or speak against granting any character of pensions that may be asked for Union soldiers, but if we as representatives of the States or the people either from fear of being assailed, denounced, and abused for our participation in the war, or from fear of arousing prejudices that may injure our political friends in certain States, refuse to oppose measures that we believe will be hurtful to the nation, or refuse to support measures that we believe will promote its prosperity, then we are not free and independent representatives, and are unworthy the confidence and support of the people of the free commonwealth whose commission we bear.

Acting upon this belief I oppose this bill not because of any hostility to the Union soldier, not because those with whom I fought and who suffered all that the Union soldier suffered with the bitterness of defeat in addition can not share in its benefits, not because I am not as loyal to the United States Government to-day, as proud of its past history and as anxious for its future glory and prosperity as the soldiers who followed Grant at Cold Harbor and into the trenches at Petersburg, but I oppose it because I believe the condition of the soldier does not demand it, that the condition of the country is such that its passage is unwise and that it would tend to increase the discontent already prevalent and which all patriotic and law-abiding citizens hope will soon pass away; because I believe that to make so large a body of men dependent upon the Government, instead of depending upon their own labor, their own skill, and their own energies, is demoralizing in its tendencies, discouraging to other citizens less fortunate, dangerous to the stability of the Republic, and contrary to the spirit and genius of a free government.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to indicate two or three amendments which I have already proposed to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed have not been definitely offered, though notice has been given. The Senator's amendments will be read. Where are they to come in?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In section 1, at the end of line 10, I move to add the words "to the extent of incapacity to perform labor," leaving out the word "manual," which is in the printed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to add:

To the extent of incapacity to perform labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to understand that. Does the Senator propose an amendment to his amendment or to the bill now?

M. VAN WYCK. To the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 10, section 1, it is proposed to add:

To the extent of incapacity to perform labor.

So as to read:

That every person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendments thereto, who served in the military or naval service, as mentioned in said section, for the period of six months during the war of the rebellion, and has an honorable discharge therefrom, and who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own gross carelessness, disreputable conduct, or vicious habits, to the extent of incapacity to perform labor, and shall also be dependent upon his own labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authority, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension during the continuance of such disability at a rate proportionate to the degree thereof; and such pension shall commence at the date of filing an application therefor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will now propose an amendment to the amendment, to insert "to earn his support by labor;" so as to read:

To the extent of incapacity to earn his support by labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can modify his amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. So that no question may arise as to what class of cases this should apply to. If the soldier is not able to earn his complete support by his labor, then he can be placed on the pension-roll, leaving out the question whether he could work a quarter of a day or a third of a day or now and then a day; but if his inability is such that he can not earn his support by his labor, then he is to be placed on the pension-roll.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill seems to me to require no amendment of that kind. The latter part of the section apportions the pension from $24 down, according to the degree of disability to perform manual labor, when the word "manual" is inserted on the top of the page as the Senator proposed the other day, and the degree of disability is not for us to settle, but it must be settled as in any other case by an examination under the rules of the Department. There are boards of surgeons all over the country to examine soldiers, to ascertain the degree of their disability. Just so the applicants for pension under this bill will receive their examinations, and for absolute helplessness may have as high as $24 and all the way down on the sliding scale to $1, according to the degree of disability. The less disability, the less money. I do not think the Senator wants that in there, for it is either meaningless or will have the effect of confusing the administration of the bill very much and do no good. If the Senator will insert his word "manual" between the words "own" and "labor," in line 11, then, with the proviso in the latter part of the section, with the examinations required, the administration of the bill would be perfect.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The force of this amendment will be seen when I come in a moment to another amendment to be passed. The object is to avoid the very thing which the Senator from New Hampshire properly says must follow, that is an examination or adjudication by the Pension Office of every case included within the bill proposed. If that be done then the force of this Pension Office must be doubled because every one of the new cases, whether they be 250,000 or 300,000 or 400,000, must come up before the Pension Office.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at Washington, however.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No matter where. The force of this Pension Office must be doubled.

Mr. BLAIR. Why so?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Because every case must be examined before it goes upon the pension-roll as to the amount of disability.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not the proposition of this bill to get two hundred and fifty thousand men on the pension-roll without an adjudication. In every case there must be an application, and the man must prove his case as in every other instance, and to settle the amount of disability there are boards all over the country. They can examine two men where they do one now without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The amount of disability must be examined. That is the point. My proposition by a subsequent amendment is to make this service pension, as I understand, the same as all other service pensions that are allowed.

Mr. BLAIR. This is not a service pension.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a pension depending on disability, and the question is whether disability was contracted in the service or out of the service. This dispenses with the adjudication of that question here, simply finds disability. If the man was a good soldier, honorably discharged, and is disabled now—and that is to be settled by a medical examination—he is to be entitled to pension according to disability; if total helplessness, $24, and so down to almost nothing, and that must be decided by the boards already provided.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The point of this bill, as I understand, is that every soldier who to-day is dependent upon his daily labor for his daily bread and who is disabled from labor shall be placed upon the pension-roll.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly, upon establishing those facts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It only differs from a service pension by requiring the two matters referred to, which form no part and no element of the pension laws as they now exist.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the only difference there is between the existing case under the present law and a service pension, save only this, that the disability which is provided for under existing law (which is not a service-pension law) must be a disability contracted in the service and in the line of duty. Now this bill proposes that, there being a disability which must be proven in these cases as well as under existing law, it is immaterial whether it was contracted in the service or out of the service. Then the applicant having alleged his disability, and proved his disability, the Department orders an examination to ascertain the degree thereof. No examination is made until the disability is proven, unless it is made to ascertain whether there is one or not, which is a medical question. Probably the first thing to be done would be to order an examination of the applicant by the local board. They report the man well, not disabled; that ends the case. They report that he is disabled and the degree of his disability for earning his living by manual labor, whether one-half, one-third, one-fourth, or one-sixth, and upon that report the office will make its adjudication. It is just like any other case dependent upon a disability and upon the further fact of dependence and need.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is a qualified service pension based upon the ground of the dependence of the pensioner principally. If he is not able to earn his daily bread by his daily labor, then we propose to give him a pension. To meet the argument which is urged that not as much time has elapsed since the close of the last war as elapsed from the war of the Revolution or the war of 1812 until those soldiers were placed on the pension-roll, these qualifying conditions about dependence and disability were interposed. It shocked the sentiment of this whole nation that a soldier who had followed his flag on the field should be either grinding an organ or vending peanuts on the street corners or seeking that meager bounty which is given by the charity laws of the State in which he lives, and therefore it was that it was deemed a burning shame and disgrace to the great American nation that its soldiers should be in that position.

Mr. BLAIR. They endured it fourteen years.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Only fourteen years!

Mr. BLAIR. They endured it from 1818 to 1832.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am speaking of the soldiers of the last war. They endured it. We have boasted of the generosity of this nation and of its Congress, and yet Congress has been in the past very careful to grant no service pension until the great majority of the Army had gone to join the great majority of mankind. That was the position toward the soldiers of the Revolution and the soldiers of the war of 1812, that the great majority of that army had gone down to the grave before the nation recognized and manifested its generosity to them; so in regard to the soldiers of the Mexican war. Even to this day we have refused to perform what the American nation have demanded at the hands of Congress, and place the soldiers of that war upon the pension-roll.

In order to simplify this discussion it was thought best to require the condition of dependence and disability without regard to disability in the service, and thus place a large class of deserving soldiers upon the pension-roll. I speak not now of the extent of the disability, for I say to my friend from New Hampshire that disability incurred in the service was a damage, it was an injury, for which the soldier had a complete claim under the law, and therefore if he had one arm off or a leg off it made a difference as to the extent of the pension to be given him.

I repeat that under this bill we propose to pension by reason of dependence and disability; and if we give a pension on account of dependence it matters not whether the soldier since the war has lost one arm or both arms, or one leg or both legs. The dependence is complete when he is unable to procure his subsistence by his labor, and that is the only point of the bill. If he is unable to procure his support by reason of his disability, no matter whether it be both arms or both legs of which he is deprived, no matter whether the disability be the rheumatism or the consumption or the asthma or whatever it may be, he is to have a pension.

The only point is, is the soldier able to procure his daily bread by his labor no matter what that labor may be? If it is the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire that this must be a matter of examination, the highest grade to be $24, I do not understand how much disability there must be to obtain the $24. I did not understand from the Senator. Does the bill say?

Mr. BLAIR. The bill says:

The highest rate of pension granted under this section, which shall be for total incapacity to perform any manual labor, shall be $24, which is hereby made divisible upon that basis for any less degree of disability.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; but if the man has both legs and both arms off, or one leg and one arm off, he gets $24. He can not possibly earn his living. Suppose another man has only his right arm off; is not that total incapacity? Is it not?

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose the Senator is a man of common sense. He need not appeal to me continually.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was appealing to my friend because he was a man of common sense.

Mr. BLAIR. It is unnecessary to put those questions to me.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would ask whether it is not total incapacity if a man has one arm off?

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator ask the question seriously?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes.

Mr. BLAIR. Not necessarily. A man might be able to do some work with one arm. Some kinds of work he might gain his living by. Many a man with one arm gets his living by labor of various kinds. But the Senator will observe in the bill that there is no disability which, under this bill, no matter how great it may be, can draw beyond the amount of $24 per month.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely.

Mr. BLAIR. If it were a case, as it might be in some instances, where there was an arm gone and the man might have no occupation he could work at but manual labor, the loss of an arm might disqualify that man absolutely from doing anything in the way of manual labor to get a living. I suppose that man probably would be entitled to the full amount under this bill. If he had lost both legs and his disability was not contracted in the service, he would be entitled under this bill to no more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely. The point is that total inability for labor comes if the man has one arm off as much as if he has both off, and he can not obtain more than $24 under this bill. If a man is sufficiently disabled to be totally incapacitated for labor, he is entitled to $24; and it makes no difference whether the two arms are off or the one arm is off. But suppose the man is disabled from asthma or consumption; that is total disability, as I understand, and he would be entitled to $24.

Mr. BLAIR. If there was total inability to perform manual labor, certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly. I suppose it was intended that no man should be a recipient under this bill unless he was unable by manual to obtain support. That is the reason I propose this amendment, and I do not care to say a word more, because I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] intended to speak on the merits of the bill proper. Therefore, with the consent of the Senator, I will continue some suggestions on the amendment at another time when they will be more properly in order, and he can take the floor on the merits of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to give notice of an amendment. I do not wish to address the Senate, but merely to give notice of an amendment I purpose to move, when it is in order, to strike out all after the word "own," in the tenth line, to the end of the line, as follows: "gross carelessness, disreputable conduct, or vicious habits," and substitute the word "fault." As it now stands it reads:

And who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own gross carelessness, disreputable conduct, or vicious habits.

If amended as I propose it will read:

And who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own fault.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that would be a very good amendment.

Mr. HOAR. As the bill goes over, as I presume it will, I should like to have the amendment printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, but before proceeding I wish to give notice that I shall at the proper time propose an amendment to this bill providing—

That all pensions heretofore granted under any previous act to any soldier shall, where less than $8 is or has been allowed, be increased to $8 per month, and no less amount shall be hereafter allowed to any pensioner being a soldier, under this or any previous act.

I only desire now to call the attention of the Senate to one or two remarks made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. First, he said that this bill was going far beyond anything that the people had anticipated, and that the soldiers who fought the war with Mexico and gained our victories there had been for forty years neglected, while the Union soldier had called to him support from all quarters of the country to put him on the pension-roll.

That assertion was made without due consideration. There is not on the statute-books to-day a law allowing a pension to a Union soldier whose provisions a Mexican war soldier can not also avail himself of. All soldiers disabled in the Mexican war from wounds or disease contracted in the service and their widows or their orphans are entitled to a pension under the law just as the Union soldier is to-day. More than that, the Mexican war soldier had more given to him than the Union soldier has had. The Mexican war soldier drew from this Government his bounty in land, from 40 to 160 acres, which land was given to every soldier, sailor, and marine who served in the Army or the Navy of the United States against Mexico. Further than that, the officers of the United States received three months' extra pay when they were mustered out of the service after the Mexican war.

So up to the present time it is only because of the numbers that have been benefited in consequence of service in the Union Army that persons can speak of the Government having done more for them. But this is not a question of numbers. If the Army that marched against Mexico had been as large as the Army that marched against the rebellion, the pension-roll after the same lapse of time would have been as large as the pension-roll on the Union side to-day. It is the numbers that were in the two armies that make the difference between the pension-roll of to-day and heretofore.

But the Senator went further than this in alluding to his own service. I have no disposition to allude to that, nor will I except as he called it out. He said that he would be accused almost of treason. Why, Mr. President, there is no disposition to accuse any man of prejudice because he does not support this bill. It is a matter for each and every representative of his constituents to do that which he deems proper and right without reference to anything that may have occurred in the past.

The Senator said that no confederate soldier to-day was dependent on the charity of the country. I would be pleased to know that there was not a human being beneath the old starry emblem of this Union that to-day was dependent on the charity of the people anywhere. But that is a part of the misfortunes that strike humanity. That is a portion of the misfortunes that men in all countries are liable to. Because a man has been unfortunate, because a man is not capable to-day of gaining his livelihood and securing food and raiment, that is no crime, nor is it any sin against God or man. It is a misfortune that he can not overcome, and for that reason he becomes a subject of charity.

In all governments, no matter what their character may be, where they have called forth armies for the preservation of their integrity, pensions have been given to the wounded and afflicted, those who have become in the course of years unable to make for themselves a livelihood.

Talk about the bounties and the charities of this Government! Why, sir, this Government would be unworthy of the name of Republic if it should deny to give to the unfortunate soldier who suffered either from wounds or disease or disability produced in any way not by his own fault the sustenance which he is entitled to, so that he may at least live under the flag for which he fought.

But the discussion to-day has gone rather on a narrower channel than it seems to me a question of this kind ought to turn. My friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] made an inquiry which was pertinent and proper, of course. It was as to the amount that would be expended provided this bill should pass, not as to the disability of the man, but what will it cost. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] occupied much of his time in explaining what this bill would probably cost the Government of the United States. Now, sir, let me ask if some poor old soldier who left his wife and children at home penniless, perhaps, after serving his country faithfully, having the seeds of disease sown in his system by lying upon snow and upon damp ground, and wading through morass and river and stream, should come hobbling up the steps of this Capitol to-day unable to procure food and raiment for himself by his own physical exertions, where is the man who would ask the question how much is it going to cost to help that poor soldier? Is that the question? Is that the kind of argument that is to be used in a great country like this when we are appealed to to sustain the poor man as he goes traveling along, perhaps crutch in hand, down the lane of life? Mr. President, I never can hear this argument—and I have heard it often—without its sending a cold chill through my whole frame. It is not the argument that should be made by patriots in favor of patriotism.

The question that should be asked is this: Are these men in a suffering condition; are they disabled from making a livelihood; and did that disability come upon them on account of their services to their country? That should be the question. If that be answered affirmatively, I shall never ask what my taxes shall be to assist that man, I care not where he lives. You may talk about economy and about expenditure as much as you choose; the grand thought within the breast of the patriot is not that its sympathies shall be closed against the misfortunes of the men who saved this people.

How much is it going to cost, we are asked; how much charity are we to contribute; how much is the Democratic party to be held responsible for—that at least was the argument of one Senator—if we pass a pension bill. Why, sir, the Democratic party or the Republican party have never been chastised politically by the people of this country for giving pensions to the unfortunate soldiers.

Now, let us examine for a moment the provisions of this bill. What are they? That every man who served for six months or more in the Union Army against the rebellion, who is now disabled by reason of wounds, disease, or any disability not his own fault, to the extent that he is not capable of making a livelihood, shall have a pension. Why not? Who is there here to-day who will not on the street put his hand in his pocket and give his dollar or two dollars at any time to a poor, unfortunate man whose condition shows that his misfortune has come upon him without his own fault? There is hardly a Senator but what does this. Why? You do it because that man has been unfortunate. He is to-day incapacitated from making his living by reason of having aided and assisted in preserving this Government. Therefore, when he appeals to you as an old soldier disabled, you always extend the hand of charity to him.

What is this Government except an aggregation of the people in their sovereign capacity? Then let this charity, if you call it charity, be given by the aggregate voice of the men of this country having patriotism enough to believe that those who served their country in time of danger are to be taken care of when misfortune overtakes them so that they can not take care of themselves.

Further on we provide that their widows shall have a pension. The pension, however, is to be reduced down to a certain amount. As I said, I propose to increase it; that is, not the higher pensions, but the lower grades; and why? We have been so fearful in days past that some poor soldier might obtain a pittance from the Treasury of the United States that we reduced the pensions to what? One dollar, $2, $3, $4, and give a man a pension of $12 a year for what? Because he is disabled and some surgeon, some gentleman whose intellect is so keen that he can absolutely draw the line by looking at a man between a disability entitled to $1 and $2 a month, has said he is to have that low rating. There are men who can do that; that is to say, there are men who do it. I tried to be a physician once, and I found I could not, and I am glad that I am not one of that kind, if I could ever have been one, that would have so keen a knowledge of disease and disability as to tell the difference between the disability entitling to a one-dollar and a two-dollar pension.

Now let me explain. An old soldier came to me yesterday in the Military Committee room with his pension certificate and desired me to introduce a bill in the Senate to increase his pension. "What is your disability?" I asked. He pulled out his hand and showed me a finger off. Said he, "I am an old soldier, and I could not join the Army now because under the regulations that finger being off I could not be taken." Then he went on to tell me that he was wounded in the left arm and received no pension for it, and that it had become so nearly paralyzed that he could not use it, and he had to go around begging. How much pension do you suppose that man was getting? Two dollars a month! That had as much influence on me to offer this amendment to this bill as anything else. I do not believe that a man, if he is on the pension-roll at all, should receive less than $8 per month. If he is a pensioner at all he has disability so that he can not make for himself a comfortable livelihood; and does anybody think that $96 a year is too much to give a man who has disability to such an extent that he can not make a support for himself? But we are so economical of the public money and so kind and so generous to the old soldier that we run the pension from $1 a month up, and if he has both legs off we give him $72 a month.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-four pensioners who are only getting $2 a month.

Mr. LOGAN. That shows the liberality of our Government! That shows that the Treasury is being robbed! Twenty-six thousand one hundred and thirty-four old soldiers, who preserved this country for you and me, who saved our property and the rights we have as American Senators, who have been disabled in battle or by sleeping on the cold earth, have become diseased and disabled, and we in our magnanimity, opening our great hearts as the American Republic, give them $2 a month, $24 per annum! Great God, Mr. President, is not this robbery of the Treasury? Is it not destroying the peace and the happiness of the people of this country?

No wonder that my friend from Arkansas was alarmed for fear the Democratic party would be destroyed if a pension bill should pass! I certainly have no right to make suggestions to the Democratic party, but I may, in a friendly manner, intimate that if they want to keep in power as long as they can they had better support pension bills where they are just and right, and satisfy the loyal people of this country that they are for their country and for the men who preserved that country. That is the way for the Democratic party to satisfy the country that they are not shamming, to agree, now that we are all in the Union, that it is our Union, to take care of the men who saved it, for they saved it for all of us, for you and me alike, although we stood opposed during those dark days.

Now when we stand under the same flag, with the same Constitution, surrounded by the same laws and protected by the same civil power, while we are thus together as one nation, as one family, we should show to the world that we appreciate that which to-day is one of the grandest benefits you gentlemen have ever received. These soldiers preserved this Government for you and for me, and it is the grandest government on the earth. They removed the blot from this mighty nation, and placed us all on an equality as men. Now then let no one here say that he belongs to a party that can only keep its strength by reducing expenditures, by denying rights that belong to men who have done for us what these men have done.

Mr. President, the Senator referred to the Mexican war soldiers. I return to that for a moment. A year or more ago the Senate passed a bill to give every man who served in the Mexican war a pension of $8 a month. It was passed by the votes of both parties. An amendment was put on it in the Senate giving to the Union soldiers in the late war the same rate that was given to our soldiers in the Mexican war; and the bill did not become a law because of non-action elsewhere. Do not let gentlemen say on this floor that they want justice done to the Mexican war soldiers. I should like to see justice done to them as well as to anybody else. Do not let them say, however, that the same justice meted out to the Mexican war soldier should not be meted out to the Union soldier in the late war. In that bill you provided that every man with a certain disability should receive a pension the same as in this bill. I supported it and will do so again. If that was justice then for the man who went to Mexico, is it not justice now for the man who preserved this country?

The Senator said it was time for us to call a halt. A halt about what? What does the Senator mean by calling a halt? Does he mean that it is time for us to call a halt in passing bills through the Senate to compensate for property taken by the Army amounting to from $1,000 up to $60,000 or $70,000 in single bills every few days? I see nobody halting in that sort of performance. I have tried once or twice to stop it, but could not. If he meant that, he and I would join hands so far as the greater portion of such claims is concerned, where my ground is that there is no claim.

But does he mean to call a halt in reference to granting pensions? Is that what he means? If he means to call a halt in reference to granting pensions to men who are not entitled to them, then I will agree with him; but if he means to call a halt in reference to granting pensions to men who are entitled to them, then I disagree with him. Under this bill no person is allowed or permitted to have a pension unless he was disabled in service, except he is in such a condition that he is not competent to make a living for himself. If the desire is to call a halt against these poor, unfortunate men that are not able to make a living for themselves, I utterly disagree with him, and I say to him now that if that is his proposition, and if he makes that proposition as one that he expects his party to stand on and succeed on, he makes the grandest mistake he ever made in his life. You can not succeed on that proposition in this country.

My judgment is that it is a grand mistake for any party to make war upon pensions that are given to men who are entitled to them. For years at every session of Congress we heard the same speech repeated over and over again about "pensions," "pensions." You would have thought the Senator who was driving at them was determined to stop all kinds of frauds and reduce expenditures, and doubtless he so intended. Finally he became so enthusiastic that he got a resolution through the Senate to have printed in book form the name of every pensioner, with his residence and post-office address. It cost about $75,000 to print that book. What did that mean? It meant that there were $75,000 expended by the Government for the benefits of claim agents, to obtain information which otherwise they themselves would have had to pay for. It was just what they wanted—the post-office address of every pensioner and where he served. So that Senator's enthusiasm carried him right into the meshes of men who wanted exactly what he got for them and made the Government pay for them, and instead of discovering fraud after the names were given, with the post-office address, &c., published at the expense of Congress, it developed no frauds whatever, but did just what I said, put these books in the hands of the agents and saved them the expense of procuring that information. Now, do not allow yourself to get so enthusiastic on this subject that you commit the same kind of errors which have been committed heretofore by other persons in reference to this same question.

Mr. President, there are other things to which I might allude in regard to what this Government has done for the soldier. Now, let me make a statement right here that will seem probably strange. The Government of the United States by law agreed to give $100 bounty per annum to soldiers who served one year against the rebellion. They were to receive if they served one year $100, two years $200, three years $300, and it was to be paid by the paymaster. A few were paid, but at the conclusion of the war regiment after regiment was mustered out in Washington city within from three to ten days of the expiration of their time as an excuse in order to deprive them of getting that bounty, and the record shows it, and they have never got it to this day. Yet men talk here about the enormous bounties given to soldiers, and the pensions paid to them, and the plundering of the Treasury for the purpose of giving to these poor unfortunate men that to which they are entitled! For twenty years these men have been asking Congress to give them that bounty that they were entitled to under the law—eight and one-third dollars per month. They never have obtained it.

Until this Government shall keep its word, until this Government shall comply with its promise, until this Government shall protect and take care as well as it can of these unfortunate men that it induced to go into the Army, and who by that service have become debilitated and disabled from performing labor to make for themselves a living, until we have performed those duties toward these men let our mouths be closed, and closed in silence. Let us not whisper so that it can be heard even in the galleries that we have done all that we can do and should do for these men.

I say then it is time to call a halt. Let the halt be called when we have performed our duty; let it be called when we have complied with our obligations; let it be called when our honor can not be tarnished in any way by a failure on our part to carry out what we agreed to when we enlisted these men in the service of their country.

Until that is done this Government has not performed its whole duty. Until it has done for the Mexican war soldier what I think it ought to do it has not performed its duty, for the precedent has been set in all governments, among all peoples, that the men who bleed that the country may live shall be recognized, that when men die in defense of their country and leave families the country shall care for those families. Those who lose the power by reason of their services to their country to make for themselves a living, as others are competent to do, should be taken care of to a certain extent by the government.

Mr. President, the government that fails to do this, the government that fails to recognize that duty toward its defenders and to return that gratitude which an individual would return to another who does him a favor and saves him in the dark hour of life, is unworthy of the name. Unless this Government shall recognize that great principle and perform that great duty it will sink in the estimation of mankind.

Mr. President, I beg pardon for having detained the Senate so long, but I do hope that on both sides of this Chamber we shall recognize the fact that these poor, old, unfortunate men shall not ask without receiving at the hands of this great Government of ours.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. There are some reasons why we should consider executive business. If the Senator from Missouri will yield I will make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to make a conference report.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

EUNICE E. CLARK.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to amend the Senate amendment by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "twelve;" so that the Senate amendment will read: "At the rate of $12 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws."

And that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment as amended.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. W. BLAIR,
A. H. COLQUITT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. H. NEECE,
JOHN S. PINDAR,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. The only effect of this is to reduce the amount of pension proposed from $20 to $12. It was classed at $20 under a misapprehension on my part at the time, thinking the soldier was a captain. It turns out he was a private soldier.

The report was concurred in.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. WHITTHORNE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Amend by inserting therein, at line 211, page 9 of the printed bill, above the word "postage," the following:

"For investigating diseases of grains, fruits, and fruit trees.

"For investigating the nature of the diseases of fruits and fruit trees, grains, and other useful plants due to parasitic fungi; for ascertaining the actual damage to our cultivated crops occasioned by fungus diseases, and for experiments to determine suitable remedies for the same, $5,000."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 14, at 12 o'clock m.

Barclay P. Smith, to be postmaster at Deadwood, Lawrence County, Dakota Territory.

Frank Shields, to be postmaster at Wilmington, Will County, Illinois.

Erskine P. Linzee, to be postmaster at Pierce City, Lawrence County, Missouri.

S. R. Davis to be postmaster at Creston, in the county of Union, and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the nomination of S. R. Davis, to be postmaster at Creston, Iowa, vice Lowell C. Teed, suspended, submits the following report:

When this nomination reached the committee the Postmaster-General was requested to communicate to it all of the papers and documents on file in his Department relative to the case. To this request he responded by forwarding to the committee all of the papers and documents called for, both in respect of the suspended officer and of the person nominated to the Senate, and who had been designated to discharge the duties of the office during the recess of the Senate.

It appears from the papers and documents thus submitted to the committee, and from letters and papers communicated to it by the suspended officer and others, that there is nothing in the case calculated to place discredit on Mr. Feed, either as an officer or a man. The only complaints made against his administration of the office are rather to his credit than otherwise, inasmuch as they are based on his strict observance of the law and the regulations of the Department. The case is one of suspension for political reasons. "Offensive partisanship" is abundantly charged, and the nominee seems to have understood that it rested on that basis; and he evidently recognized that as the controlling element in the case. In his application to the President for appointment Mr. Davis stated:

"I herewith make application for the appointment of postmaster at Creston, Iowa. I am at present employed on the editorial staff of the Creston Commonwealth, and, if appointed, I will resign that position and give my whole time to the duties of the office."

This indicates that Mr. Davis believed that the rule of offensive partisanship, as defined in the letter of the Postmaster-General, was intended to apply alike to Republicans and Democrats occupying official positions.

Mr. Teed has not expressed a desire to retain the office from which he was suspended. On the contrary, he has made other business engagements. He has simply asked that his character as an officer and a man be protected for himself and his children, and requested that this be done for him by the Senate in view of his own inability to ascertain the character of the charges made against him from those to whom the same had been presented. This report performs that office for him.

The nomination of S. R. Davis is herewith reported with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

W. E. Lewis, to be postmaster at Chariton, in the county of Lucas and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the nomination of M. E. Lewis, to be postmaster at Chariton, Iowa, vice James H. Stewart, suspended, reports:

That this is a case of suspension from office on account of "offensive partisanship." This appears from the official files in the case sent to the committee by the Postmaster-General, in response to its request for the same. The complete files seem to have been placed in the possession of the committee.

The charges presented against the suspended officer and all of the letters and telegrams in support thereof, as well as the papers in respect of the application of the nominee, were all before the committee, and from these it appears that the suspension of Mr. Stewart was induced by charges of "offensive partisanship," and not because of anything reflecting on his character as an officer or a man.

M. E. Lewis seems, so far as the papers in the case show, to be a proper and competent man to be intrusted with the office to which he has been nominated, and his confirmation is therefore recommended.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Robert Barnett, of California, to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of California.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 846) of Robert Barnett, of California, to be collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of California, in place of Amos L. Frost, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Barnett is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Mr. Frost, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 19, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of Amos L. Frost, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of California, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommends the confirmation of Mr. Barnett.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 13, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect, asking an appropriation of $100,000 to continue work on the public building at Rochester, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF OLD POST-OFFICE SITE, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of the claim of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for expense in perfecting title to the old post-office property in New York, and an account of certain liens thereon, and recommending payment; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ARNOT, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, for one week, on account of important private business.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. ROWELL as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.

SEIZURE OF VESSEL DAVID J. ADAMS.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back a resolution of inquiry referred to that committee in regard to the seizure of the American schooner David J. Adams, and recommend its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas it is reported in the public prints that on May 7, at Digby, in the Dominion of Canada, the schooner David J. Adams, owned by American citizens, was forcibly seized by the steamer Landsdowne, under order of the government of said dominion, and is now held for further proceedings: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House, if not deemed by him incompatible with the good of the public service, what steps have been taken by him to have said seizure investigated, and to communicate to this House at the earliest practicable day what were the circumstances and the pretense under which said seizure was made."

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the accompanying resolution of inquiry relating to the seizure of the American schooner David J. Adams in Canadian waters, having considered the same, respectfully report it back with the recommendation that it should pass.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back a resolution of inquiry referred to the committee, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the House, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interests, any correspondence with the Mexican Government or with the claimants relative to the claims specified in the fifth section of the act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, filed after the publication of the papers contained in the President's message to this House on February 25, 1884, and to inform this House if any payments have been made on such claims after such date, and, if so, what date and of what amount."

Your committee, to which was referred the accompanying resolution asking for copies of certain correspondence with the Mexican Government, or with claimants, relative to certain claims therein specified, have had the same under consideration, and report the said resolution back to the House and recommend its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WORTHINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider lie on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that a bill reported unanimously from the Committee on Ways and Means be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of a bill the title of which will be read, and to consider the same in the House.

Mr. BEACH. I must object. Let it come up in its regular order.
Mr. BURROWS. I hope the gentleman will let the title be read.
Mr. BEACH. I demand the regular order.
Mr. BURROWS. I made a mistake in my request. I should have asked consent of the gentleman from New York.
The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair will proceed to call committees for reports.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the House resolution of May 10, 1886, calling upon the acting Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the payment of fees of witnesses and jurors for 1883, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.
The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF FISHING IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. TUCKER. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 4690) to equalize the right of fishing in navigable waters of the United States which border on any State or Territory. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART] introduced this bill on which the committee makes an unfavorable report. He desires that it shall go upon the House Calendar, and I make that request.
The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

Mr. HEPBURN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5990) amending the act of July 20, 1882, dividing the State of Iowa into two judicial districts; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific Railroads which have received aid from the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of committees was completed, no further reports being made.
The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at twenty-four minutes past 11 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 147) providing indemnity to certain Chinese subjects for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States, and pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to forty minutes.
The motion to limit debate was agreed to.
The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 147) providing indemnity to certain Chinese subjects for losses sustained within the jurisdiction of the United States. By order of the House, general debate on this joint resolution has been limited to forty minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] is entitled to the floor.
Mr. BELMONT. I believe I have three minutes remaining from yesterday. I reserve that time.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] has two minutes remaining.
Mr. MCCREARY. I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts five minutes of my time.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor for seven minutes.
Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I was saying yesterday when the gavel fell that our obligation to pay these damages rests not upon our good-will or our spirit of benevolence, but upon the obligation of international law; and I quoted my authority to that effect.
I now desire to cite two or three precedents in support of the position which I yesterday assumed. And first I cite the precedent of England. In 1847 a Jew named Don Pacifico was assailed in Athens by a mob, who destroyed his property. He was born at Gibraltar, but he was born under the English flag and was an English citizen. So soon as word came to England of the damage which had been done to him by the mob in Athens the English Government made demand upon Greece for indemnity. Mark you, he was mobbed because of the prejudice against his race, the Jews, on the part of the Greeks in Athens. Greece refused to indemnify him for his losses. No sooner did word come to England of that refusal than a fleet was sent to the Piræus, and before its shotted guns Greece paid the indemnity. Lord Palmerston was called to account in the house of commons for this act, and it was claimed there as here that there was no international law to sustain his position. He met in the house of commons those who assumed this position, and after a day's debate he fixed the principle in English law so firmly that it never since has been questioned or shaken. In that great debate Lord Palmerston quoted the old boast of the Roman citizen, in which he went panoplied through the world, and asked, "Is it less to be an English citizen; shall an English citizen be subjected to the laws of the country where he chances to be, or shall the army of England follow him and protect him wherever in the world he happens to find himself?" He scouted the idea that an English citizen was to seek redress and be confined for redress to local courts. And he was sustained, as I said, by an overwhelming majority of the house of commons; and that principle has never been questioned since by the English people.
My friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] showed yesterday very plainly what we ourselves have done. We demanded indemnity from China; what for? For damages done to our citizens, first by mob violence, secondly by the armaments of England cannonading Chinese cities; and China paid the bills, although the damage was done by the armed forces of England attacking the city of Canton. And what did we do, as the gentleman said again, when England, through her carelessness, let loose the cruisers which drove our commerce from the sea? We exacted indemnity for our citizens from proud England; and I trust, Mr. Chairman, that there will be now an arm as long and a voice as strong to exact indemnity from England for the injuries that her subjects are now perpetrating, or seeking to perpetrate, on American fishermen. [Applause.]
And now, Mr. Chairman, I say that we owe this to China, not as a gratuity, but as an obligation. On the 2d day of September last this massacre occurred. The massacre at Glencoe, for nearly two hundred years the theme of tragic verse and prose, did not parallel the horrors of this in the Territory of Wyoming last September—twenty-eight defenseless men and women shot down in their tracks, fifteen of them coming to their death by fire. Thank God, we have the assurance of the President that these outrages were committed by aliens, as we are assured the outrages in Chicago which have just been shocking the country were also committed by aliens, who I hope will not escape the justice which has not yet visited their fellow-assassins in Wyoming. And now, sir, let us hasten to make such poor reparation as we can by payment of the bills for the damages sustained by the victims of these outrages, which are detailed with so much accuracy in the appendix to the President's message sent to this House. [Applause.]
Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the President's message on this subject be read in my time.
The CHAIRMAN. The message will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

It is made the constitutional duty of the President to recommend to the consideration of the Congress, from time to time, such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. In no matters can the necessity of this be more evident than when the good faith of the United States under the solemn obligation of treaties with foreign powers is concerned.
The question of the treatment of the subjects of China sojourning within the jurisdiction of the United States presents such a matter for the urgent and earnest consideration of the Executive and the Congress.
In my first annual message, upon the assembling of the present Congress, I adverted to this question in the following words:
"The harmony of our relations with China is fully sustained.
"In the application of the acts lately passed to execute the treaty of 1880, restrictive of the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, individual cases of hardship have occurred beyond the power of the Executive to remedy, and calling for judicial determination.
"The condition of the Chinese question in the Western States and Territories is, despite this restrictive legislation, far from being satisfactory. The recent outbreak in Wyoming Territory, where numbers of unoffending Chinamen, indisputably within the protection of the treaties and the law, were murdered by a mob, and the still more recent threatened outbreak of the same character in Washington Territory, are fresh in the minds of all, and there is apprehension lest the bitterness of feeling against the Mongolian race on the Pacific slope may find vent in similar lawless demonstrations.
"All the power of this Government should be exerted to maintain the amplest good faith toward China in the treatment of these men, and the inflexible sternness of the law in bringing the wrongdoers to justice should be insisted upon.
"Every effort has been made by this Government to prevent these violent outbreaks and to aid the representatives of China in their investigation of these outrages; and it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States engaged in competition with Chinese laborers.
"Race prejudice is the chief factor in originating these disturbances, and it exists in a large part of our domain, jeopardizing our domestic peace and the good relationship we strive to maintain with China.
"The admitted right of a government to prevent the influx of elements hostile to its internal peace and security may not be questioned, even where there is no treaty stipulation on the subject. That the exclusion of Chinese labor is demanded in other countries where like conditions prevail is strongly evident in the Dominion of Canada, where Chinese immigration is now regulated by laws more exclusive than our own. If existing laws are inadequate to compass the end in view, I shall be prepared to give earnest consideration to any further remedial measures within the treaty limits which the wisdom of Congress may devise."
At the time I wrote this the shocking occurrences at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, were fresh in the minds of all, and had been recently presented anew to the attention of this Government by the Chinese minister in a note, which, while not unnaturally exhibiting some misconception of our Federal system of administration in the Territories, while they as yet are not in the exercise of the full measure of that sovereign self-government pertaining to the States of the Union, presents in truthful terms the main features of the cruel outrage there perpetrated upon inoffensive subjects of China. In the investigation of the Rock Springs outbreak and the ascertainment of the facts on which the Chinese minister's statements rest, the Chinese representatives were aided by the agents of the United States, and the reports submitted, having been thus framed and recounting facts within the knowledge of witnesses on both sides, possess an impartial truthfulness which could not fail to give them great impressiveness.

The facts, which so far are not controverted or affected by any exculpatory or mitigating testimony, show the murder of a number of Chinese subjects in September last at Rock Springs, the wounding of many others, and the spoliation of the property of all when the unhappy survivors had been driven from their habitations. There is no allegation that the victims, by any lawless or disorderly act on their part, contributed to bring about a collision. On the contrary, it appears that the law-abiding disposition of these people, who were sojourners in our midst under the sanction of hospitality and express treaty obligations, was made the pretext for the attack upon them. This outrage upon law and treaty engagements was committed by a lawless mob. None of the aggressors, happily for the national good fame, appear by the reports to have been citizens of the United States. They were aliens, engaged in that remote district as mining laborers, who became excited against the Chinese laborers, as it would seem, because of their refusal to join them in a strike to secure higher wages. The oppression of Chinese subjects by their rivals in the competition for labor does not differ in violence and illegality from that applied to other classes of native or alien labor. All are equally under the protection of law, and equally entitled to enjoy the benefits of assured public order.

Were there no treaty in existence referring to the rights of Chinese subjects, did they come hither as all other strangers who voluntarily resort to this land of freedom, of self-government, and of laws, here peaceably to win their bread and to live their lives, there can be no question that they would be entitled still to the same measure of protection from violence and the same free forum for the redress of their grievances as any other aliens.

So far as the treaties between the United States and China stipulate for the treatment of the Chinese subjects actually in the United States as the citizens or subjects of "the most favored nation" are treated, they create no new status for them; they simply recognize and confirm a general and existing rule, applicable to all aliens alike, for none are favored above others by domestic law, and none by foreign treaties, unless it be the Chinese themselves in some respects. For, by the third article of the treaty of November 17, 1880, between the United States and China, it is provided that:

"ARTICLE III.

"If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty."

This article may be held to constitute a special privilege for Chinese subjects in the United States as compared with other aliens; not that it creates any peculiar rights which others do not share, but because in case of ill-treatment of the Chinese in the United States this Government is bound to "exert all its power to devise measures for their protection," by securing to them the rights to which, equally with any and all other foreigners, they are entitled.

Whether it is now incumbent upon the United States to amend their general laws or devise new measures in this regard I do not consider in the present communication, but confine myself to the particular point raised by the outrage and massacre at Rock Springs.

The note of the Chinese minister, and the documents which accompany it, give, as I believe, an unexaggerated statement of the lamentable incident, and present, impressively, the regrettable circumstance that the proceedings, in the name of justice, for the ascertainment of the crime and fixing the responsibility therefor were a ghastly mockery of justice. So long as the Chinese minister, under his instructions, makes this the basis of an appeal to the principles and convictions of mankind, no exception can be taken. But when he goes further, and, taking as his precedent the action of the Chinese Government in past instances where the lives of American citizens and their property in China have been endangered, argues a reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs, it became necessary to meet his argument, and to deny, most emphatically, the conclusions he seeks to draw as to the existence of such a liability and the right of the Chinese Government to insist upon it.

I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of February 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that, while the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection, and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country, with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

The correspondence exchanged is herewith submitted for the information of the Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 2, 1886.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, the whole subject of indemnifying certain Chinese for damages done to them at Rock Springs, Wyoming Territory, has been so fully discussed and so ably presented by the President in his message, and his reasons are so ample for the proposed appropriation, that I shall be very brief. The Chinese problem is very interesting and very important. The trouble at Rock Springs and the information that we get from the States on the Pacific slope show that there is a hostile feeling between Americans and Chinese, and that there is almost an irrepressible conflict between our people and them, which in my opinion can not be stopped except by absolute restriction of Chinese immigration to this country, and I am in favor, sir, of going as far as the treaty between this country and China will allow us in prohibiting Chinese laborers from coming to this country. But the question before us for consideration now is the treatment of the subjects of China sojourning within the jurisdiction of the United States. It appears, according to all the evidence, that these harmless and helpless people at Rock Springs were in no respect guilty of violence, that they were in no respect injuring anybody at the time they were attacked and twenty-eight of them killed and a number wounded.

These Chinese were within the territory of the United States, and allowed to come here under a treaty, and the United States had agreed to "exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as are enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty. I do not know that I would be able to support this proposition of indemnity if it stood alone, but considering the relations between the United States and China and the necessity for further legislation and further treaty stipulations prohibiting Chinese immigration, I am inclined to support the bill.

It appeals to us because it concerns our relations with a nation with which we are to-day upon friendly terms, and which, when we asked indemnity for injuries inflicted upon American citizens in China, granted it to a large amount, having paid at one time $750,000. In addition to this, policy requires the payment of the amount asked for. There are to-day more than a thousand American citizens in China and millions of American capital, and under all the circumstances it is perhaps best to pay this indemnity. I wish to say, however, in this connection that there is no treaty stipulation and no law that requires it to be paid. If we pay it, we pay it for the benefit of poor, helpless, unfortunate men whose houses were burned before their eyes, the lives of twenty-eight of them destroyed, and many of them wounded. I believe, sir, that this case appeals to us as a civilized people, as a Christian people, and the bill should be passed to indemnify the sufferers. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] ten minutes.

Mr. PHELPS. Their houses were burned; their goods were pillaged; twenty-eight of them were killed and fifteen wounded. And the only provocation was that they would not join in a strike. That is the case, and the question is, "What are we going to do about it?" and the answer ought to be, and I believe will be, "Do what the administration recommends and what this bill provides for and pay for the property destroyed." Not for charity's sake, but for solid reasons. Because it is good policy, as urged by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WORTHINGTON]; because it is a single reciprocity for a hundred cases, where China has paid an indemnity to us, as urged by his colleague, Mr. HITT, and because it is an international obligation, as urged by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE].

It is good policy, because we have more property in China than China has in the United States. We need millions to measure our property, thousands will measure theirs; and if we change the old rule of practice and adopt the new one, that the natural government may throw the obligation to defend the rights of foreigners on one of its members, call it State, Territory, province, or vice-royalty, the United States will in the future lose a great deal more than China. If the new rule had prevailed in the East, the great fortunes which have been brought to this country, and whose splendor is yet conspicuous in Wall street and Fifth avenue, would never have got across the Pacific. But there is a moral obligation stronger than these considerations of policy. We ought to pay this indemnity to China, because China has paid indemnities to us in a score, perhaps in a hundred cases similar to this, only less meritorious.

The history of our diplomatic relations with China for nearly fifty years has been only the history of prompt and greedy claims for indemnity on our part and of prompt and generous payment on its part. It has paid for the rights of every American citizen when violated. It has paid for the violated rights of Chinese subjects when they were connected with ours; as when they paid a Chinese landlord, whose house was destroyed by a mob, because an American leased it, and as when they paid for the property and clothing of native helpers, which was lost in the service of American missionaries. This is the way China paid indemnities up to 1858. In this fashion she paid them in detail, then she paid them in gross. She took more than $700,000, gave it to the United States Government and said, "Take this and pay your countrymen."

We took it, we paid all claims generously, with 12 per cent. interest; but the generosity of China was so ample that after all this we had left nearly one-third of the original sum to return to China. China did this and shamed the grudging spirit in which Christian countries pay their international bills.

This is the moral obligation, but there is a legal one—the international obligation. The United States has treaties with the Empire of China. In these treaties she promised to protect Chinese subjects. The United States has failed to keep its covenants. It did not protect Chinese subjects, and it is liable in damages for a broken contract unless it can establish and maintain as a doctrine of international law that when a nation makes a treaty with another nation and breaks one of its covenants it can shift its liablity by saying that it was the covenant and therefore the liability of one of its members.

Unfortunately it is easy to declare this doctrine, but it seems impossible to establish and maintain. All writers on international law from Grotius to Woolsey have examined and rejected it. We have accepted it in declaration but have always rejected it in practice. We have generally asserted this doctrine most vehemently at the very moment we were about to transgress it. Our habit has been to assert bad law and practice good. We did this in the famous case at New Orleans. A mob destroyed the property of Spanish subjects. Her Spanish Majesty demanded indemnity.

The powerful voice of Daniel Webster was heard in reply. He declared this bad law magnificently and referred them to the State of Louisiana and its courts. Her Spanish Majesty ignored all this eloquence in declaration of bad law and asked for the usual practice, and the Secretary of State recommended Congress to vote the indemnity and say nothing more of the State's liability. But more significant yet was the case in China at the time of the Anglo-Chinese war. China, learning the verbal tricks of civilization, concluded she would declare bad law and see the result. She told our Department of State that the vice-royalty of Canton was the party liable and that in its tribunals the American claimants must find redress. Our Secretary, Lewis Cass, said little against the bad law in the plea. How could he? But insisted on the usual good practice, and China, the nation, the empire, paid the bill.

And in European countries the same uniformity of action prevails, accompanied still in some cases by the same declaration of the bad law, that would relieve national obligation and substitute local. Indeed, comprehensive as was the claim made yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] that no text-book in its summary of principles and no civilized nation in its practice had ever followed this bad law, I believe it is the truth. If, then, in this case we put the bad law for the first time into practice against a semi-barbarous nation, public opinion will say we did it because China was weak and could not enforce its rights, and the world will compare the pagan civilization of the Chinese Empire with the Christian civilization of the great American Republic, and not to our credit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] has expired.

Mr. HENLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PHELPS. I shall be glad to answer the gentleman's question if time be given me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to put a question to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MCCREARY. I yield for that purpose, but I trust the gentleman will be very brief.

Mr. HENLEY. It was stated yesterday, and the gentleman from New Jersey doubtless heard the statement, that Mr. Blaine, when Secretary of State, adopted a different rule from that for which the gentleman contends and which is asserted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in presenting this bill; in other words, that upon outrages being committed upon certain Chinese subjects in the city of Denver and upon indemnity being demanded, Mr. Blaine or Mr. Evarts, I forget which——

Mr. MCKENNA. Both of them. It was I who made the statement yesterday.

Mr. HENLEY. Denied the right to indemnity. I should like to hear from the gentleman from New Jersey on that subject, because upon these matters everybody knows him to be facile princeps.

Mr. PHELPS. If I answer the gentleman in the way he wishes me to do, I do not see that it involves any contradiction of my statement that Daniel Webster, Lewis Cass, Hamilton Fish, James G. Blaine, and Frederick T. Frelinghuysen all made the declarations I have cited. I admitted that the declarations had been made by almost all our administrations that we were exempt from obligation under a treaty if we could refer the party complaining to a local authority or tribunal; but at the same time I claimed that there was no break in the practice of these very Secretaries, who, after making their declarations, followed the fashion of American diplomacy and paid the indemnity whenever it was due and demanded.

Mr. MCKENNA. Will the gentleman from New Jersey allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCCREARY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS].

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, as I intend to vote for this resolution I wish to briefly state my reasons for so doing, as well as to refer to the question of Chinese immigration which has been introduced into this discussion. Within the limited time allotted to me in the debate I can only discuss the questions generally and not minutely. The resolution of indemnity is to pay for the losses the Chinese sustained by the outbreak and violence upon them at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, last September. The facts of this inhuman and murderous affair have been so widely published throughout this country and the world, and that to our discredit, that it is unnecessary for me to detail them here. Twenty-eight unoffending Chinamen were killed outright, many others wounded and driven from their burning homes and property, seeking refuge in the hills and mountains; some were burned.

The coroner's jury there found as follows:

We, the undersigned, members of the coroner's jury, from the evidence before us, state that human bodies Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 came to their death from exposure to fire, the nationality of said bodies being unknown to us, as they were defaced beyond recognition.

And the grand jury as follows:

We have diligently inquired into the occurrence at Rock Springs on the 2d day of September last, and, though we have examined a large number of witnesses, no one has been able to testify to a single criminal act committed by any known white person that day. Whatever crimes may have been committed, the perpetrators thereof have not been disclosed by the evidence before us; and therefore, while we deeply regret the circumstance, we are wholly unable, acting under the obligation of our oaths, to return indictments.

There is no chance of redress there. Shall this Christian nation which has persistently sought closer and more intimate commercial and friendly relations for years with China, into which country our missionaries and merchants and other citizens go, and for whom we claim protection of life and property while there, and for the loss of which by violence we have exacted and received indemnity from that Government in times past, now fail or refuse to respond to the requirements of the "golden rule?"

The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] inquires of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] if this proposition is not against the policy of Mr. Blaine when he was Secretary of State. Be that as it may, I see the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], then Assistant Secretary under Mr. Blaine and now a member of this House, advocates it.

I do not support this joint resolution upon any idea that there is clear and undoubted liability on the part of this Government under international law. I do not consider the many instances cited here are good precedents for this case, but I shall vote for the joint resolution upon the ground of our past relations with China. It was at the instance of this Government our people have been admitted there and our missionaries and merchants have been allowed to pursue their calling in that empire. Our citizens resident there have also been indemnified by the Chinese Government for losses and damages sustained by them. I do it, sir, upon the ground of moral obligation under the peculiar circumstances of the case. In this connection I call attention again to the closing paragraph of the President's message which has been read. It is as follows:

I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of February 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that, whilst the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection, and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country, with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

The correspondence exchanged is herewith submitted for the information of the Congress.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 2, 1886.

And also to that part of the note of the Secretary of State therein referred to as follows:

Yet I am frank to say that the circumstances of the case now under consideration contain features which I am disposed to believe may induce the President to recommend to the Congress, not as under obligation of treaty or principle of international law, but solely from a sentiment of generosity and pity to an innocent and unfortunate body of men, subjects of a friendly power, who, being peaceably employed within our jurisdiction, were so shockingly outraged, that in view of the gross and shameful failure of the police authorities at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, to keep the peace, or even to attempt to keep the peace, or to make proper efforts to uphold the law, or punish the criminals, or make compensation for the loss of property pillaged or destroyed, it may reasonably be a subject for the benevolent consideration of Congress, whether with the distinct understanding that no precedent is thereby created, or liability for want of proper enforcement of police jurisdiction in the Territories, they will not, ex gratia, grant pecuniary relief to the sufferers in the case now before us to the extent of the value of the property of which they were so outrageously deprived, to the grave discredit of republican institutions.

I trust you will recognize in what I have herein suggested the desire of the United States to carry into effect the "golden rule" recited in the treaty to which you have made reference, and that in such action you will perceive our wish and purpose to confirm and perpetuate the friendship and comity which, I trust, may long exist between our respective countries. You will, I am sure, agree that in good faith, and in compliance with their obligations, the Government of the United States is strenuously asserting its power to secure the protection of your countrymen within its jurisdiction.

Accept, sir, a renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

T. F. BAYARD.

I desire to say in relation to some criticism which the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON] made upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, wherein he called attention to the fact that in his judgment the committee ought to have given more attention to the question of restriction upon the immigration of Chinese than to making reparation for any loss or damage they may have sustained—I wish to say in reply to that criticism of the gentleman from California that no question before that committee has received more deliberate and careful consideration than the question of further restriction to which he has adverted. I had the honor myself to vote for the strongest restriction bill which has passed the House, but which was vetoed by a Republican President.

I have voted for all these measures of restriction and will also vote for this joint resolution. I am willing to vote to the fullest extent in favor of bona fide restrictions, and to go even to the extent of abrogating the treaty with China if necessary to protect American laborers and American society from the evil effects of this Mongolian immigration. It is conceded by all that it is an evil. It has been greatly repressed by laws already enacted under treaties. Let us by proper action go forward and entirely stop it in the interest of intelligent, honorable, and self-respecting American laborers, but let us do it by honorable means consistent with treaty stipulations; and while upon this subject let me say that Congress may well consider whether the time has not come when patriotism and wisdom shall dictate further discrimination against the immigration of some other classes equally as dangerous to this country and its institutions as these Chinese. The true laborer and bread-winner of this country has no worse enemies than such creatures as these who committed this massacre upon these unoffending Chinese at Rock Springs in the Territory of Wyoming. These creatures were aliens and not citizens of this country. The cause of honest American laborers is not promoted by the lawless conduct and crimes of such persons. And while well-meaning, industrious, and virtuous foreigners desiring to better their conditions should be welcomed to our shores, there are those whose conduct and teachings lead toward anarchy, and who are far more dangerous to American society and institutions than are the Chinese. I mean such as bring among us socialism, Mormonism, and anarchism.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BELMONT. I call for the regular order of business.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House general debate is now closed on the pending joint resolution, and the Clerk will proceed to read the first section.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $147,748.74 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Chinese Government, in consideration of the losses unhappily sustained by certain Chinese subjects by mob violence at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, September 2, 1885, the said sum being intended for distribution among the sufferers and their legal representatives, in the discretion of the Chinese Government—

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to move an amendment to the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAREY. I move in line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BELMONT. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CAREY. I desire to be heard on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the amount proposed to be appropriated by this resolution is double the value of the property actually lost and destroyed. If the purpose of this joint resolution be to pay the Chinese Government vindictive damages, intending thereby to make the Chinese Government and people feel kindly toward us as a nation, the appropriation is not too large. But if the object be to pay the value only of the property lost through the outrages of the mob, then this joint resolution should be amended by the insertion of the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," and further amended so as to require the existence and loss of the property to be established by evidence.

The effect of this resolution is to pay to the Chinese Government an amount of money sufficient to give each Chinese resident of Rock Springs on the day of the riot nearly $200. The assessed value of the property of Sweetwater County, in which Rock Springs is located, was in 1885 about two and a half million of dollars. Of this amount the Chinese residents only returned a few hundred dollars.

The Chinamen, after they were induced to return to Rock Springs under military protection, examined the ruins of their huts, and unearthed, it was stated at the time, much of the treasure which they claimed they had lost. Because the Chinese Government made a mistake a number of years ago, and paid to this Government a much larger sum of money than was required to indemnify American citizens for losses sustained in the Chinese Empire, is no reason why this Government should make a similar mistake now.

On behalf of the people of my Territory I desire to state, that it is very unfortunate that the whole truth has not been told with reference to the riot at Rock Springs. There is a disposition to shirk the responsibility and place it at the door of certain classes of the foreign-born population. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in answer to a question yesterday, replied that only Welshmen and Swedes were engaged in the mob. The appendix to the report of that committee shows that the nationalities engaged were English, Welsh, Scotch, Irish, and Scandinavians, their numbers predominating in the order named." These people are not deserving of all the odium which attaches to the disgraceful affair. Race was undoubtedly a strong factor, but the constant agitation of the Chinese question by the press and the people had intensified the bitter feeling prevailing at that time. Congress and the treaty-making power of the Government had attempted to restrict Chinese immigration. The remedy applied had not been sufficiently radical. Labor, always jealous of its rights, read daily that the law was being evaded and that the country west was being overwhelmed by Chinese immigrants.

The white miners on the day the riot occurred claimed and thought they had grievances. They believed from reports circulated in the camp that they had been discriminated against in the working of the mines, and that white miners in the village were refused work while Chinamen readily obtained employment. While these grievances were probably imaginary, it only required a difficulty in the mines between a white man and a Chinaman to rouse the miners to the highest state of excitement. There is no evidence that the outrageous deeds committed were in any sense premeditated. The fire had been smoldering for months, and it only required the excitement of the morning to fan it into flames. When the mob had once assembled and started on its mad career reason did not govern; its only code was blood, pillage, and destruction.

The people of Wyoming Territory sincerely regret that the riot occurred. They do not apologize for it, but in the strongest terms condemn it. They do not think they should in any wise be held responsible for it.

During the sixteen years of the political existence of the Territory previous to this trouble good order had been maintained throughout the Territory; the laws had been enforced, and life and property were as safe as it was possible for it to be in a new country. Her people are not of that kind that excite race prejudices or justify mob violence.

The President, in his special message to Congress, says:

While the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection, and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country, with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

This paragraph does an unintentional injustice to the authorities of the Territory. Sweetwater County is a large county containing an area equal to the combined area of several of the small States. Its voting population is only 1,100. Its peace officers, scattered over the county at the time the riot occurred, consisted of a sheriff and his deputy and three or four constables; which, previous to this time, had been ample to maintain good order. The trouble had not been apprehended by any one. The Chinese consul states in his letter that the sheriff of the county did all that was in his power. All the officers, from the governor down, backed by the people of the Territory, were prompt to suppress subsequent threatened outbreaks in other sections of the Territory. Much is said about the action of the grand jury in Sweetwater County. The excitement was so great in the county immediately after the riot that the investigation should have been postponed to a future time.

It is rare, indeed, that men who have engaged in riots are brought to justice. It is true there is no forum in the county in which compensation for the losses incurred can be maintained; but this is not because those who were damaged were Chinese subjects. The Chinese stand in the same position as Americans in this respect. A civil action would not lie against the county. Sweetwater County stands in this regard in the same position as the counties in most of the States of the Union. In but a small number of the States is a right of action given by statute against municipal corporations for losses sustained by reason of mob violence.

The riot had not its origin at Rock Springs. Of the population of the Pacific States and Territories it is estimated that nearly 10 per cent. are Mongolians. Chinese labor has largely undermined on the Pacific coast the labor not only of citizens of foreign birth, but of those born in this country. Each year the Mongolians are pushing farther East, white labor is uneasy, and difficulties between the two races are becoming frequent occurrences. As long as the Chinamen are in the country they will be entitled to its protection. White labor will array itself against Chinese labor, because it can not successfully compete with it. The Chinaman, owing to centuries of deprivation, can live on far less than it is possible for an American to live on. The former can breathe and have good health in a space not large enough for an ordinary closet. He is not burdened in this country with wife and children. He in no sense becomes a part of our people or takes upon himself any of the duties of citizenship. He gathers the fruit of his toil with the view only of transporting it to his mother country.

The only remedy is the enactment of a law that will absolutely restrict all further Chinese immigration to this country. The people of the Pacific States and Territories have for years protested against further Chinese immigration. The Territories of the United States want more population. Men who bring families become citizens, build homes, and take part in the development of the country always receive a hearty welcome. Possessing these qualifications, there is never any inquiry made as to race or nationality. It is such men as these who live in the Territories that ask that their honest labor shall not be brought into competition with that of the Chinese who are imported into the country under contracts which hold them in a condition little removed above that of slavery.

This nation has since its foundation with wise laws protected its productions against the competition of the productions of foreign countries. It is important that the nation should elevate the labor of its own citizens and protect them against a race that can in no wise identify and assimilate itself with the American people. The good order of the land and the best interest of the American citizen require and demand it.

Owing to the building of new railroads, to the inexhaustible coal fields of Wyoming Territory ten thousand miners will within a very short time be required. If these miners be Mongolians, they will add nothing to the wealth of the Territory, but will sap its very life, and the mining camps will consist only of huts. If the miners employed be white men, besides adding great wealth to the Territory it will bring forty to fifty thousand additional population, and instead of villages of Chinese huts, well-built towns will spring up, in which will live thrifty populations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BELMONT. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. CAREY. I would like an opportunity to continue my remarks.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. My object in offering the amendment is to speak to the merits of the bill; but I suppose an opportunity will be afforded before the measure is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from New York is in order; and the Chair is bound to entertain it. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee now rise.

Mr. CAREY. What has become of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is pending; but pending that amendment the gentleman from New York has moved that the committee rise.

Mr. CAREY. I think a number of amendments will be required to this section.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BELMONT, there were—ayes 123, noes 16.

Mr. KING. No quorum.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I asked for a division on this question, with no intention whatever of delaying the consideration of the bill. I am in favor of it; but I think it only fair that some one should be heard for five minutes in opposition to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming, and especially in opposition to the logic by which he attempted to support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming is pending.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But, as I understand, the purpose of the motion to rise and go back into the House is to cut off further debate on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. That is for the House to determine. Does the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] make the point that no quorum voted?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLS. A quorum is not required upon a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 123, the noes 16. The motion is agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration House joint resolution No. 147 had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I move that, when the House next resolves itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this subject, all debate on this resolution and all amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

Mr. MILLS. Say thirty minutes.

Mr. BELMONT. I must insist upon the motion; the time of the committee is very limited.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to amend by making it five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. All the debate has been taken up on one side. Give us some on the other. I move to amend by making it ten minutes.

Mr. BELMONT. The time of the committee under the rule is limited to only a few minutes more, and I must insist upon the motion.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, submitted by Mr. MILLS, the House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 79.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. BELMONT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; but before the result was announced the Speaker declared that the hour for the consideration of bills under the rule had expired.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, submitted by the gentleman from Illinois last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 237 and insert:
"Mexico: Consuls at Acapulco and Matamoras, at $2,000 each, $4,000."

Mr. CANNON. This is merely adding Matamoras at its proper place, it having been stricken out before.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Friendly and Navigator's Islands: Consul at Apia, $1,500.
Chili: Consul at Talcahuano, $1,000.

Mr. BELMONT. I move to strike out the paragraph in lines 250 and 251, and also line 252, with a view of inserting them hereafter at their proper places in the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, consular service (class 6).

Mr. CANNON. I offer the same amendment there, to strike out the words "salaries, consular service," so it will stand "class 6."

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Turkish dominions: Consul at Sivas, $1,500.

Mr. BELMONT. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the line 250, stricken out a moment ago, as follows:

Friendly and Navigator's Islands: Consul at Apia, $1,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not understand, because of the rearrangement of this bill, which is so different from what we have had before, what is the necessity for this amendment. I should be glad if the gentleman would state it. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. BELMONT. It is simply to put the salary in the class to which this officer belongs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the present law?

Mr. BELMONT. Yes; and the manner in which it is inserted in the wrong place arose from the fact that the estimates of the Department contained a recommendation that this consul should have the salary raised, and would therefore go into another class. The committee, however, preferred to leave him in the class to which he belonged.

Mr. HOLMAN. So the salary is not raised?

Mr. BELMONT. No, sir; on the contrary, he remains by this amendment where he was prior to the preparation of this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE C.

Salaries, consular service (class 7):

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend in line 302 by striking out the words "salaries, consular service," so that it will stand "class 7," as in the other classifications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

British dominions: Consuls at Gaspe Basin, Windsor (Nova Scotia), Bombay, Sierra Leone, and Turk's Island, at $1,000 each, $5,000.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from New York desire to offer an amendment there?

Mr. BELMONT. I have no amendment that I desire to offer.

Mr. CANNON. I propose to offer an amendment, to insert the line stricken out heretofore, 252, as follows:

Chili: Consul at Talcahuano, $1,000.

Mr. BELMONT. I had proposed to insert that at the end of this paragraph of the bill; but let it go in here; it is immaterial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk-hire, no greater portion of this sum than $400 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year: Provided, That the total sum expended in one year shall not exceed amount appropriated, $10,000.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to offer an amendment, and after it is read I will make a brief explanation of the reason for offering it.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 379 add:

"Provided further, That out of the amount hereby appropriated the Secretary of State may make such allowance as may to him seem proper to any interpreter for clerical services in addition to his pay as interpreter."

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, under this provision $10,000 may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of State to pay additional clerk-hire at consulates. By a subsequent provision $4,000 are appropriated for pay of interpreters and guards at the consulates at Constantinople, Smyrna, Cairo, Jerusalem, Beirut, and Seoul. At Constantinople the interpreter receives a salary of $480 a year. When I had the honor of being in that city I discovered that this interpreter was the mainstay of the consulate; that he was not only the interpreter, but he had to go into the court, that he had to keep the records of the consulate, that he was doing the work of a first-class lawyer in Turkish law. He is a Greek by birth, is a good English scholar, and has a general knowledge of modern languages. I found the sum he received was totally inadequate, and I satisfied myself we were doing a gross injustice to this competent gentleman by giving him only $480 a year. On my return I represented the fact to the Secretary of State, and allowance was made of $120 a year out of the appropriation for clerks at consulates, which gave him $600 in all.

This continued till the change of administration, when the incorruptible First Comptroller of the Treasury disallowed the additional amount paid to the interpreter of $120. The result was that my friend, out of his allowance of $480, had to repay the additional amount he had already received and expended. He has written to me a most distressful letter, with which I will not trouble the House, except by showing the length of it [holding up the letter] to see if some relief could not be had.

I communicated with the First Comptroller, and have received from him a most careful legal opinion, in which I am bound to say he sustains his position that he was compelled to reject this additional allowance of clerk-hire on the ground that section 1765 of the Revised Statutes forbids any officer receiving pay from two several appropriations, unless it is done by authority of Congress. He says he is very sorry he is compelled to come to this conclusion, but the law leaves him no choice. I ask the House to authorize the Secretary of State, if he deems it proper, to make an allowance of this moderate character, as he has done heretofore, out of this fund. It does not increase the amount one dollar. It allows meritorious officers receiving small salaries to live, and no more.

Mr. CANNON. I would have preferred, if this very worthy employé of whom the gentleman from New York speaks needs relief, that the provision should be specific as to that employé. I do not know whether it is good policy or not to provide that interpreters may also receive pay as clerks. If this principle is to be applied the world round at all these different consulates where an interpreter is necessary, it may grow into an abuse.

Mr. HEWITT. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. CANNON. I know it is left to his discretion, and I presume he will exercise it wisely.

Mr. HEWITT. I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment; but I supposed the same difficulty might exist at some place we did not know about. I only pointed out this case. The amount for clerk-hire is very small, only $10,000, and only $4,000 are allowed for interpreters. The Secretary by this amendment is allowed a little discretion, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON. I apprehend as to this item the gentleman is right, but if he will go through the bill he will find other appropriations for interpreters at other places.

But as regards the decisions of the First Comptroller I want to give the gentleman from New York and the House notice that if the House proposes to change legislation all along the line to meet the legal opinions and views of the First Comptroller and of the clerks in his office as now desired, the gentleman from New York will find that he will not have time for anything else scarcely during the balance of this Congress.

Mr. HEWITT. I admit the amendment is open to a point of order, and the gentleman can object to it on the point of order if he sees fit. I have simply thrown, not myself, but this particular case, on the charity of the House. If any gentleman objects on the point of order, I have done my duty.

Mr. CANNON. It is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. HEWITT. I am glad of that.

Mr. CANNON. And I do not want to make it anyhow. But I want to call the attention of the committee again to the fact that many decisions of this most excellent First Comptroller are breeding great trouble in very small matters. For instance, I recollect one now that was called to our attention the other day. An appropriation was made for the current year for putting in gas-pipes, &c., into the new Pension building. That learned officer held you could not after you got the gas in put on the small fixtures to utilize it. There is an appropriation for contingencies used for a thousand things, used for ice and a great many other things. That learned officer has held that you can not from that appropriation purchase car-tickets to send messengers upon an errand. Constant application is being made now to change the laws all along the line to meet the opinions of the learned and, as my friend from New York says, incorruptible First Comptroller. One of two things has got to be done: Either the First Comptroller must modify the strictness of his views touching construction, or we must appoint a commission to go all along the line and make the law to suit the First Comptroller. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am hardly surprised that the attempt of an officer of the Government connected with a very important branch of the public service, the First Comptroller, to return to the old practices of the Government and to its severe integrity in the expenditure of the public money should, after these years of loose administration, excite astonishment here. The speech which my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just made would not have been made by a member of his own party twenty-five years ago, for then the old methods still prevailed and the accounting officers were careful to see that not one dollar was drawn from the Treasury unless it had been properly appropriated to the purpose for which it was drawn.

But in this long lapse of a quarter of a century things have changed, loose methods of administration have sprung up. Under doubtful appropriations large sums of money have been drawn out of the Treasury, and the methods of administration have been such that, guard your appropriation bills as you might, the expenditures in many instances largely exceeded what was intended to be appropriated by Congress. I think, sir, that no higher compliment could be paid to the present First Comptroller of the Treasury, once a distinguished member of this House, than the charge made against him here that he will not consent that the public money shall pass out of the Treasury unless properly appropriated for the specific purpose to which it is sought to be applied. You can pronounce no better eulogy upon him. It is getting back, sir, to the better days of the Republic. It is getting back to the principle that the money which is drawn by taxation from the people shall be applied only to public objects, and that those objects shall be specified by public enactment. For one, I regret that this amendment has been offered. I regret that in the very first session of Congress after the incoming of a Democratic administration a bill like this, involving a little over a million dollars and containing many appropriations which have been held by this side of the House to be unnecessary for the proper administration of our foreign relations, should have grown $35,000. The expense of one of the most unimportant of our foreign legations has increased to the extent of $3,300. We have a minister there at the capital of a nation with which we have no political relations whatever and where we have a consul-general who is entirely competent to transact the entire business relations which we possibly can have with that government.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. Was not the increase in the salary of that minister made in last year's appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it was, but that salary was never received until our administration came into power, and that position, one of the least important of our ministerial positions, is made the basis of this increase, and increase is to be piled upon that.

Mr. MILLS. What minister does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BELMONT. Our minister at Constantinople.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have already remarked, we have there a consul-general, at a salary of $3,000 a year, who can perform every possible duty that can be required.

Mr. HEWITT. He can not interpret.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the present salary of the interpreter there?

Mr. HEWITT. Four hundred and eighty dollars a year. He had an allowance of $120 a year, which has been disallowed, and I want to give him the same allowance that he had before out of the same fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then it was found that that allowance was made in violation of law.

Mr. HEWITT. But the man can not live on $480 a year. Even the gentleman from Indiana would find it difficult to make both ends meet on $480 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. He lived for four years upon that salary.

Mr. HEWITT. No; he did not. He had an allowance in addition to his salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. For how many years?

Mr. HEWITT. He had an allowance for two years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then he had an allowance for two years, but prior to that he lived upon the salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this matter, there is no proposition here involving an expenditure of money for this item during the next fiscal year greater than what we are expending during the present fiscal year. The amendment, I believe, does not propose to increase the expenditure one single cent, but the necessity for the amendment grows simply out of the fact that a new Comptroller has made a ruling different from the rulings of prior Comptrollers. It is simply a difference of opinion such as is natural among men.

I care nothing at all for the amendment. I think, however, the facts stated by the gentleman from New York disclose the importance of such a change of the rules as will allow the committees of this House representing great Departments of the Government to come in and meet just such exigencies as this. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, as I am informed, has had this subject under consideration, and has now pending before it a bill for the purpose of correcting just such difficulties as this. In one case salaries are too high; in another they are too low. The legislation fixing these salaries was passed years ago. Times have since changed; and you must provide new legislation to meet new exigencies.

In this very instance we find our utter inability, if the rules of the House were insisted upon, to make a very proper increase. The point of order having been made in this case, it seems to me we must of necessity vote this appropriation. Had my attention been drawn to the point earlier I should have made the question of order against this proposition, as I would all along the line in reference to legislation in this bill changing salaries, my object being to illustrate to the House the necessity of allowing the committees having relations with the great departments of this Government on important subjects an opportunity to be heard before the House in reference to needed legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

Mr. CANNON. I renew the amendment only for the purpose of saying a word in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, who congratulated himself and the country that at last we have a First Comptroller of the Treasury who is disposed to return to the "days of the fathers"—a strict constructionist. I know the present Comptroller very well; and I am not here to make an attack upon him. I am satisfied he is an honest man——

A MEMBER. Then why does he need so much defending?

Mr. CANNON. I am not seeking to defend him, nor particularly to attack him; I am only replying to the gentleman from Indiana. While I am satisfied that this officer intends to do right, yet I do not think the House or the country is to be congratulated upon many of his rulings, the gentleman from Indiana to the contrary notwithstanding.

In a general way it is true that without the approval of the First Comptroller the accounts which go to the Treasury can not be passed. He construes the law. What I complain of is that this officer, instead of standing erect and looking all along the line of the public service, asking for the substance of appropriation and legislation, viewing the whole field, appears to have seized a magnifying glass, and if he can find a fly-speck anywhere in any general or special legislation, he proceeds to examine it through the magnifying glass and makes his decision from the fly-speck, instead of taking in the whole field of the public service.

I say again that the gentleman from Indiana when he congratulated himself that this officer had brought about a return to the "days of the fathers" must have had in view that lengthy and learned decision of the First Comptroller upon the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses of the Treasury Department, an appropriation covering ten thousand items, which it would be impossible to specify, the appropriation for that reason being called "miscellaneous." When the Secretary of the Treasury desired to buy $50 worth of car-tickets to give to messengers to pay their fares as they went from one part of this city of magnificent distances to another upon his errands, this Comptroller examined the law and said that this miscellaneous fund would not cover car-tickets. Why he so ruled I never understood until the gentleman from Indiana just told us that we were returning to the "days of the fathers." In the "days of the fathers" there were no street-cars, and no car-tickets; therefore an expenditure of that kind could not be drawn from this miscellaneous fund. [Laughter.] That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HEWITT obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] proceeds I desire to remind my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] of the provision of the Constitution, which he no doubt remembers very well, that—

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Certainly a public officer who would administer his office in disregard of this provision, who would allow money to be drawn from the Treasury which had not been appropriated to the specific object, would be liable to condemnation.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, I have no controversy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The First Comptroller is the creature of the law. He must obey the law. The law may be very unreasonable, and it is quite possible the First Comptroller may take unreasonable views of the law, and he may have done so in many cases, and they will come up for consideration from time to time. But in this particular case he has decided rightly. I have no controversy whatever with him, but in his own letter to me he says it is a hardship, and Congress can correct it.

There is no controversy about the merits. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is quite mistaken in the view he takes of this matter. He says he regrets the introduction of the amendment, because it increases this salary. It does nothing of the sort. It gives this unfortunate young gentleman what he had before.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only for two years?

Mr. HEWITT. Unfortunately, when a man living at $480 a year has increased his expenses to $600 and has to get back again to $480 a year it is a greater hardship and more difficult to do. Besides, out of that $480 he has to give back $120 he had for the last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the gentleman make inquiry in reference to the salary?

Mr. HEWITT. I made inquiries as to these salaries everywhere. To clear the thing up I will ask to put in the RECORD my letter to the First Comptroller and his reply. In this case there is no disagreement about the fact and the law, and I hope the committee will make it possible for the Secretary of State to do an act of justice to a deserving young man.

The correspondence referred to by Mr. HEWITT is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., January 8, 1886.

MY DEAR JUDGE: I am afraid in your zeal for the public service you have inadvertently done an injustice to the interpreter of the consulate at Constantinople. I happen to know this gentleman, who is an exceedingly accomplished young man, and has very important functions to perform, as he must appear in court in all cases affecting American citizens, and is in reality the only person capable of taking care of their interests. His salary was so ridiculously low that I recommended the Department some years ago to make an increase in the shape of clerk-hire, and he received $120 a year in addition to his salary of $480 as interpreter. This, however, only gave him $600 a year, which was entirely inadequate for his support. Subsequently on my suggestion the allowance was made $400 in lieu of $120, which would have given him a salary of $880 a year, a sum entirely inadequate for his support, but as he had some means he was able to get along with it. I inclose you herewith a letter just received from him, showing the straits in which he has been placed by your decision that the allowance for clerk-hire was unlawful, so that he is not only reduced to the salary of $480 a year, but is compelled to return the $100 which he had received as his first quarter's allowance as clerk. I must trouble you to read his letter, although it is somewhat long, because I think it will better explain than I can the embarrassment in which he is placed, and will, as I hope, lead you to reconsider your decision. Of course if there be no discretion we must make some provision in the diplomatic and consular bill to meet this case, because so long as we maintain a consulate at Constantinople at all we must have an interpreter, and the interpreter must live. I do not myself see any reason why an interpreter can not also be a clerk; nor why, if the allowance be insufficient to sustain two persons, one man might not have both salaries. At any rate, in this case there is no abuse, but there is a real hardship, which I hope you will be able to overcome. Please return the letter of Mr. Demetriades, with such a review as will enable me to put his mind at rest and relieve him from the suffering in which your decision has placed him.

Sincerely, yours,

ABRAM S. HEWITT.

Hon. MILTON J. DURHAM,
First Comptroller, Treasury Department.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1886.

SIR: I have carefully read the letter of Mr. D. N. Demetriade to you of December 21, 1885, as well as yours of January 8, 1886, in regard to the disallowance of $110 in the accounts of Consul-General Heap at Constantinople, being the amount charged in his account as having been paid by him to Mr. Demetriades for one quarter's clerkship and exchange.

I can not reconsider or change the decision I made in the matter, as I think I decided the same in accordance with law.

Section 1765 of the Revised Statutes says:

"No officer in any branch of the public service, or any other person whose salary, pay, or emoluments are fixed by law or regulations, shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance or compensation."

Mr. Demetriades, acting as interpreter of the consul-general at Constantinople, was an officer. His pay was fixed at $480 per year. Now, the above section declares "no officer in any branch of the public service * * * shall receive any additional pay, extra allowance or compensation, in any form whatever, for the disbursement of public money, or for any other service or duty whatever, unless the same is authorized by law, and the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance or compensation." How can Mr. Demetriades receive any additional pay for any other work he may do unless "the appropriation therefor explicitly states that it is for such additional pay, extra allowance or compensation?" I admit that a man may hold two distinct compatible offices and receive pay for both, when it clearly appears that Congress intended he should do so; but that is certainly not the case here. There is nothing to indicate that he was to have additional pay for his clerical work; and he therefore comes within the inhibition of section 1765.

I have been compelled to pass upon this section frequently since I have been in office, by reason of efforts on the part of very many employés of the Government to get compensation for what they call extra work or pay for two offices. The case of Mr. Demetriades may be a hard one, but you are aware that I can not provide against that. Congress must do that. I can only construe the law as I find it. I would cheerfully allow Mr. Demetriades what he claims if I could conscientiously do so.

I return herewith the letter of Mr. Demetriades.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BELMONT. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York. It is in the line of the action of the committee yesterday. The committee adopted an amendment, which I have presented under the instruction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in regard to the contingent fund for foreign missions, and like this it was also offered at the instance of the First Comptroller and seems proper.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to oppose this amendment. It is a small matter, it is true, but the policy of the committee is not to allow new legislation on appropriation bills. It is in violation of the spirit of the rule we adopted at the beginning of this Congress.

While it may be true this is a small item, still we can not undertake to cure whatever may be imperfect in the consular and diplomatic service of the Government upon an appropriation bill. It has been deemed unwise to do so, as shown by the rule adopted at the beginning of this session prohibiting legislation upon general appropriation bills.

I do not think the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department is subject to the criticism made against him this morning. We can not be too careful in appropriating the public money, and executive officers can not be too careful in construing the law while paying out the public money, because we all know there is a constant pressure upon the heads of these Departments to yield to the most liberal interpretation of the law.

There is a constant clamor now by many of the new ministers and consuls recently sent abroad to foreign countries for increased salary and expenses.

We can not undertake to regulate all these things in an intelligent and proper way upon an appropriation bill. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been considering a bill on this particular subject upon the basis of the services rendered by our various representatives abroad. This has not been thoroughly done since 1856. It ought to be done again. To that when it is brought into the House we can submit amendments which will not be in violation of the spirit of the rule of this House prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills.

The salary of the mission in reference to which the pending amendment has been offered was increased some time ago 25 per cent. Yesterday an increase was voted for a steam-launch for it. Now we are asked to increase the compensation for interpreter at this place.

Mr. HEWITT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is to give him what he was getting before.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It is to give him by law what he heretofore got in violation of law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What the First Comptroller regarded as violation of law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. He is the officer to interpret the law, and we are not; I think we had better let all these things go until they can be properly considered.

The whole diplomatic and consular service needs reclassification and rearrangement. Owing to the great progress in telegraphy, means of travel, and intercommunication, as well as the advance in commerce and civilization and enlightenment, the diplomatic service has become less important and the consular service more important. Some consulates that for commercial reasons have risen to greater importance are not adequately paid, while others are paid too much. The system of consular fees is sadly in need of correction. Some of the less important missions might well be consolidated and the number of officials somewhat reduced and unnecessary expenses cut off without detriment to the service. But under our rules this, if done at all, must be done upon another bill, for it changes existing laws.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of my friend from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN, to the fact that the whole question of economy here turns upon something like $140; whereas a moment ago there was a bill here presented, for which there was no constitutional authority that I have been able to discover, requiring if adopted the payment by this Government of about the sum of $147,000, and he did not open his lips to oppose it.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with what my friend from Georgia on the committee has said. There was an effort on the part of the committee to put nothing in the bill which would subject it to the point of order, and consequently we left out many things which might have been introduced and which we would have been glad to insert had it not been for that.

Now, this amendment has been offered by a gentleman not on the committee. It has escaped the operation of the point of order, and it is in line with what the committee would have been glad to do had it not been for the fact that it subjected such measures to the point of order. It is in line with what everybody admits ought to be done; and having escaped the point of order we ought to secure it while in our power, and not wait until another general bill is reported to cover all of the defects of which complaint is so justly made.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I differ with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts in regard to his views on this matter. There have been demands made upon the committee from the employés of nearly all of our foreign service, and while this particular item may have escaped the point of order, as he suggests, I am satisfied that the friends of these different consuls have failed to offer amendments in their behalf, knowing that we were pursuing the policy of preserving the appropriations hitherto made. Now, we ought to follow out the same principle in regard to every one of them. If we are going to set aside the system which has been inaugurated, and make different appropriations from those which have been made, instead of applying the uniform rule to this appropriation bill as heretofore, the effect of such a departure would be simply to embarrass the Department.

There are none of these interpreters or clerks who do not desire an increase of salary, and I concur with my friend from Indiana in saying that it was wise in the First Comptroller in not attempting to legislate upon this subject. He has before him the law upon the statute-book. He has taken that and interpreted it as he finds it and as his duty requires him to do.

Mr. RICE. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina has he acted equally wise in asking the House to legislate?

Mr. COX. Most unquestionably. If he wants different legislation, if he sees the necessity or importance of it, it is his duty to suggest it and get it through this body, and not through any interpretation which he may give to existing law. That would be most unwise; and for that reason I say that he has acted most properly in the course pursued. Judicial as well as constructive legislation by departments is always unwise, and it will be unwise here. While there may be merits, and undoubtedly there are merits in the individual case presented, in this particular case the interpreter has the advantage of having some gentleman upon the floor who has been there and knows the facts which surround him; and had members of this House been at the different courts throughout the world where our legations are established they would no doubt have found many other equally meritorious cases which would have been advocated in the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question for information. Has the State Department made any order making a special allowance to this officer—that is, the present Secretary of State? What I wish to know is whether or not, prior to this ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Secretary of State made any allowance, or a special allowance out of this fund, for this officer?

Mr. HEWITT. He had.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, as I understand it, the present Secretary of State finds, in view of the ruling of the Comptroller, which may be right, that the sum of this allowance is not sufficient?

Mr. HEWITT. I do not know as to that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has he made any recommendation?

Mr. COX. He makes no recommendation.

Mr. BELMONT. He holds that he is precluded from making the allowance.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, I understand, the Secretary of State holds that he is precluded from making an order granting the allowance?

Mr. COX. The Secretary of State has made no recommendation, as I understand it, in the matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then if the point of order is withdrawn a vote can be taken upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BELMONT. That is my suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York will be again read.

The amendment of Mr. HEWITT was again reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the next section of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before leaving this section I desire to offer a further amendment. I want to move to strike out the words in lines 375, 376, and 377:

> No greater portion of this sum than $400 shall be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I reserve the point of order, but am willing to hear a statement by the gentleman from Kentucky in support of his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The object of the amendment is to leave to the State Department the distribution of this sum of $10,000 without the limitation that no greater portion of this sum than $400 be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year.

The idea I had in offering the amendment was that the State Department would know better the exigencies of any particular consulate, the circumstances of the places, and the expense of living than we could or the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It does not increase the amount or the number of persons employed among whom and for whose benefit this sum shall be distributed. It simply removes the limitation on the discretion of the State Department.

Mr. BELMONT. It seems to me this would be adopting a new principle. While I did not care to raise the point of order against the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], the object of which was to render the law more specific and limit the discretion of the accounting officer, this amendment would seem to extend the discretion of the Department. Although it is a small matter, I make the point of order against the amendment as changing existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York indicate to the Chair what the exising law on the subject is?

Mr. BELMONT. The existing law is that no greater portion of this sum than $400 be allowed to any one consulate in any one year. This is the law according to the last appropriation bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I understand the point made by the gentleman from New York it is that in the last appropriation bill, perhaps in several preceding appropriation bills, the same sentence was included as in this appropriation, that no greater portion of this sum than $400 be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year.

I do not think the rule of order the House has adopted is applicable here. It does not apply to a mere limitation in a former appropriation bill as to how a particular appropriation shall be expended. I do not think that can be considered as having the force of continuing law so that it can not be changed in an appropriation bill. It expires of necessity at the end of the year for which the appropriation is made. It does not continue longer than the distribution of that particular money under that particular appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed, although he has not the law before him, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] states, that the existing law is the same as in this paragraph to which the gentleman from Kentucky offers his amendment to strike out the portion indicated. Under clause 3 of Rule XXI, the Chair considers that the amendment changes existing law, and therefore is not in order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know that the Chair precisely caught the point I was endeavoring to make. My point is that this is no longer existing law; that the words in the rule "existing law" mean necessarily a continuing law, a statute by which and under which certain appropriations are permanently paid for certain permanent officers; that therefore it does not change any existing law to put into a new appropriation a statement what shall be done with the money appropriated under that bill for objects which already exist by operation of law. The consulate exists, the consular clerk exists. He is not given any fixed salary. There is no fixed amount appropriated for him under any law or for any of the expenses of that consulate. Whatever appropriation has been made expires from the very necessity of the case at the expiration of the year for which that particular appropriation has been made.

Now, a new bill making a new appropriation for the objects created by the law to which no fixed salaries have been given certainly can not come under that rule of order, as it appears to me. The distinction between the words in the rule "existing law" and an appropriation bill seems a clear one. One is a permanent statute. An appropriation bill is simply a mode of justifying the officers of the Government in paying out certain sums of money therein set apart for the objects therein mentioned.

Mr. BURROWS. May I be permitted to say one word upon this point of order, because it involves an important question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the gentleman from Kentucky is entirely right in his construction of this rule. I think in determining the question whether a provision of an appropriation bill does violence to that rule the only question is whether it changes existing law. Now a provision in an appropriation bill, which appropriation bill is now in force, simply providing the manner in which the money shall be distributed, is not existing law, in my judgment, in the sense of that rule. I think it is all determined by this consideration: If when the appropriation bill dies or the appropriation for the year expires there is a provision in that bill which would float into the general statutes of the country, then that is existing law; but if a provision dies with the bill, then it is not. Now certainly this does.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RICE. I desire to say a single word on the amendment. The amendment, I have no doubt, is in accordance with the wish of whoever might be Secretary of State. As will be seen by all, if there is no limit to the allowance he may make to any one consulate out of this sum which is appropriated for general purposes for all the consulates he will be overwhelmed by requests from every one on account of emergencies for more than the $400. Every one will want a little more. If he has a provision of law which restricts the amount to $400, he can say no at once, without any partiality to any one, and can avoid a great deal of trouble and importunity to which he would otherwise be exposed. It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment is not one which it will be good policy to adopt.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, while I did not hear my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] very distinctly, as nearly as I could at this distance catch the drift of his words I agree with him, for I must say, as a practical fact in the operation of the Department, that this limitation is one which serves the purpose of wholesome administration and does not hamper it. The administration of the State Department is now, and always is, beset with applications, with pleas from every quarter of the globe, for more assistance in each of the great consulates and in many of the small ones, and the answer can be made at once by referring to the law which fixes the limit at $400. And that is not an unreasonable limit when you remember that Congress, after having carefully scanned the whole service, with the estimates of the Department in hand, has already provided what it believes is a proper allowance of clerk-hire for every consulate in the service that needs an allowance for clerk-hire at all. The limit of $400 is one by which I believe the Department of State will be aided rather than hampered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Of course I differ from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] with great deference and with great reluctance, because I have had no practical experience in these matters and he has had a great deal; but if I catch the drift of his argument it is that we ought to have this limitation upon the power of the State Department because it would enable the Department in answering applications from the different consuls to say, "I would be very glad indeed to help you, but my hands are tied." In other words, I understand his point to be that the State Department would be very glad to have the ungraciousness of a refusal taken from its own shoulders and put upon ours. Mr. Chairman, that does not seem to be a good reason for legislating. The State Department understands the exigencies of these various consulates which need this money. It is a part of the duty of the State Department to understand that subject, and it is a part of the duty of the Department when they do understand it to carry out into executive action the preliminary knowledge which it is the duty of the Department to acquire. And whether the State Department would like us to take the responsibility of the ungraciousness of their reply or not is not really the gist of the matter.

The real question is, which department is the best to distribute this money? I say undoubtedly the executive department, that has charge of it, rather than the legislative department, which merely appropriates the money. Undoubtedly the Committee on Foreign Affairs have gone over this matter carefully. No doubt they know a great deal more about it than I do, and I do not undertake to say that there ought to be more than $400 paid out at any given place; but I do undertake to say that it may be so during the current year; that it is contingently probable that it will be so, and that it is better to leave some flexibility for overdistribution of this money than to make the rule inflexible. The sum is very small, $400, and the maximum is a very scant support. It may be that at a given time, at a given place, and under given circumstances more will be needed. If not, this does no harm. If so, it does do harm not to have this amendment, and that is the view I had in offering it.

I withdraw the formal amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and it was lost.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 438, these words:

"Provided, That such parts of said reports as contain novel personal experiences of the writers, portions of standard history, legendary, romantic, and other historical episodes, descriptions of scenery, accounts of royal and other courtly fetes, unnecessary scientific disquisitions, and individual opinions on political economy, shall not be printed at the public expense."

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MCADOO. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. Let me talk a few minutes about the merits of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. We are just getting some good political economy in those reports now, and I do not want it stopped.

Mr. MCADOO. I do not want any theoretical political economy in them, but do not object to the statement of social and economic facts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment sounds facetious it is because the subject has been made ridiculous by many of the consuls who write these reports. I do not want to curb the wild and fruitful imagination of such gentlemen as the one who represented us a few years ago at the court of Greece and who filled many pages in one of his reports recounting how he had danced with the queen of that country.

We all remember how the poetic imagery of J. Meredith Reed used to run riot through these monthly magazines of the State Department. What American citizen does not remember that bright and glowing description of scenery given by Hon. Sapodilla Scruggs, formerly of Georgia, late of Patagonia! I have before me a volume of the consular reports, picked up at random. One consul at Cuba proceeds to tell how much he paid the colored guide to take him across the island; of his daring adventures and masterly horsemanship in his long journeys; he describes the beauty and magnificence of the scenery, the grand luxuriance of the tall palm trees, the ferocity of the wild beasts, the cooling locust leaves that protected his surging brain from the tropical sun, the dusty cars, the plenitude of asses in the roads, the water he had to drink, and his personal expenses. Another consul, writing from the East, begins with a long scientific disquisition, covering some ten pages, about the origin of coal, starting out with the trite theory, with which every school-boy is familiar, that it originates from vegetation.

If this powerful mind had not been sent to represent the Republic in the wilds of Australasia the United States and the world would be in ignorance of this great ray of scientific knowledge. Says he, "With regard to the origin of coal various theories have been advanced by scientists, all agreeing, however, that it is purely of a vegetable character." This original discovery must have made the consular brain ache. How refreshing this from a business statement of our relations with Australasia. Another consul, writing from China, fills up his report with a startling account of a village fire, telling how the bank building was about to be consumed by fire, and how the Chinese firemen rushed up to put it out—a mere matter of local news. Had not a wise Government established this literary bureau the whole Occident would remain in dense ignorance of the fact that "about 8 p. m. on June 3, 1882, a fire broke out in the town of Amoy, close to the Hong-Kong and Shanghai bank buildings, and, there being a strong northwest wind blowing at the time, the fire made considerable headway and threatened to become a serious conflagration, but at 10 p. m. it was extinguished by the roof of the burning house falling and smothering the flames." Pause and consider the importance of this startling international information. Think of the effect on commerce if the roof had not fallen, possibly leaving Hi Liver's butcher-shop to the fury of the flames. Another, writing from the antipodes, discusses the ethics of suretyship for a friend, and describes the workings of the mind of a man of "refined and delicate sensibilities."

So all through these reports. There are some exceptions. Some of these reports are very well written, and indeed valuable. But all through these volumes many of these consular officers simply write magazine articles. Now, I do not object to a good magazine article; it is very refreshing. But if these men want to write books of travel and glowing descriptions of scenery, let not their productions be printed at the public expense. They have no business in these volumes. They may tickle the vanity and please the personal friends of the writers, but they are not proper public documents.

I remember an instance in connection with the gentleman I alluded to a moment ago, our former minister to Greece. He was one of the galaxy of literary stars that contributed to this magazine. He told how nimbly the queen danced with him, described her dress, stating whether it was decollette or not; he no doubt thought the Grecian king very gracious in not being jealous when a man of his martial renown and personal charms danced with her majesty, his wife.

Mr. CANNON. Was that in a consular report?

Mr. MCADOO. I believe it was in a consular report.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, it was in the report of the minister.

Mr. MCADOO. I thank my friend from Indiana for the correction. That description was in the report of J. Meredith Read, our late minister to Greece.

I believe these reports, so far as our consuls are concerned, are now somewhat improved; but we want to have this evil stopped by legislation. The State Department should be authorized to put an end to it. No one would appreciate more than myself a fine description of Constantinople, the beauties of the Bosporus, with the "tapering summits of the tall minarets," of the mosques towering above the stream with a halo over all of oriental legends and millennial traditions; such a description from our imaginative, genial, soulful, and exiled friend Mr. Cox would certainly be worth reading. But Mr. Cox can find hundreds of publishers who will give to "the suffering millions of this country," as a gentleman lately from Colorado used to say, his book of travels telling about all these things, and there is no need of its being published at the Government Printing Office at the expense of the people. He can come here and read it to Congress. No one could resist his request for unanimous consent. Of course Mr. Cox will not waste his superb talents as a narrator and wit in these literary adjuncts of a versatile if not substantial diplomacy.

It is, however, an outrage upon men of literary ability like Mr. Cox and our consul at Glasgow, Bret Harte, that they should be obliged to enter a literary contest with Scruggs and Reed in contributing to these musty records articles which, thus published, are not appreciated, when private publishers would be glad to give to the world their views upon the scenery, the social habits, and the political economies of the countries in which they have traveled. I therefore sincerely hope that this amendment will be adopted. I believe it is in the line of positive and aggressive reform, and will result in substantial benefits to the consular service.

Mr. CANNON. I hope my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], whom I now see leaving the Hall, will remain, for I wish to make an allusion to him. No doubt it is his modesty which prompts him to retire.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], and especially to his remarks about the dispatches from our former minister to Greece. The remarks of the gentleman only show how the emanations of great minds, when handled and improved upon by competent people, pass into literature and become a part of the common property of us all, so that frequently we do not exactly know their origin. Now, the gentleman from New Jersey, in telling us about the dispatches of J. Meredith Reed, our Grecian minister, over ten years ago, did not know, I suspect, that he was using—I presume without leave or license—a speech of my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], made over ten years ago on the floor of this House upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. It was that speech of my colleague which brought him into notice all over the country and gave him his reputation—I mean his speech in which he quoted "The Maid of Athens," &c.

Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Give, oh, give me back my heart!
* * * *
Can I cease to love thee? No!
Ζώη μου, σάς ἀγαπῶ.

I recollect we extended his time for a second hour, so delighted were we in listening to his remarks. Of course the gentleman from New Jersey did not know that my colleague was entitled to all the credit of having discovered and brought to public notice those dispatches.

Now, having defended my colleague (whose modesty made him retire as soon as I rose) against this piracy upon his exclusive property, I yield the floor.

Mr. MCADOO. I had no knowledge that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] had ever commented on this subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is a legislative proposition sought to be attached to an appropriation bill, and, under the rule, is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. BELMONT. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move, in line 448, to strike out "one hundred and thirty" and in lieu thereof to insert "one hundred and fifty;" so it will read:

Expense of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent, postage, furniture, statistics, newspapers, freight, foreign and domestic, telegrams, advertising, messenger service, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and commercial agencies in the transaction of their business, $150,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division on that amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 21.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BELMONT. If the gentleman will withdraw his demand for a division I think I can satisfy this Committee of the Whole of the necessity and justice of the amendment which I have offered under the instructions of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted, of course, there will be no objection to the gentleman from New York explaining the amendment which he has moved.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed, no objection having been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from New York proceeds I wish to call attention to the fact that these contingencies have been increased some $20,000, and now it is proposed still further to increase them to the extent of $20,000.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I am as earnest a friend of economical administration of Government as any gentleman possibly can be on either side of this House. The necessity for this appropriation, moved in the amendment I have offered, is the reason why the Committee on Foreign Affairs have unanimously recommended the amendment which I have submitted. Although in the first instance we thought the Department might be able to get along with $130,000 appropriated in this paragraph, upon further inquiry it was found that during the last eight years this has been about the average limit of the cost of this service. A comparison of the books shows that one year differs very little from another in this respect, and that for a number of years the appropriations for consular contingent expenses have been less than the known requirements of the service, the deficit being supplied each year by a deficiency appropriation. For the past eight years the appropriations have been as follows:

Fiscal year.	General appropriation.	Deficiency.	Total.
1878	$115,000 00	$17,637 17	$132,637 17
1879	115,000 00	21,929 50	136,929 80
1880	115,000 00	29,511 75	144,511 75
1881	125,000 00	13,836 78	138,836 78
1882	135,000 00	16,983 19	151,983 19
1883	135,000 00	19,546 00	154,546 00
1884	110,000 00	41,598 56	151,598 56
1885	110,000 00	34,970 35	144,970 35

The result of the deficiencies in this particular branch of the service is not only to embarrass but to discredit American consuls abroad. I do not know whether this matter has been brought to the attention of the House hitherto, but it was a matter of surprise to the committee that for several years past American consuls have been subjected to this form of humiliation.

Under the law, Mr. Chairman, consuls are required to draw upon the State Department for the amounts expended by them in the discharge of their official duties. These drafts have been often dishonored and have been protested because the Department has not had the funds to meet them, and there are at present over $7,000 in drafts of consuls which remain dishonored. The House has received a communication from the Secretary of State, addressed to the Committee on Appropriations, asking for $40,000 in the deficiency bill to meet these drafts. While this has been called a contingent fund, the fact really is all the separate expenditures under this heading are made according to provisions of law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What is the amount of the current appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. BELMONT. It is $110,000, and I hope the House will give its attention to the present condition of these expenses under the last appropriation bill.

From a statement prepared by the disbursing officers of the State Department, with a view of asking Congress for an immediate defficiency appropriation of $40,000 to meet the expenses under this head for the current fiscal year, it appears that the expenditures for the contingent expenses of consulates for the first six months of the present fiscal year have been as follows:

Rent	$34,999 76
Postage	12,012 49
Stationery and blank forms	11,934 22
Furniture	1,669 85
Statistical information	2,142 42
Messengers and oriental writers	2,138 00
Traveling expenses	277 60
Miscellaneous	7,451 41
Expended by Department for stamps, flags, seals, &c	7,429 78
Total	80,055 77

It will be noticed that the expenditure for rent is at the rate of $70,000 a year, out of an entire appropriation of $110,000. This rent allowance is provided for by permanent statutes. Under section 1700 Revised Statutes consuls above the $1,000 grade may be allowed rent to the extent of 20 per cent. of their salaries. The consular salaries of this class for the present fiscal year amount to $345,000. Twenty per cent. of this sum would be $69,000, which leaves, at the current rate of expenditure, only $1,000 for the rents of all the feed consuls, who by section 1732 Revised Statutes are also entitled to receive such allowance for rent as may be approved by the Secretary of State.

The other main items of consular expenses are almost as certainly fixed in practice as that of rent, though not specifically established by law.

So it is not only impossible with the present appropriation to carry out the law in regard to rent, but in regard to other necessary expenses. The consuls of course can not be expected to pay office-rent out of their own pockets any more than the officials in the Department here can be expected to pay for the use of their offices in the public buildings. Consuls in carrying out their instructions under the law are required to draw upon this fund. They have so drawn, but their drafts have been protested and remain protested.

I desire to say on behalf of the committee we have had many appeals from ministers and consuls for increases which we were compelled to refuse.

We have presented what we deemed to be an economical bill. But from the very reasons of economy it seems to me that this method hitherto in practice of appropriating an amount of money known and proved to be below the absolute needs of a Department under the law, and then making the pretense of increased economy in the preparation of the bill as so constructed, with a view of appealing again to the House subsequently for a deficiency, is neither wise nor proper legislation, and in this case it is a vicious form of legislation and even discreditable, since it has discredited our own officials, and for these reasons I now ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The sum appropriated for the present fiscal year for contingent expenses of our foreign ministers is $75,000.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question? Does he not know that there is already a deficiency on that account?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I understand the ministers have overdrawn sums allowed for contingencies.

Mr. BELMONT. There is a deficiency, nevertheless.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no deficiency in the proper sense of the term, and there could not be a deficiency in such case without a violation of the law.

Mr. BELMONT. The manner in which these bills have been presented has compelled a deficiency in this fund; and the gentleman will find that it does exist and amounts to about $14,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am very confident that there is no proper deficiency. The law expressly declared the sum that might be expended during the fiscal year.

Mr. BELMONT. A deficiency, however, exists for foreign missions. The rule of the Department is different in regard to the consulates. That rule requires that the consuls shall be paid a certain amount for rent, &c., out of the contingent fund for consulates, whereas the Department, having been given a certain amount for foreign missions, can only distribute that amount among them. Nevertheless, under the present system, deficiencies have been introduced in both services, and provision has been made for them. In the present case a deficiency will have to be provided.

Mr. HOLMAN. I repeat, that under the present state of the law there can be no deficiency. That could only arise under a violation of the law; and it will be seen from the very items which make up this provision of contingent expenses that it would be impossible, without a violation of the law, to create a deficiency. The law expressly limits the sum that could be expended. The law indicates the purpose and extent of the expenditure, "for the purpose of enabling the President to provide such stationery, blank-books, seals, presses, blanks, &c., as he shall think necessary," &c., $75,000. Such are the terms and other provisions of the law; making allowance, as will be seen, for nearly every possible item of contingencies that ought to arise.

The law for this fiscal year appropriates for these purposes $75,000. The present bill appropriates $105,000, an increase of $30,000.

For the consulates the contingencies are stated in the law of the present fiscal year substantially as follows:

> For the purpose of enabling the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several consulates in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, and traveling and miscellaneous expenses, and for printing in the Department of State, $110,000.

The bill reported and now under consideration proposes to increase that amount $20,000, making it $130,000, and the amendment offered by the chairman increases that amount $20,000 more, making it $150,000. The increase to $130,000 was unjustifiable, and yet $20,000 more is to be added!

I take issue with gentlemen who speak of the possibility of an American citizen representing this Republic abroad, as minister or consul, being humiliated by its frugality in expenditure in the diplomatic and consular service. I do not consent to that form of speech.

Mr. BELMONT. Let me interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me complete the sentence. I do not consent that the service of a representative of this country in any foreign government, under any conditions, if he bears himself as becomes the representative of the republican institutions of his Government, can by any possibility be humiliated in his intercourse with foreign powers. Such speech is not admissible, certainly not here.

Sir, the highest dignity that can be bestowed upon an American citizen is that when brought into official relations with the jeweled and tinseled courts of Europe or elsewhere he represents the republican simplicity of his Government, and the highest honor that can gather around him springs from his deportment as an American gentleman, with the simplicity, dignity, and integrity of an American citizen engaged in the public affairs of a free people, and conscious that he represents greatness as well as the intelligent manhood of his country and its frugal expenditure of the taxes drawn from the labor of its people. Sir, the most honorable display that has occurred in our period of our republican institutions and system of government in the capitals of Europe was that made by Joseph A. Wright, of Indiana, minister to Prussia, passing with the independence of an American gentleman through the streets of Berlin and its great market-place with a market-basket upon his arm; and that still greater example of Elihu B. Washburne, in the midst of the fierce tumults of Paris, representing with the simplicity and dignity of an American citizen the power and manhood of this great Republic, standing undismayed in the presence of appalling public disorder, not supported by the glitter and tinsel, the power of wealth, or the splendor of courts, but by the simplicity and dignity that so well became him as a representative of the American people, with the flag of his country still floating when the flag and representative of every kingly court of Europe had gone down and disappeared before the fierce blast of the commune. This is the quality that should characterize the American minister abroad—republican simplicity and dignity and manhood; not the petty tinseled display of wealth, monarchical institutions, and courts. [Applause.]

Mr. BELMONT rose.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask if all this is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] are proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. How long will it last?

The CHAIRMAN. Until some gentleman demands the regular order.

Mr. STORM. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BELMONT. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. But debate on the amendment had closed and the committee was dividing. The gentleman then proceeded to explain the amendment by unanimous consent of the committee. The demand for the regular order cuts off all debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from New York to make any explanation he wishes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to make a further explanation of the pending amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BELMONT. I shall not detain the committee more than a moment, but I regretted at the time the gentleman from Indiana was speaking that he did not see fit to allow me to state that he must have misapprehended me. When I spoke of the humiliation to which our officials have been put under the present system of deficiency appropriations, that had nothing whatever to do with the amount of their salaries. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has been careful to retain the salaries according to existing law. What I referred to was the humiliation put upon consuls when drawing upon the State Department for expenditures authorized by law, and their being compelled to submit to having their drafts protested, and remaining protested until the deficiency bill comes in to make up the necessary amount.

Mr. RICE. Does not the evidence of the State Department show that for three years these expenses every year have exceeded $150,000, and that the drafts of the consuls have had to go to protest, to the dishonor of our name and of their credit?

Mr. BELMONT. That is so. And while the last bill appropriated $110,000, there is now a request from the Department for $40,000 more to be put in the deficiency bill, making $150,000, the very amount we are asking here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman think we can not get along as economically as our predecessors?

Mr. BELMONT. We are appropriating here the same amount as has been required heretofore.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have never appropriated so much.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the Secretary of State on this point be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The fund from the current fiscal year, as in the previous years, will doubtless be exhausted early in the last quarter, involving a deficit of some $40,000. The accounts presented cover expenses which the laws contemplate. Under the standing instructions of the Department the consuls draw for the amounts due them. These drafts are often necessarily dishonored for want of funds, and the accounts returned to the consuls until such time as a deficiency appropriation shall be available for their payment. This entails widespread hardship. Consuls are not in a position, and should not be expected, to advance money to the Government without interest, and it is unjust to ask it. The protest of a draft duly negotiated must often injure their local credit, and may even destroy it, leaving their situation actually critical. It also operates to injure the credit of the United States Government and unfavorably affect our commercial interests in quarters where the development of influence and a permanent market may be desirable. The difficulty increases with the remoteness and isolation of the consul. As a fact, at some distant posts it has become impossible to negotiate even a salary draft. For instance, drafts must be sent from Apia to San Francisco for collection, and three or four months lost in receiving the amount. From every point of view it is both advisable and just that sufficient provision should be made for items of charge which the statute directs. A margin for unforeseen and contingent but perfectly legitimate demands is plainly essential. The lowest amount without margin which the Department can recommend is $150,000, and this is not reasonably adequate to the great increase in the consular service during the past ten years.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 43.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Adams, John J.	Dibble,	Lore,	Sawyer,
Aiken,	Dingley,	Lowry,	Snyder,
Anderson, J. A.	Dowdney,	Lyman,	Spriggs,
Arnot,	Fisher,	Matson,	Stewart, J. W.
Barbour,	Fleeger,	McComas,	St. Martin,
Boutelle,	Gallinger,	McKinley,	Stone, E. F.
Boyle,	Gibson, C. H.	Milliken,	Strait,
Bragg,	Gibson, Eustace	Mills,	Tarsney,
Brumm,	Gilfillan,	Mitchell,	Taylor, E. B.
Buchanan,	Hammond,	Muller,	Taylor, I. H.
Burleigh,	Hanback,	Neece,	Taylor, Zach.
Burnes,	Harris,	Negley,	Thomas, J. R.
Butterworth,	Henley,	Norwood,	Townshend,
Carleton,	Hepburn,	O'Donnell,	Trigg,
Caswell,	Holmes,	O'Hara,	Wellborn,

Crain,	Ketcham,	Pindar,	Worthington.
Culberson,	King,	Pirce,
Curtin,	Libbey,	Randall,
Daniel,	Long,	Riggs,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration House bill 6392 and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported to the House the names of the absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. HAMMOND, is detained at his room by sickness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the absence of the gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, is caused by his having been severely hurt by a fall. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. It appears that there are eighty-nine members absent; two hundred and thirty-three members having answered—more than a quorum.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under the rule, resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. With a view to promoting the transaction of the public business I shall not insist further on a quorum upon this vote. I have no objection to the Chair now announcing the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes are 104, the noes 43. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote desired on any of the amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a separate vote upon the last amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the other amendments agreed to in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask that the amendment upon which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] demands a separate vote be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. It will be, when the House comes to vote upon it. If there be no other demand for a separate vote the question will be taken upon agreeing to the other amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 448, strike out "$130,000" and insert "$150,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 74, not voting 103; as follows:

Mr. MILLS with Mr. PAYSON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to the Committee on Naval Affairs to sit during the sessions of the House for the next five days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call up House bill No. 6657 to regulate interstate commerce and to prevent unjust discrimination by common carriers.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, if the House determines to consider it.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that by special order of the House it has been provided—

That Thursday, the 13th day of May, 1886, after the second call of committees, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Agriculture, this order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills, and whether so interfered with on that day or not, shall be a continuing order until the bills presented by said committee shall be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The order which the gentleman cites was made by the House on April 30; but on the 16th of March the House by a suspension of the rules set the 13th day of April for the consideration of House bill No. 6657, and provided that its consideration should continue from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the resolution just referred to by the Speaker does not "set apart" the 13th day of April, but simply makes the bill a special order for that day. The resolution which I have read, and which takes effect to-day after the second call of committees, sets apart this day for the special business of the Committee on Agriculture, and it does not except prior orders. I submit, therefore, that the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is not in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I call attention to the language used in the two orders. The order of March 16 provides that "the 13th day of April be fixed for the consideration of House bill No. 6657," and "that its consideration be continued from day to day until finally disposed of." The order of April 30 provides that the 13th of May be "set apart." The difference in the language of the two resolutions is that one provides that a day be "fixed," and the other provides that a day be "set apart." Both are continuing orders. There is simply a difference of verbiage, the effect being exactly the same in both cases.

The SPEAKER. But upon examination of the two orders the Chair finds that in one case the bill referred to is simply made a special order, and in the other case a day is "set apart"—dedicated for the consideration of certain business.

Mr. REAGAN. The inquiry I make is, what is the difference between "setting apart" a day and "fixing" a day?

The SPEAKER. There is a very considerable difference. When a day is "set apart" for the consideration of certain measures that day must be appropriated for that purpose, and the business can not be interfered with except by raising the question of consideration against each measure as it is called up or by revoking the order, a motion to do which can only be entertained by unanimous consent. The Chair was at first under the impression that the two orders were alike in their terms, in which case the special order which the gentleman from Texas desires to call up would have had priority over that of the gentleman from Missouri, because first adopted. But upon examination the Chair finds that the two orders are not in the same language.

Mr. REAGAN. If the business which the gentleman from Missouri desires to call up is in order to-day, can I not antagonize it——

The SPEAKER. Certainly. When the gentleman from Missouri makes the motion, for instance, to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill, if that motion be rejected, then the gentleman from Texas can call up his special order.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I ask the House to refuse to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the House will not do any such thing. [Laughter.] Under the order which I have read, I first call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of precaution, I desire to state that under this order I propose to present for consideration, besides the bill I have just mentioned, a bill (H. R. 2933) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto; a bill (H. R. 7208) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, and for other purposes," approved May 29, 1884; a bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; a bill (H. R. 2293) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes——

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Chair holds that this day is set apart for the consideration of business of the Committee on Agriculture to the exclusion of a prior special order, will that ruling operate beyond this day? Will the business of the Committee on Agriculture go on from day to day until it is disposed of? I want to know whether anything else can be done this session. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, it is a continuing order.

The SPEAKER. It is true it is made a continuing order, but the Chair thinks the only day "set apart" or dedicated is to-day. After to-day it will be in order for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to call up his measures, but the House will all the time have the right to decide the question of consideration.

Mr. EDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDEN. Can the question of consideration be raised under this order?

The SPEAKER. Of course it can. If a bill called up by the gentleman from Missouri is in the House, any gentleman can raise the question of consideration against that bill. But the bill to which the gentleman from Missouri first calls attention is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the only way to prevent the consideration of that bill is to refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. REAGAN. At the proper time I desire to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that if a bill called up is in the House, the question of consideration can be raised immediately. But if it is in Committe of the Whole on the state of the Union, the only way to defeat its consideration is by refusing to go into Committee of the Whole to consider it. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the bill which has been named by him.

Mr. HATCH. Unless the gentleman from Texas will consent this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Motions are pending and the Chair will state the condition of the question. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and one hour to which the committee was entitled under the rule has expired. The motion pending was that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that a motion was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to limit debate to one hour and an amendment by the same gentleman to limit the debate to ten minutes. The question now is upon the amendment to limit debate to ten minutes, on which the previous question had been ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will be allowed to withdraw it.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the amendment to limit debate to ten minutes, and now move an amendment to make it two hours instead of one.

Mr. REAGAN. I think there are serious defects in the bill, and notice I believe has been given of two or three substitutes to be offered for it. I doubt such a bill creating a new department of Government can be considered properly in two hours. I think a longer time should be allowed.

Mr. HATCH. How much time do you suggest?

Mr. REAGAN. Three or four hours.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to say three hours. I wish the gentleman to have all the time he wishes.

Mr. HATCH'S motion as amended, to limit general debate to three hours, was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REAGAN. I propose to ask for the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The only way to prevent consideration is to refuse to adopt the motion to go into committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 36.

Mr. REAGAN. I give notice that to-morrow after the morning hour I will move to take up the interstate-commerce bill.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 5190, enlarging the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture. By order of the House all general debate has been limited to three hours.

Mr. REAGAN. At what time will it be in order to offer a substitute for this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman has been recognized to speak he can offer his substitute for consideration. It can not be voted upon until after the debate is closed.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to have the substitute I desire to offer read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire the floor at this time?

Mr. HATCH. He does.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks to have his substitute read at this time.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to the substitute being read and coming in at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute may be read for information.

Mr. REAGAN. I submit the following substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be at the seat of Government an executive department to be known as the department of industries, and a secretary of industries, who shall be the head thereof.

SEC. 2. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of agriculture, and to superintend said division a commissioner of agriculture, who shall be a practical agriculturist, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall be entitled to receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of collecting and disseminating all important and useful information concerning agriculture, and also concerning such scientific matters and industrial pursuits as relate to the interests of agriculture, the secretary of industries shall organize the following bureaus in the division of agriculture, namely:

First. The bureau of agricultural products, which shall include divisions of botany, entomology, and chemistry; and the chief of which bureau, who shall be a practical agriculturist, shall investigate the modes of farming in the several States and Territories, and shall report such practical information as shall tend to increase the profits of the farmer; respecting the various methods; the crops most profitable in the several sections; the preferable varieties of seeds, vines, plants, and fruits; fertilizers, implements, buildings, and similar matters.

Second. The bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and use; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

Third. The bureau of lands, the chief of which shall investigate and report upon the resources or capabilities of the public or other lands for farming, stock-raising, timber, manufacturing, mining, or other industrial uses. And all powers and duties vested in the commission now known as the Geological Survey, together with all clerks, employés, and agents, and all instruments, records, books, papers, &c., are hereby transferred to the department of industries. And the secretary of industries shall institute such investigations and collect and report such information, facts, and statistics relative to the mines and mining of the United States, and facilities for their ventilation and general operations, as may be deemed of value and importance.

SEC. 4. That in addition to the duties imposed by chapter 10, title 7, of the Revised Statutes, the secretary of industries shall cause to be collected and report the agricultural statistics of the United States; and, in addition, all important information or statistics relating to industrial education and agricultural colleges; to markets and prices; to modes and cost of transporting agricultural products and live-stock to their final market; to the demand, supply, and prices in foreign markets; to the location, number, and products of manufacturing establishments of whatever sort, their sources of raw material, methods, markets, cost of transportation, and prices; to such commercial or other conditions as may affect the market value of farm products or the interests of the industrial classes of the United States. And the secretary is hereby authorized to establish such divisions in this bureau, and to make such monthly or other reports as he shall deem most effective for the prompt dissemination of such reliable information respecting crops and domestic and foreign markets as will be of service to the farmers, miners, mechanics, laborers, or other industrialists of the United States.

SEC. 5. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of labor, which shall be under the superintendence of the Commissioner of Labor; and the Bureau of Labor, as provided for in chapter 127 of the acts of the Forty-eighth Congress, with its officers and duties, shall be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the department of industries.

SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of industries a division of commerce, and to superintend said division a commissioner of commerce, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 7. That all divisions and subdivisions, bureaus or parts thereof, heretofore attaching to the Treasury Department by virtue of the provisions of chapter 10, of title 7, of the Revised Statutes, relating to the Bureau of Statistics, which shall hereafter be known as the bureau of external commerce; title 48, relating to commerce and navigation; title 49, relating to the regulation of vessels in foreign commerce; title 50, relating to the regulation of vessels in domestic commerce; title 52, relating to the regulation of steam-vessels; title 56, relating to the Coast Survey; title 55, relating to lights and buoys; sections 4801, 4802, 4803, 4804, 4805, and 4806, of chapter 1, title 59, relating to hospital relief for seamen; and chapter 265 of the acts of the Forty-fifth Congress, second session, relating to the Life-Saving Service, or by virtue of any law amendatory of said several provisions, or regulations in pursuance thereof, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be parts of the division of commerce in the department of industries; and the secretary of industries shall establish in said division of commerce a bureau of internal commerce, to be organized and governed as other bureaus in said division.

SEC. 8. That all duties devolving upon the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the several provisions mentioned in the preceding section shall, from and after the passage of this act, be performed by the secretary of industries. The authority conferred and the duties imposed by said several provisions upon the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be exercised and discharged by the commissioner of commerce. All bonds authorized by any of the provisions aforesaid to be made payable to the Register of the Treasury shall, from and after the passage of this act, be made payable to the commissioner of commerce.

SEC. 9. That section 158, title 4, of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the words: "Eighth. The department of industries."

SEC. 10. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with the present organization of the various departments, divisions, subdivisions, and bureaus embraced herein, except with reference to the transfer thereof to the department of industries, subject to the general provisions of law relating to regulations in the various Departments of the Government and appointments to office therein.

SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HATCH. I yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this session I introduced a bill to establish a department of agriculture, with a secretary appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to preside over the department, with equal rank and pay as the secretaries now constituting the executive Cabinet. The bill now under consideration provides for a department of agriculture and labor, and while it is broader and more comprehensive than the bill introduced by me, it is not materially different, and I am most heartily in favor of its passage.

The object of the bill is to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture. It is based on a belief that it is the duty of our Government to give to American farmers all such important and practical information as will insure larger yields and better profits, more encouragement and greater protection to agriculture and labor.

From the center to the circumference of our indissoluble Union the people, animated by a desire for fraternity, reconciliation, and prosperity, have "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks," and there has never been a more opportune time than the present for giving to agriculture and labor the appreciation and recognition they deserve.

Our Republic is more than a hundred years old, and during all these years agriculture has been the foundation and chief support of nearly every other business.

The census of 1880 shows that about one-half of the population of the United States live by agriculture, and the vast contributions made from farms constitute the material prosperity of our Republic and its greatest wealth.

This great and growing country is now the foremost agricultural country in the world, leading all others in the aggregate yield of corn, cotton, wheat, and tobacco, and many other products of the soil.

New Orleans exceeds all other cities in the value of her cotton trade. Louisville is the "queen city" of the world in her tobacco trade, and Chicago has no equal as a grain-distributing point, and five-sixths of all the exports of this nation go directly from the farms.

In the rush and push of business but few persons look carefully at the vast and splendid results of agriculture in the United States. It is estimated that the capital invested in this industry amounts to $28,000,000,000. While the most careful estimates place the annual value of manufactured products at $6,000,000,000, the farms of our country furnish in value more than $9,000,000,000 annually to help feed and clothe the world. The total sales of the United States to other nations in 1880 amounted to $823,946,352. Of these the agricultural products constituted 83 per cent., worth $683,010,976, while all other products were but 17 per cent.; or, in other words, our agricultural exports are five times greater than all other exports. Yet less than 8 per cent. of our agricultural products go to foreign markets, 93 per cent. being used at home. For the last sixty years the proportion of agricultural to total exports averages over 81 per cent., as is shown by the following facts published by the former Statistician of the Agricultural Department:

The immense increase of our exports in sixty years past makes an extraordinary showing, but it is a more remarkable fact that with the growth of population and of varied industries the agricultural surplus should more than maintain its proportion to total exports. The customs figures are as follows:

Year.	Exports.	Agricultural exports.
			Per cent.
1820	$51,683,640	$41,657,673	80.60
1830	58,524,878	48,095,184	82.18
1840	111,660,561	92,548,067	82.93
1850	134,900,233	108,605,713	80.57
1860	316,242,423	256,560,972	81.14
1870	455,208,341	361,188,483	79.34
1880	823,946,353	683,010,976	82.90

In the last ten years the exports of agriculture have nearly doubled, and at the same time the proportion to total exports has increased.

The great progress and prominence of breadstuffs and provisions in this record is shown in connection with cotton, which fifty years ago constituted about five-eighths of the exports of agriculture. The decennial record is as follows:

Year.	Breadstuffs.	Provisions.	Cotton.
1830	$7,071,767	$2,971,002	$29,674,883
1840	13,535,926	3,503,704	63,870,307
1850	13,066,509	10,927,485	71,984,616
1860	24,422,310	16,612,443	191,806,555
1870	72,250,933	29,175,539	227,027,624
1880	288,036,835	127,043,242	211,535,905

These are but samples to illustrate the immensity of this great industry, but the picture may be enlarged by showing the wonderful increase of our crops and chief products in the decade between 1870 and 1880, as shown by the Commissioner of Agriculture:

Article.	Quantity.	Year.
Cotton produced in United States.....bales...	4,352,317	1870
Do .....do.....	6,000,000	1880
Corn raised in United States.....bushels...	760,940,594	1870
Do .....do.....	1,754,449,435	1880
Wheat crop of United States .....do.....	287,745,626	1870
Do .....do	407,859,033	1880
Tobacco crop amounted to.....pounds...	262,735,341	1870
Do .....do.....	446,286,889	1880
Oats produced in United States.....bushels...	282,107,157	1870

The increase of agricultural products was nearly 100 per cent. in these ten years, and in the last year of this decade our cattle exports rose from $13,000,000 to $14,000,000, beef from $7,000,000 to $12,000,000, pork from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000.

The labor of this country is to-day what the sunshine is to the universe, what the heart is to the body—it gives health and life and vigor; it makes the anvils ring, the spindles whizz, the furnaces glow, the fields beautiful with abundant harvest, and places our agricultural, manufactured, and mineral products in the front rank among the productions of the world. Is it asking too much then for agriculture and labor to be represented in the executive Cabinet? Almost every intelligent and civilized nation in the world has given more prominence to agriculture than the United States.

It is neither new nor unprecedented to elevate the Department of Agriculture to an Executive Department and place it in charge of a secretary.

In France there are nine executive departments. A minister of agriculture is at the head of one of them.

In Prussia there are eight secretaries, including one for agriculture.

In Italy there are nine heads of departments. One is the minister of agriculture.

In Russia there are ten secretaries. Everything pertaining to agriculture in its broadest sense is in charge of one of these secretaries.

In Austria there are seven secretaries, forming what is called the council of ministers. One is for agriculture.

In Spain the council of ministers consists of eight members, one of whom is the minister of agriculture and commerce.

In Brazil, the great empire of South America, there is a minister of agriculture.

In Portugal there is a department of agriculture and commerce; and Mexico and most of the republics of South America have each a department of agriculture and statistics, under the supervision of a secretary, who is a member of the executive cabinet.

France expended last year for agriculture and commerce (I give round numbers), $20,000,000; Brazil, for agriculture, $12,000,000; Russia, for agriculture, $11,000,000; Austria, for agriculture, $5,500,000; Italy, for agriculture, $1,914,000; Japan, for agriculture, $1,000,000; United States, for agriculture, chemical division, entomological division, seed division, division of agricultural statistics, Bureau of Animal Industry, forestry, museum, laboratory, &c., $585,790.

Of all countries the great Government of the United States does the least to promote agriculture, although we have the grandest agricultural empire in the world.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. You speak of the sum of $20,000,000 expended by France——

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, for agriculture and commerce.

Mr. BLOUNT. How was that spent; in what direction? Of course I do not ask for details.

Mr. McCREARY. In paying the expenses of the department.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know if it was not largely in bounties for the culture of beets for sugar?

Mr. McCREARY. In France the amount expended for agriculture and commerce was $20,000,000. For the minister of agriculture the budget for 1885 provided $8,154,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. What I wanted to get at was what was the general expenditure for specific purposes.

Mr. McCREARY. I can not furnish the details; I simply know the amount was expended in paying the expenses of the department of agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, we should no longer be hesitating in the rear when other civilized nations have wisely and justly exalted agriculture. This, the foremost agricultural nation in the world, should give pre-eminent recognition to this fundamental industry. The cause deserves it and the people demand it. They asked for it away back in 1838, when the citizens of Kentucky, the State which I have the honor in part to represent in this House, petitioned Congress to establish at Washington a department of agriculture and mechanics, the head of which was to be a member of the executive Cabinet. This petition was a model of conciseness and elicted much attention, and helped very much to secure the first recognition ever given to agriculture by Congress, when, in 1839, a bill was passed authorizing one clerk to be appointed in the Patent Office to distribute seeds and collect statistics.

Though the petition was short it was wonderfully comprehensive, and with great exactness it suggested the business of the department, defined the duties of the officers, and forecasted with wonderful accuracy the perfection and practical utility which we now see in the existing Agricultural Department.

The people were heard again in 1876, when a convention of farmers assembled in Chicago, Ill., representing an agricultural constituency of over a million of farmers scattered through twenty-eight sovereign States, and unanimously declared their wishes in the following words:

Whereas it is the duty of wise and just legislators to see that the blessings and burdens of government are laid with impartial rule upon all classes alike: Therefore,

Resolved, That American agriculturists demand that they shall be recognized as a real factor in this Government by the establishment of a department of agriculture, to be presided over by a Cabinet officer, who shall organize the same upon a plan to be devised by the wisdom of Congress, which department shall embrace to the fullest extent the agricultural interests of twenty millions of people.

Again and again since that time resolutions substantially the same have been adopted at the national conventions held by the Patrons of Husbandry.

Mr. Chairman, no people are more independent and less obtrusive than the farmers. The combinations and the methods so frequently resorted to by almost every other class to secure Congressional legislation is unknown to them. They have no "lobby" here to urge the passage of this bill. They have sent no delegations here to address committees in the interest of this measure; but they are greatly interested in it and the justice of their cause, and their dignified and honorable and independent course should make us respect them more highly and give them the legislation they desire.

In the early settlement of our country farmers found the virgin soil of unsurpassed fertility and a home market for all their products, and they were, of all classes, the most independent and unhampered; but their situation has changed. Now they are confronted with surplus products, transportation difficulties, labor problems, competition with India and Egypt as regards the shipment of grain and cotton, rivalries with Austria and South America in regard to wool products, reciprocal treaties affecting imports and exports, and a tariff system that is a burden on labor and an incubus on nearly everything farmers use in their homes and on their farms.

It is especially necessary, therefore, that the agricultural and laboring interests of our country should have a representative in the Cabinet who understands and appreciates these great questions, and who is ready at all times to foster and encourage and protect them in every way that may be necessary.

The farmers and tillers of the soil annually pay a large part of the taxes; they furnish a majority of the soldiers in time of war, and to them we look in every crisis for calm, conservative, energetic support of the Government. From the earliest days of the Republic they have constituted the advance-guard of liberty and progress, and in the face of dangers, trials, and hardships they have blazed the way for civilization in its westward march and helped to establish churches, schools, and happy homes from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the northern lakes to the Gulf of Mexico.

There has been less legislation for farmers than for any other class. The passage of this bill will encourage farmers and laboring men of our country and prove to them that the great interests they represent are properly appreciated and recognized. Never until 1839 did agriculture receive any recognition by having an office at Washington to look after its interests. As I have already stated, an annual appropriation of $1,000 was then made. During the administration of President Buchanan a superintendent of agriculture was appointed, and in 1862 the present division of agriculture was created.

Government revenue depends in a great measure upon profitable farming, and the profits of agriculture depend on the intelligence and skill of our farmers; hence it is essential and proper that the Government should place before all farmers the best information pertaining to their business and throw around them the fullest and most ample protection.

Finally, this bill, should it pass, will bring the farmers and laboring men of our Republic into more intimate relations and help to obliterate the last vestige of sectionalism growing out of the late war, and it will not only furnish the Executive with an adviser representing twenty-eight millions of men and over five millions of homes, but it will cultivate among agriculturists all over this vast country a love for and a devotion to the Government which can not be obtained so fully in any other way.

To refute all the arguments in favor of the new executive department the opponents of the bill, so far as I have heard, present but two objections. They say it will cost money to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, as provided for in the bill under consideration.

Since the organization of our Government millions of dollars have been appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Many millions have gone to railroad corporations either as donations or loans. Subsidies have been voted and paid to ocean-sailing mail steamers and aid given to those engaged in the fisheries, while uncounted millions have gone into the pockets of manufacturers under the operation of the protective tariff laws.

Is it not about time we were giving more attention to that interest which is the foundation of all others? Last year the Congress of the United States appropriated out of the Treasury for—

Pensions	$60,000,000 00
Navy	15,070,837 95
Post-offices	53,700,000 00
Indians	5,762,512 70
Army	24,014,032 50
Ministers and consuls	1,242,925 00

And to sustain and support an agricultural department, with its chemical division, seed division, entomological division, division of agricultural statistics, Bureau of Animal Industry, museum, laboratory, and Bureau of Forestry, only the sum of $585,790, or one-thirtieth of the amount appropriated for a navy which is by no means a grand navy, and only one-third of the amount appropriated to pay the expenses of a few ministers and consuls who, representing the United States, enjoy themselves abroad, and only one-tenth of what was appropriated as a gift to the Indians; yet now, when only about $8,000 per annum is asked to establish a new department for agriculture and labor, it is objected to on the ground of economy.

Mr. Chairman, I believe as much as any man in economy, and I believe Federal taxation should be exclusively for public purposes, and should not exceed the needs of the Government economically administered, but I can not appreciate the economy that refuses to appropriate $8,000 where justice and right so fully demand this sum.

The next objection to the bill is that it is an unnecessary increase of Executive Departments, and that the number composing the Cabinet should not be changed. This is not a strong objection, for our country has fewer Departments than any of the great nations of the world. It has progressed and advanced in every way, and the Government must be adapted not only in its legislative provisions but in its organic structure to the growth and increasing wants of the people. The Constitution of the United States was regarded as sacred and complete, yet fifteen amendments have been added to it since it was first adopted.

The Cabinet has also grown with the growth of the country and with the ever-increasing necessities of the people. When the Government started there were but three Executive Departments, known as the State Department, War Department, and Treasury Department. The same act creating these Departments also provided for a Postmaster-General, but this Department was only considered a bureau until 1829, when Andrew Jackson appointed a Postmaster-General and invited him to a seat in the Cabinet. The act also provided for an Attorney-General, but it was not until 1870 that the Department of Justice was made an Executive Department of the Government, though long before that time the Attorney-General sat in the Cabinet.

In 1798 the Navy Department was created, and in 1849 the Department of the Interior was created, and Pensions were given it from the War Department, Patents and Census from the State Department, and Public Lands from the Treasury Department. It is, therefore, apparent that the increase in the Cabinet from three Secretaries to seven has been in accordance with the growth of business and the necessities of the people. All the Departments have only a statutory existence, and may be increased by act of Congress, approved by the President, any time.

Wise and patriotic men in every age have given encouragement to agriculture. George Washington said, in his address to Congress in 1796:

> It will not be doubted that with reference either to individual or national welfare agriculture is of primary importance.

Cincinnatus loved the plow more than the sword, and Cato and Virgil wrote ably and extensively on agriculture and forestry. Daniel Webster said "all national wealth depends upon enlightened agriculture." In this country we have enlightened agriculture and intelligent agriculturists, and this industry is greater and vaster than all others combined. The head of the department should always be an able and intelligent man, and he should be equal in rank and pay to the other Secretaries of the executive Cabinet.

Mr. Chairman, I have been a practicing lawyer for twenty years, but I was raised on a farm and for a quarter of a century I have been a land-owner and interested in farming, and I am glad of this opportunity to speak in behalf of agriculture and labor.

The future of our Republic is grand and beautiful. Only a few years separate us from 1910, when, according to the estimates of De Bow and Elliot, we will have one hundred millions of people and one hundred thousand millions of dollars' worth of property. The human mind can hardly assign a limit to the growth of our country or compute the time-table of its progress.

The wealth and population of our Republic now demand this new Executive Department, and it will surely be created. Whether helped or hindered by this Congress, the demand will grow and the voices favoring it will multiply until its triumph is assured. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time until I hear what gentlemen have to say on the other side.

Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Texas that the time in which the substitute was read is to be deducted from his time.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not so understand it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It must be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Texas, as the gentleman from Missouri did not yield to have the substitute read.

Mr. REAGAN. I was in hopes it would not be taken out of anybody's time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time having been limited by the House, of course the Chair has no discretion in the matter.

The gentleman has fifty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I acquiesce very fully in the interesting statements just made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] as to the extent, importance, and great interest of this country in the subject of agriculture; and, as I am a farmer myself and represent farmers almost exclusively, I think I may speak for farmers.

Sometimes we find that when the subject of farming and agriculture comes up the most zealous farmers are those who, perhaps, never followed a plow and never owned a farm, but those, however, who remember that farmers are numerous and have a great many votes.

It is well when we come to look at a great question like this that we should divest ourselves of the idea that we are to take up one particular class of citizens of this country and observe and take care of this interest to the exclusion of other classes of people equally meritorious and with other interests equally important. I desire to make this observation, and I call attention particularly to it: taking the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and the substitute I have offered, I think, when you have read both and compare them, this distinguishing difference will be seen between them, that the committee's bill means to dignify labor by a name, by giving to labor the name of a department exclusively; while the bill I have offered means to dignify it by providing the largest means for the collection and dissemination of information on all subjects pertaining to the interest of agriculture. I beg you to bear in mind that the one undertakes, because of the interest of farmers, to dignify that, not by all proper and necessary legislation, but by giving it a chief and making it top-heavy; while the other proposes to use all the instrumentalities that can promote the interest of agriculture.

Now, the bill I have offered as a substitute for the committee bill proposes to create a department of industries. In this department of industries is a division of agriculture, to be presided over by a practical agriculturist, with a salary of $5,000, which it is fair to presume will secure for this particular business men of superior talents, ability, and character. Then it goes on to provide for the various bureaus, which I can not now undertake to enumerate, but which will be seen by reading the bill. It then provides for a second division, which is to transfer the Labor Bureau created by the Forty-eighth Congress to this department of industries with the officers and powers and duties of the Labor Bureau as pointed out by the act in question. It then provides for a division of commerce, and it provides for transferring to the department of industries various branches of the public service now attached to the Treasury and the Interior Departments, not because of any necessary connection between them, but for the reason mainly that there is no other place to put them.

It is well that I should observe here, perhaps, that the National Board of Trade has, year after year for several years, appealed to Congress to create a department of commerce, and they are as persistent in asking that a separate department of commerce shall be created as some of our friends here are in asking for a separate department of agriculture. They have also been sustained by the resolutions and declarations of boards of trade and chambers of commerce in various parts of the country.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] who preceded me gave a very interesting summary of the value and importance of agriculture. I could not take time and have not prepared myself to give a like summary of the value and importance of the commerce of the country; but without due reference to the commercial interests of the country agriculture would not fare so well. The internal commerce of the country (I mean that which passes from place to place and from owner to owner) was estimated by a learned and able gentleman at the other end of the Capitol a few days ago at $15,000,000,000 annually. It is made up very largely of agricultural products; and it also embraces all goods, wares, and commodities of every possible description, not only agricultural, but the whole interior commerce of the country. Our external foreign commerce amounts to about $800,000,000 annually.

This represents the earnings of the American people and the articles consumed by them. It is a matter of great moment to them to have all the information through this bureau of industries in relation to agriculture, in relation to labor, and in relation to commerce which can enlighten the people with regard to all three of these great and paramount interests.

My wish is to see an additional department of Government established. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that the growth of this country, its development in population and wealth and industries, calls for an additional department of Government, but not for two additional departments at this time, and I think that agriculture and commerce equally demand this consideration at the hands of the Government, and that we will make a mistake if we make a department for one of these great industries and omit reference to the other of these great interests.

Both bills provide for the consideration of the questions of labor, but with differences in language and for different purposes. I have a criticism to make on the committee's bill. If that should be adopted by the House it seems to me there would be a necessity for an alteration of some of its provisions. I desire here to call the attention of the House to the fifth section of the committee's bill and the clause beginning at line 8 of that section:

The commissioner shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women—

That is all well enough—

the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity, and the best means to protect life and prevent accidents in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

I also call attention to the clause in the same section beginning at line 21:

The secretary of agriculture and labor shall be empowered to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employés within the United States, and he may invite and hear sworn statements from both such parties concerning the matters in controversy.

I am almost afraid to mention the Constitution. [Laughter.] I was upbraided for mentioning it some days ago.

A MEMBER. Most of the Republican members are out.

Mr. REAGAN. Unfortunately, I was upbraided on our own as well as on the Republican side.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I should like very much to hear from the gentleman as to the constitutional aspect of these questions.

Mr. REAGAN. What has the Federal Government to do with—

The best means to protect life and to prevent accident in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry?

What has the Federal Government to do with that? If that is to be provided for by this bill, what use is there for State governments? I repeat, if that and kindred things are to be left in this bill and the Government is to assume authority over such subjects, what is the use of State governments? If we assent to this bill we propose to utterly disregard the Constitution of the United States, to utterly disregard the theory of our Government, and to take hold of things that are local and belong purely and exclusively to the State. Of all the classes of people in this country who are interested, greatly and profoundly interested, in preserving our form of government as transmitted to us by our forefathers, it is the farmers and the laboring class of people. It is their shield and protection, and whenever for expediency, or for any other purpose, we disregard the theory of our Government, under which we live, we inflict a serious and lasting injury upon the American people.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. REAGAN. In a moment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman that he may express his view on it at this point. There is another thing he will want to comment on.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; I will hear the gentleman now.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I find in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] provision is made on page 2 for a "bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States."

What has the Constitution got to do with the condition of the domestic animals of the United States? And is the Constitution more powerful to collect that kind of information than to collect information as to the condition of the mines and the workshops where human beings are congregated?

Mr. REAGAN. The boundary between the two propositions is not very clearly marked, I concede. But in relation to the rights of persons, of individuals, and the protection of the laws there are obligations imposed upon the State governments, and there is directly and impliedly a prohibition upon the Federal Government to engage in some of these things. Cattle and hogs and horses have no individual rights; they are property only. Inquiry is to be made on that subject. The object is simply to collect information, as has heretofore been done by the Agricultural Bureau. I will read the clause:

Second. The bureau of animal industry, to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and use; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

The Agricultural Report now published under existing law disseminates just this kind of information, and the purpose was simply to embody in this bill what was in the present law and to follow existing law. But I submit that does not warrant us in going down into a State, that has peculiarly the constitutional protection of life, person, and property, which this Government has nothing to do with by its Constitution as to citizens of the States, and inquiring as to "the best means to protect life and prevent accident in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry."

The gentleman understands, and we all understand, if we have not got so far from the Constitution as to have forgotten it, that the Federal Government has certain delegated powers, and that among them is not the power contemplated in that provision of this bill to be exercised over persons. They are under the protection, control, and jurisdiction of the State and the State constitution, not under the jurisdiction or control of the Federal Constitution.

That is my answer to my friend from Iowa. Then this bill provides that "the secretary of agriculture shall be empowered to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employés within the United States, and may invite and hear sworn statements from both such parties concerning the matters in controversy."

That seems to be a proposition to make the department a sort of court for the adjudication of questions between laborers and their employers, and it embraces laborers generally, not only the employés of a railroad or a canal, but the employés of manufacturers or farmers; in short, all the employés in the country. I had occasion some time ago to discuss this question when another bill was under consideration here, and to say that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the Federal Government to undertake to meddle in local personal contracts in relation to labor, and I venture the statement now that there is not a respectable court, presided over by a good lawyer, in America that would sustain the constitutionality of that provision in this bill. Why? Because contracts between employers and laborers are local, domestic, unconnected with the public service, private. The powers of the Federal Government are delegated for particular national and international purposes, and for no other purposes, and the declaration in one of the amendments to the Constitution is, in substance, that the powers not delegated to the Government of the United States are retained in the States and in the people of the States respectively.

The States and the people retain to themselves all the powers not conferred by the Constitution on the Federal Government for national and international purposes. It was necessary that the Federal Government, acting as the unit for the whole, should control questions of peace and war, and should have control of the Army and the Navy. It was convenient and advantageous that it should take charge of the postal facilities, because they relate to the whole people, and it is better that the mails should not be interrupted at the boundaries of States. It was right that the Federal Government should take charge of the question of coinage, because the coinage ought to be uniform, and it was to the interest of the whole people that it should be uniform. Such powers as these were delegated to the Federal Government by the Constitution; but local matters, such as contracts for labor, matters relating to the descent and to the distribution of estates, matters relating to marriage and divorce—all such questions as these, relating to the local domestic internal policy of the State, were reserved to the States. Among the reservations was the right to determine questions in dispute between hirer and hired, and whenever we pass a bill with these two provisions in it I would advise that we add one more section to the bill, and abolish the State governments entirely and get rid of the useless expense of Legislatures and governors and State courts; because, if we mean to turn this into a consolidated centralized republic we may as well do the whole job at once and not by piecemeal. But we should bear in mind that a government with the extent of territory and the variety of interests which ours has can not permanently exist except in one of two forms. First, a Federal Republic like ours, which may, I believe, be indefinitely expanded in its territorial limits, if we only observe the principles of federation, the doctrines and principles and usages of the Constitution. Second, a depotism, with all power concentrated in the central government. But a consolidated centralized republic is an impossibility, and there is no writer on the subject of government whose opinions are worthy of respect who will not tell us that a country of the extent of territory, population, and interests of ours can not long exist as a centralized republic. Why? Because it will always be to the interest of the majority section—I care not where that section may be, whether in the North, in the South, in the East, or in the West—it will always be to the interest of the majority section to rob and plunder the minority section, and they will do it by law. Why? Because it will be popular to do it, and the representatives of the people will always obey the popular will.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is assuming that it is always popular and right to plunder.

Mr. REAGAN. Well, if my friend speaks of the rules of morality, it is not right, but I am speaking of the practical operation of government and of the practices of men. We may have our fine theories about government, but government is a practical matter, and, whatever our theories may be, we will use the power of the Government, as the Republican party has used it for the last twenty years, to enrich particular classes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman please state where his proposition has taken shape in practice, where one section of this or of any other country has robbed the other sections? Is it not a fact that the gentleman is merely stating a theory which he entertains, and one which is not exemplified in practice anywhere?

Mr. REAGAN. I am sorry that I can not answer that question in the affirmative. I will show the gentleman that the principle has been and is now in operation. The manufacturing interests of this country are most of them in a particular locality.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It does not necessarily follow that they should be confined to any locality.

Mr. REAGAN. I am talking not about what should be, but about what is. The manufacturing interests of this country are mostly in a particular locality, and for their benefit we have been plundering the workingmen of all sections of the country at the rate of hundreds of millions annually.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I take issue with the gentleman as to the fact. I assert that that part of the country in which manufactures are most numerous shows to-day a farming community more thrifty than can be found in any other section, and if the gentleman will examine the subject he will find that where the factories are most numerous there the farmers receive the best prices for their products and the men who labor on the farm receive the best wages.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if I had time to listen to interruptions, but I have not the time. Let me say, however, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, that the state of things he describes is easily accounted for, because when you find a place where all the manufacturing capital of the country is concentrated, where all the railroad capital is concentrated, where all the banking capital is concentrated, where all the insurance capital is concentrated, where all the express capital is concentrated—when you find a place with this great aggregation of capital, you will find a rich and prosperous community such as that of which the gentleman from Maine speaks.

In an agricultural country like the West or the South where there are not these aggregations of capital, where there are not these concentrations of wealth, there you find struggle and poverty and debt and mortgages from year to year, as you see them now. This very fact illustrates the point which the gentleman has brought out, to which I did not intend to refer; for I do not wish to go into that branch of the subject now.

Mr. PETERS. But is it not a fact that your own party, or a portion of it, disputes with you the fact which you allege?

Mr. REAGAN. I will say to my friend from Kansas that I have nominally a party to which I belong, as he has nominally a party to which he belongs. But, as said by the gentleman from Iowa a short time ago, a man may be anything on earth in politics, religion, and morals, and be either a Democrat or a Republican. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question; it has nothing to do with party. Does the gentleman think that the agriculturists of Texas, or any other part of this country where there are not manufactures, would be any better off to-day if the manufactures of New England did not exist?

Mr. REAGAN. I would not take an extreme case like that. I do not want to contemplate a condition of things in which manufactures do not exist. But without going into extreme suggestions and suppositions like that, I will say to the gentleman that if the people of Texas and of the whole South or the whole West were relieved of the 40 per cent. tax on all they use, a tax imposed year after year for the benefit of manufactures, you would see the same thrift and prosperity there that you see where these interests are concentrated. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. How would the gentleman meet the expenditures of the Government—by direct taxation upon the farmers of Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir. I have not been discussing that, and I do not propose at this time to be led into any discussion of that sort. I hope the gentleman will excuse me from answering any further inquiries, because I can not spend the limited time allowed for debate on the pending measure by a discussion of everything that gentlemen may think of. [Laughter.] But the gentleman knows as well as I know that nobody now contemplates carrying on this Government upon revenues collected by direct taxation. The pretense that there exists such a purpose is one of the political frauds that have been kept before this country by the Republicans and by a few money-bag Democrats for several years past. [Laughter.] They have pretended that we who seek a revenue tariff are free-traders and want to carry on the Government by direct taxation. They all know they lie. [Laughter and applause.]

We would like to have a revenue-tariff, such as the Constitution contemplates—not such as is in violation of the Constitution, for the very clause of that instrument which authorizes the collection of revenues from imports declares also the purposes for which such revenues shall be collected—to support the Government and to pay the debts of the United States. That is the only purpose for which a tax of that kind can be constitutionally collected. When we go beyond that and say, "We will levy a tax to draw money from one citizen to give it to another without consideration," we not only violate that provision of the Constitution, but we violate also the most sacred fundamental principles of our system of government, among them the principle that private property shall not be taken except for public use, and not even then unless upon just compensation. This principle is so firmly intrenched in the Federal Constitution and in all the State constitutions that private property can not be transferred from one citizen to another except by violence or fraud. There is no way to do it according to law.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question, though I dislike to interrupt him. The gentleman argues now in favor of a tariff for revenue?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask the gentleman what reason he can give to the poor man who has ten children for levying upon the backs and the mouths of those children the taxation to support this Government, unless it be done in such a way as to protect the avocation by which that man lives?

Mr. REAGAN. Of course any tax of that kind gives protection to the extent of the tax. The only difference between the gentleman and myself, I suppose, is that I would have a tariff for revenue, letting it carry with it whatever incidental protection it might; and he would have a tariff for protection, for robbery, with revenue as an incident. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Would not the gentleman be——

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will excuse me. I am obliged to go on with my remarks upon this bill. I would be glad to yield further if I had time.

My friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, proposes, as I anticipate, to attack my position on this subject as inconsistent; for the other day he stated that in a former session of Congress I voted for a bill similar to the one of which he now has charge. It is right for me to say that when he told me I was opposing a bill similar to one for which I had voted at a previous session I felt a little surprised at a statement which my memory failed altogether to confirm; for I had no recollection of ever having voted for a bill that distinctly violated the Constitution and intermeddled with the local affairs of the States.

The gentleman said I had not only voted but spoken for such a bill. On examining the record I have found that the bill which I supported in a speech was known as "the Kenna bill," urged conspicuously by a gentleman from West Virginia, now a Senator. That bill—and I am willing that this Committee of the Whole shall judge how far it resembles this bill—is the one for which I spoke.

The bill for which I voted was introduced by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In looking over that bill to see whether it contains the same provision I find the only thing which assimilates to it this:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the duties now performed by the statistician of the Department of Agriculture, provided in section 520, title 22 of the Revised Statutes, it is hereby made the further duty of the statistician to collect all the facts and information and statistics obtainable relative to the annual products of manufactures and the cost thereof, the various processes applied to quantity and value of the raw material consumed, and such other information as shall show each year the conditions of the manufactures in the several States. It shall also be the further duty of said statistician to collect all facts relative to the wages of labor, hours of labor, and the general condition of the laboring classes throughout the country.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will do me the justice to acknowledge I said he had voted for a bill substantially the same as the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture. I ask whether he did not support the Kenna substitute, and whether he did not vote for the original bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I did not. The bill was not passed.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will turn to it I will give him the page of the RECORD where he will find that when the bill was on its passage he voted for it. He voted for substantially the same bill also in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will find that was Mr. Hubbell's bill, which was adopted as a substitute for the committee's bill.

I am going to give my time to others, and therefore must hurry on. All I desire to say further on this point is that the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken. After having examined the RECORD I am sure I never voted for any such provision as that which is contained in this bill, and I do not think the gentleman himself ever did before, or that any other member of this House did until the vote was taken the other day.

I wish to return to the subject-matter. The gentleman took occasion to call attention to the fact the committee's bill aims to give dignity and importance to agriculture by naming it as the head of a department. The substitute I offer proposes to benefit labor by making all those substantial and necessary provisions which will dignify and ennoble labor and promote agriculture to whatever extent it can be done by the action of any department.

I also make provision for the transfer to it of the Labor Bureau, provided by the act of the Forty-eighth Congress.

It is also a matter of as great importance to the people of the country there should be wise supervision of the commerce of the country by a first-class intellect as that there should be a wise supervision of agriculture by a first-class intellect. I do not know whether there are as many voters among the merchants as there are among the farmers of the country, and I suppose that is the fault with my bill. But if we look at what will benefit the country, what will aid its commerce, what will encourage agriculture, and what patriotism demands at our hands, then I hope the House will adopt the substitute I have offered.

How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twelve minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield then that time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the time the gentleman from Texas has allotted to me will not afford the opportunity to have read at the Clerk's desk the substitute I wish to offer, and with the consent of the House I will append it to the brief remarks I am going to submit, so that members, if they feel enough interest in it to do so, may read it in the RECORD.

It may be that the time has come to create another Executive Department, and group under a common supervision some of the bureaus formed in our progress of growth and development, and thereby give greater efficiency to them. To meet this view I have draughted the substitute as merely a suggestive scheme to be the basis of consideration and legislation, and am not wedded to it. If either this plan or that offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] be adopted it will be a real department, with much substance, and giving to its head both labor and dignity. It will be in the number of its employés, in the importance of the subjects embraced in its jurisdiction, in the value of its labors to the country, and the dignity of the matters involved, the equal of the present Executive Departments. It gives the dignity asked in the name of agriculture by bestowing her name upon it; it elevates this interest to the front rank among a group of industrial bureaus, and puts it in its proper place as the head of industrial pursuits and the chief of scientific labors.

I beg the committee to examine the plan and wherein it is faulty amend it, or in its stead substitute a wiser and better scheme. It creates no new bureau; changes in no important matter the present law; makes no doubtful experiment; trenches upon no disputed constitutional powers; opens no old contentions, nor gives rise to new disputes. It relieves two Departments—the Treasury and Interior—of great labor, renders the grouping of bureaus more logical, and will cause supervision of offices through which now large sums of money are disbursed without proper control and check. The additional cost is $8,000 for the salary of the Secretary and $10,000 for all other necessary additional employés. I submit this plan in deference to the opinion of many colleagues that another Department is necessary.

I will not now attempt to point out certain defects in the proposed bill, for this can be done under the five-minute debate and the bill can be amended to obviate these objections. But I desire to submit to the committee some general considerations, and I will confine these to so much of the bill as attempts to legislate concerning agriculture and an agricultural department.

I am a farmer's boy, Mr. Chairman, and nobody on this floor can say anything as to the dignity of agriculture to which I will not most heartily agree. I suppose no one has memories which are more tender than my own connected with the country. Having been born in a city, I was carried a motherless boy, with a motherless family, into the bluegrass region of Kentucky in the exquisite month of May. I still recollect the scene that I beheld the first morning after we reached the old homestead; where, under the old trees in the yard before the old house, I looked on the undulating fields watered by North Elkhorn, and forming part of what Bancroft calls "the unrivaled valley of the Elkhorn;" with the rising sun covering the green grass with the radiance of his level rays—a picture that to-day is as dear and as vivid as it was to the little barefooted, motherless boy forty years ago. And, sir, from that day to this I have so loved that country that no temptation has been strong enough to lure me from it.

In the old field schools I was grounded in the "humanities." In the country church I joined in the simple forms of an old-fashioned worship; and to-day my friends are the farmers, whose lot I am constantly tempted to envy.

Therefore, both as to the sentimental as well as the material considerations that may be urged concerning country life and its occupations, I allow no man to go further than I. But to-day, in the midst of the agricultural distress that is prevailing, this does not seem to me to be the means to give any remedy.

How the making of the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet minister and enlarging his salary from $4,500 a year to $8,000, without substantially increasing his duties, and giving him an assistant secretary of agriculture, with nothing under heaven to do, at a salary of $4,000 a year, organizing a Department with increased expenditures in the shape of stenographers, clerks, and all the paraphernalia that will be required, will either dignify agriculture or lighten the burdens upon its shoulders or put money into its empty pockets is to me an unsolved and unsolvable riddle. If it can be demonstrated that this will aid this great industry I am ready to go for it. Representing probably the richest agricultural community in America, and desiring to do all I can for those generous people, I am anxious to go any distance with anybody that can help that industry.

But I confess the more I look into it the less it seems to me to do good, and the more it seems likely to do harm. I apprehend it is a universal principle that an improper remedy to a real grievance prevents the examination and consideration of that grievance and of the remedy proper to be applied.

Whenever we think we have done something for that which requires that something ought to be done, we instantly turn from it with contentment, turning our attention from the subject, satisfying our conscience that what we have done is all that is necessary, and cease to seek for real remedies. So every time we palter with an important matter, every time we attempt to do something that has in it no substance, about a matter that needs relief, we draw ourselves off from its real consideration, and fail to do that which otherwise might have been done and that ought to have been done, and content ourselves with the insufficient remedy. Besides, sir, I look with reluctance upon every step that separates American citizens into classes. It was my duty, as I thought not long ago, to protest against the labor bill because one of its results would be in my opinion to dignify by Congressional legislation the thought that labor and capital were separate classifications into which American citizenry might be divided. So to-day, Mr. Chairman, I protest against any legislation which would tend to give force to the thought that the farmers are a separate class of our citizens. We are not all farmers; but farmers and mechanics, farmers and lawyers, farmers and merchants are constantly represented in one and the same individual.

My friend [Mr. MCCREARY], who made a summary of agriculture a few moments ago, my old comrade and college-mate, is himself a lawyer and farmer as well as member of Congress. We are all intermingled in our vocations, and so inextricably intermingled that the old story when the plebs retired from Rome to one of the hills, and the fable of the body was spoken, that the head could not do without the stomach or the legs without the arms is as true to-day as it was then. We are inextricably and indissolubly united in our various vocations, not alone as farmers, but as farmers and all other occupations combined; and how the mere taking of one man and making him the chief of a department of agriculture, to sit at the table with the other seven, and at its head the President, dignifies the industry which he represents, or elevates it, or does anything to aid it in the struggle for better life, greater results, and ampler improvements, is a mystery to me. Nay, more, Mr. Chairman, I apprehend that when the minister of agriculture comes to take his seat there he will be no longer an agriculturist; he will be a politician.

The head of the Army Department is not a soldier; the chief of the Navy Department is not a sailor. He who, as a rule, is at the head of the Interior Department is not either a patentee, a man who gets a patent for an invention of his own, nor a man who served in the Army and is a pensioner, nor one who is a homesteader, with present interests in the public lands. All of these gentlemen are politicians, and represent considerations of state, or Presidential influences, or electoral votes; and I apprehend that when the farmer comes to take his seat at that table he will be a gentleman representing a certain section, certain political opinions, and with certain political weight.

We deceive ourselves, I think, when we say this is the road that leads to power or wealth for the agriculturist. I admit there is something wrong. I take the liberty of reading from the work of another:

By the census of 1850 the estimated value of farms in the United States was $3,271,575,426. In 1860 the value was estimated at $6,645,045,007, showing an increased value during the decade of $3,373,469,581, or more than 100 per cent. In 1870 the value of the farms was estimated at $9,262,803,861, showing an increase during the decade of $2,617,758,861, or less than 40 per cent. In 1880 the value of farms was estimated at $10,197,096,776, being an increase during the decade of $939,292,915, or only a fraction over 9 per cent. (See Compendium of the Census of 1880, page 658.)

The value of the live stock in the United States in 1850 was estimated at $544,180,566. In 1860 it was valued at $1,089,329,915. The increase during the decade was $545,149,349, or over 100 per cent. In 1870 it was estimated at $1,525,276,547, being an increase during the decade of $435,946,542, or less than 40 per cent. In 1880, the live stock was valued at $1,500,464,609, being a decrease during the decade of nearly $25,000,000, or more than 1½ per cent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I recommend that to the gentleman from Texas as a commentary on the "robber policy" of protection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I accept the challenge of the gentleman addressed to the gentleman from Texas.

In the value of live stock during this period of thirty years, in ten of them there was an increase of over 100 per cent. In the next ten years there was an increase of less than 40 per cent. In ten more years there was a decrease of 1½ per cent. In the first of these decades we were under the tariff of 1846, a low tariff. In the decade from 1860 to 1870 the country was under the high tariff, the Morrill tariff, when the 100 per cent of increase diminished to 40 per cent.; and from 1870 to 1880, in time of profound peace, when the country was under the renewed and accelerated power of high tariff, the decrease was 1½ per cent. [Applause.]

In other words, under a low tariff the agricultural interest doubled in ten years. Under a high tariff in another decade of ten years there was a decrease in live stock of 1½ per cent. There is the grievance. Let us find the remedy.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will carefully examine the census returns and take the returns themselves he will discover he is mistaken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. These are the returns of the census; two of these censuses, if not three of them, having been taken under statisticians who belonged to the protectionist school, who would make the figures conform to their theories as far as their consciences would allow them to do it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I repeat, if the gentleman will look at the original figures he will find he is mistaken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. These are the correct figures.

There seems every reason to believe that between 1850 and 1860 there was a very rapid increase in wealth. In the general prosperity of the country the great farming community appears to have fully participated. Then, as now, it comprised about half of all our people. Starting in 1850 with less than $4,000,000,000 they increased their wealth by more than an equal amount in ten years. But since 1860, with far more than twice as much capital, and added millions of persons employed, they have scarcely been able, even by the highest estimates the census officers could possibly make, to add as much to their wealth in twenty years as they did in the preceding ten. In 1860 farmers owned half of the wealth of the country. In 1880 they owned but a quarter. By the census estimates the other half of the community between 1860 and 1880 increased their wealth by more than $23,000,000,000. But farmers starting with an equal capital increased their wealth during the same time only a little more than $4,000,000,000.

And if we could obtain the result in figures of the five years since the census of 1880 was taken the picture would be a still more distressing one. Wheat, cotton, wool, meats, every product of the farm at prices that scarcely pay for the cost of production; the value of live stock yearly, ay, daily decreasing; the vendible value of land also decreasing; mortgages unpaid; interest accumulating; debt increasing; new competitors with their products pressing down the price of our products in fierce rivalry, unable to sell in many of the markets of the world, because by our system we can not there buy—the farmer may well declare that all legislation has been to his detriment; that the system of taxation imposed on us is unjust to him; that the profits of his labor have gone into the coffers of others, and that this has been carefully, skillfully, sytematically kept in view in all our governmental legislation for a quarter of a century.

Here is the grievance, here is the burden which like a parasite keeps this mighty industry from moving onward in her glorious march. This is the clog which keeps her steps from advancing in a prosperous career. Take it off; remove this burden, reduce these immense and enormous protective duties that are eating her life away. Do not palter by talking of giving her a Cabinet officer, of crowning her with palms. Take off the weights that now rest upon her and she herself will be crowned by her own labor. She will crown herself with the rewards of honest sweat; she will cover herself with the achievements of honest industry, doing it for herself and on her own ground and asking no favors of Cabinet officers or Presidents. [Applause.]

Upon a soil so fertile, with a climate so salubrious, amid a race so glorious, with a territory so magnificent, all agriculture wants is a free, unrestricted, unburdened chance in the great battle of life. Give this to her and you give her all she asks. [Applause.]

The following is Mr. BRECKINRIDGE'S substitute:

Mr. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE introduced the following bill:

A bill to establish a department of agriculture and industry.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be at the seat of Government an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture and Industry; and the head thereof shall be secretary of agriculture and industry, and he shall receive an annual salary of $8,000, to be paid as other salaries of the heads of Executive Departments are by law paid, and hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed from office.

SEC. 2. That this department shall consist of—

First. The Department of Agriculture.

Second. The Bureau of Labor.

Third. The Bureau of Education.

Fourth. The Bureau of the Office of Commissioner of Railroads.

Fifth. A bureau to consist of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and of the Office of the Geological Survey.

Sixth. The Bureau of Statistics.

Seventh. The Bureau of the Life-Saving Service.

Eighth. The Bureau of the Office of the Supervising Architect.

Ninth. The Office of Steamboat Inspection.

Tenth. The Patent Office.

SEC. 3. That the laws now in force respecting said above-named ten department, ment, bureaus, and offices shall remain in force unil the department herein created is organized by the appointment of the secretary of agriculture and industry, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at which time the heads and chiefs of said department, bureaus, and offices shall report to said secretary, who shall, under the direction and with the approval of the President, make such rules and regulations for the supervision, control, and management of said Executive Department hereby created as may be necessary; and the laws governing said department, bureaus, and offices, fixing the salaries, duties, and terms of all officers and employés therein, stipulating what duties and labors are required of them, and imposing liabilities and giving privileges to them, shall remain in force, save as altered and modified by this act.

SEC. 4. That the secretary of agriculture and industry is hereby given power to employ such clerks, stenographers, and employés as may be necessary, in addition to those now by law provided for the department, bureaus, and offices hereinbefore set out, and to fix the salaries and wages of such persons, not, however, exceeding in the aggregate the sum of $10,000 a year; and the sum necessary to pay said persons is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect on June 30, 1886.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to yield to me a moment that I may reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HATCH. I said the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] voted for the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture in the Forty-seventh Congress. There were various amendments and substitutes offered for the bill. One substitute was offered by Mr. Hubbell, of Michigan, and from that the gentleman read the first section. The question was taken on that substitute and it was not agreed to. I read from the RECORD:

The bill as amended—

That is, the bill reported by the committee and in charge of Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas—was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WELLBORN and Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 7, not voting 101.

Among the yeas is recorded the name of Mr. REAGAN, of Texas. So that my statement that the gentleman after voting for the Kenna substitute voted for the bill is supported by the RECORD, and is correct.

Mr. REAGAN. I read the clause from the bill for which I voted and to which the gentleman refers, which is the only thing that bore any resemblance to the bill now before the House. I did so in order to show that I never voted for the provisions of this bill, and the gentleman from Missouri himself did not.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it has been beautifully said by Jonathan Duncan that—

Infinite benevolence has given to man a wonderful patrimony. He has laid the three kingdoms of nature at our feet. The earth abounds in endless fertility; the race of domestic animals will never become extinct; the mines teeming with every variety of minerals are inexhaustible; what is deficient in one hemisphere is redundant in another, the trade-winds are the unerring auxiliaries of transmarine intercourse, and the magnet is the pilot of navigation.

This beautiful statement is true of the whole earth, and it is wonderfully accurate when applied to this the New World; and yet society seems to be suffering under some universal depression and disorder. Want and extreme poverty afflict at this moment a very large proportion of our population. Why are these things so?

Our life as a nation has been but a span. I saw the other day at the Executive Mansion an individual who had called to pay his respects to the President. This gentleman has lived under every administration of every President from Washington to Cleveland. We are as a nation not as old as some of our living individual citizens. We are in our youth, but debauched by profligacy and eaten up by internal disorders. Labor built the state; but labor to-day is on the rack. Laboring people feed, clothe, and shelter the world, but they have less to consume and possess fewer of the necessaries and luxuries of life than any other class of our population.

Now they intend to know the reason of all this. They intend to know how it turns out to be true that we, a republic, have traveled farther during the first century of our existence toward extreme poverty on the one hand and extreme riches on the other than was ever traveled by any other nation on the globe in five hundred years. This condition of affairs, I insist, calls for the closest scrutiny on the part of statesmanship and on the part of our people. "What good," it is asked, "can result from a bill of this kind?" I answer, much, every way. In the first place, labor is asking for a voice in the Cabinet, where measures are matured, where they receive their final discussion, where they are to be approved, and often where they are slaughtered.

Labor asks for a voice in that council, and if this bill is passed it will give labor a status which it has not enjoyed during the first century of the Republic. Again, labor is organizing for a great civic contest with monopoly, and has the right to be heard. It is seeking a vantage-ground which, as every one knows, is one-half the battle. It is seeking to be dignified and demands that it shall be respected everywhere. Treat the producers of wealth fairly and give them an equal voice with every other branch of our population. There is nothing in this bill that smacks of creating classes, as has been intimated, but it is designed to lift labor to a higher level and a higher recognition. Our system of political economy calculates accurately the product of labor, but it forgets the producer. It tells us of our wonderful productions, but forgets the great aim of it all—a perfect manhood and a peaceful and prosperous state of society.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has assailed this bill as being unconstitutional. I have the highest admiration for that gentleman's ability and courage, for the tenacity with which he adheres to his views and the fearlessness with which he asserts them upon this floor; but the position taken by him is certainly untenable, and if this bill be subject to the objection which he has raised, certainly his own bill is obnoxious to the same criticism, but in a greater degree. I call his attention and the attention of the committee to subdivision 1 of section 3 of the gentleman's substitute. I read:

First. The bureau of agricultural products, which shall include divisions of botany, entomology, and chemistry, and the chief of which bureau, who shall be a practical agriculturist, shall investigate the modes of farming in the several States and Territories—

If there be no constitutional authority for the bill of the committee, where is the authority for this, I ask?

I read further—and shall report such practical information as shall tend to increase the profits of the farmer respecting the various methods, the crops most profitable in the several sections, the preferable varieties of seeds, vines, plants, and fruits, fertilizers, implements, buildings, and similar matters.

And here is the second subdivision of the same section of the gentleman's bill:

Second. The Bureau of Animal Industry to be in charge of a competent veterinary surgeon, who shall investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States; their protection, growth, and use; the causes, prevention, or cure of contagious, communicable, or other diseases; and the kinds, races, or breeds best adapted to the several sections for profitable raising.

Mr. Chairman, I concede that these are very proper provisions to be in a bill of that kind, and I claim that they are not in violation of any provision of the Constitution, but I insist that if this bill is in violation of the Constitution, then the gentleman's own bill is in the same category. At the commencement of this Congress I had the honor to introduce a bill to establish a department of labor. After consulting with the Committee on Agriculture and after consultation of the two committees it was thought best to combine the two departments of agriculture and labor, and hence the fifth section of the bill now under consideration is substantially the bill which I introduced for the establishment of a separate department of labor.

Now, the clause referred to by the gentlemen is this:

The relation of capital to labor, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity, and the best means to protect life and prevent accidents in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

The gentleman says he does not think he ever voted for the passage of such a bill as this or that any other member of this House ever did. I remind him that the language to which he objects is copied verbatim from the bill to establish a bureau of labor, which passed this House and became a law June 27, 1884, and is now in force.

It is said that labor is suffering and agriculture is suffering. So they are. But neither this suffering nor its causes are new; they are as old as civilization. Every nation has passed through them. Just after the Napoleonic wars, about the year 1826, the laboring people of England passed through a crisis similar to that through which we are now passing and it was brought on by similar causes. The very same suffering then existed, and the very same frivolous excuses and causes were assigned then that have been urged here from 1873 to the present hour—overproduction, transition from war to peace, lack of specie basis, and other nonsensical and intentionally deceptive theories.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I have examined the statute creating the Labor Bureau; and I do not find the passage which the gentleman read.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is there; I copied it myself.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not find it, and my recollection does not agree with the gentleman's.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman later for any correction he may desire to make.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I was just about to pass to a different branch of the subject.

Mr. ROGERS. My question relates to that branch which the gentleman is about to leave. Has the gentleman observed that by the terms of this bill the act by which the Bureau of Labor was created is repealed, and there is no provision at all for the transfer of this bureau to the new department?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think there is such a clause. I will examine the matter.

Mr. ROGERS. I have examined the bill carefully; and there is no such provision in the bill. You abolish the act creating the present bureau; and the corresponding bureau in this department is left with no head, no control, no management.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. When this bill shall become a law, there will be no necessity for continuing in force the other act. This bill simply repeals the former law, and creates a division of labor within the new department.

Mr. ROGERS. But you do not make any provision for the transfer.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will pay attention to that point when we reach the time for amendments.

I wish to call attention to a satire published by Thomas Moore, the poet, at the time of the financial crisis in England. This satirical poem will answer many of the arguments now appearing in magazines and urged on this floor in speeches with reference to the condition of affairs in this country. The poet compares the laboring people of England at that time to an overloaded donkey. The satire proceeds as follows:

A donkey, whose talent for burdens was wondrous,
So much that you'd swear he rejoiced in a load,
One day had to jog under panniers so pond'rous,
That—down the poor donkey fell, smack on the road.

His owners and drivers stood round in amaze—
What! Neddy, the patient, the prosperous Neddy,
So easy to drive through the dirtiest ways,
For every description of job-work so ready!

One driver (whom Ned might have "hailed" as a "brother")
Had just been proclaiming the donkey's renown,
For vigor, for spirit, for one thing or other—
When, lo, 'mid his praises, the donkey came down!

But, how to upraise him?—one shouts, t'other whistles,
While Jenky, the conjuror, wisest of all,
Declared that an "overproduction" of thistles—
(Here Ned gave a stare)—was the cause of his fall.

Another wise Solomon cries, as he passes,
"There, let him alone, and the fit will soon cease;
The beast has been fighting with other jackasses,
And this is his mode of "'transition to peace.'"

Some looked at his hoofs, and, with learned grimaces,
Pronounced that too long without shoes he has gone—
Let the blacksmith provide him a 'sound metal basis,'"
The wiseacres said, "and he's sure to jog on."

* * * * * *

Meanwhile the poor Neddy, in torture and fear,
Lay under his pannier, scarce able to groan,
And—what was still dolefuller—lending an ear
To advisers whose ears were a match for his own.

At length a plain rustic, whose wit went so far
As to see others' folly, roared out, as he passed—
"Quick! off with the panniers, all dolts as ye are,
Or your prosperous Neddy will soon kick his last!"

You will observe that it was a plain laboring man who discovered that the animal was overloaded, and who made the sensible suggestion to take off the load. [Laughter.]

A very sensible remedy, was it not? The trouble with American laborers to-day is that they are simply overloaded. Take off these burdensome taxes; take off the load of usury that is annually extorting from the people of the United States at least $350,000,000 more than the net annual increase of wealth in this country; take off that load, and the people will get up.

Relieve labor of exorbitant railroad charges, that rob the producer at one end of the line and the consumer at the other and which exhaust their life and eat their substance. Take off these loads and labor can take care of itself. To this end, that labor may take care of itself, take it into your highest councils. Provide for it a vantage-ground; dignify it.

Mr. REAGAN. I know the gentleman does not wish to do me injustice in the remarks he has made. I have referred to the statute, and while the gentleman doubtless has copied a portion of it, he has not copied that portion I object to in the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would not misrepresent the gentleman for the world.

Mr. REAGAN. The words I refer to are these:

The best means to protect life and prevent accidents in mines, workshops, factories, and other places of industry.

This did not appear in that act. Nor did these words:

The secretary of agriculture and labor shall be empowered to inquire into the causes of discontent which may exist between employers and employés within the United States; and he may invite and hear sworn statements from both such parties concerning the matters in controversy.

Neither of these things is in the bill the gentleman copied.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is there about that that is in conflict with the Constitution? May we not do that if we can inquire by the gentleman's substitute as to the best breed of cattle, the best breed of hogs, and the best method of cultivating the soil in the several States? May we not do one as well as the other? The gentleman can not point out the distinction to save his life, nor can anybody else. It is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman will find when he reads my speech that I did point out the difference.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the gentleman what he thinks of the rate of 6 cents a bushel on wheat from Chicago to New York?

Mr. BLAND. How much did it cost to get it to Chicago?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Many times charges are not exorbitant. They vary; one time high and again low. In return, I repeat the question put by my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]; what did it cost to get it to Chicago?

Mr. DUNHAM. All the way from 4 to 15.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The railroads carry it cheaper for 800 than for 400 miles. Besides, there are elevator and terminal charges which are enormous.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is 85 cents in New York high?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, it is too low; but that results from another cause. It is too high, considering what the producer gets at the farm. This bill only provides for collecting information as to the condition of labor in the country, and this we must have in order to legislate intelligently. There are several provisions of the Constitution from which this authority can be obtained. The General Government may be called upon at any time to protect the States against domestic violence.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the committee will rise and report to the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I still have the floor.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5180) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BUTTERINE.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to present resolutions of the Chicago Board of Trade.

Mr. HATCH. Are they in reference to butterine?

Mr. DUNHAM. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I object.

The SPEAKER (at 5 o'clock p. m.) declared the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of many citizens of Harrisburg, Pa., for the passage of a law to redeem the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of citizens of Salem, N. Y., praying for the passage of a law for the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the same committee.

By Mr. WHEELER: Papers relating to the claim of Phillip Lindsey, of Lauderdale County, Alabama—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Walter Rosser, of Jackson County, Alabama, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

The following petitions, urging the adoption of the bill placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, taxing the same 10 cents per pound, and urging the adoption of such effective measures as will save the dairy interests from ruin and protect consumers of butter from fraud and imposition, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Agriculture:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Of citizens of South Lancaster and of Littleton, Mass.

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Of citizens of Union; of Garland, Me.; and of Jackson, and of Bolton, Miss.

By Mr. EVERHART: Of citizens of West Chester, Pa.

By Mr. GROUT: Of citizens of Holland; of Brookfield, Vt.; and of New York State.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Of citizens of Freelandville, of Franklin, of Carson, of Ainsworth, of Kendallville, and of Henryville, Ind.

By Mr. MORRILL: Of J. W. Dunthart and 36 others of Willis, and of D. E. Bonett and 20 others of Hiawatha, Kans.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Of citizens of Northfield, of East Trumbull, of Ashland, of Johnsonville, of Cincinnati, of Huntsburg, of Stryker, of Painesville, of Austinburg, of Seville, of Rootstown, of Lock, of Wakeman, of Weymouth, of Axtel, and of Beaver Dam, Ohio.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Of citizens of Worcester County, Massachusetts.

By Mr. EDEN: Of citizens of Macoupin County, Illinois.

By Mr. PHELPS: Of citizens of Passaic County, New Jersey.

By Mr. SCRANTON: Of citizens of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Of citizens of Mackinaw County, Illinois.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Of citizens of Westchester County, New York.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Of citizens of Washington County, Ohio.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 14, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I have in my hand a copy of a very interesting and able letter addressed to the President of the United States by Mr. William L. Elseffer, civil engineer. Mr. Elseffer is a very eminent civil engineer, and has made a very interesting and important discussion of the existing measures and plans for the improvement of the Mississippi River. I have been asked to introduce a resolution in the Senate requesting the President to forward that letter to the Senate for its information. I have a copy of the letter, and ask leave to present this copy and have it referred to the Committee on Commerce and have it printed, without going through the unnecessary ceremonial of calling upon the President. I understand that the letter is not confidential.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts presents a copy of the paper mentioned by him, and asks that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES. I present petitions of 119 farmers of the State of Massachusetts praying for the passage of House bill 8328 defining butter and also imposing a tax of 10 cents a pound on that which is not butter. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of citizens of North Reading, Mass.; a petition of citizens of Williamstown, Mass.; and a petition of citizens of Williamsburg, Mass., praying for the passage of a law against the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of William G. Bliss and 50 others, citizens of Richford, Vt., praying for legislation to tax or otherwise put down the fraudulent disposition of false butter; a similar petition of J. G. Aldrich and 120 other citizens of Shrewsbury, Vt., praying for the passage of similar legislation; a similar petition of W. S. Shattuck and 104 others, residents and citizens of Weston and vicinity, in the State of Vermont, on the same subject, asking the same relief; also the petition of A. A. Edson and 26 others, citizens of Chester, Vt., praying for the same relief. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented petitions of citizens of Boylston and Sterling, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the provisions contained in the bill concerning oleomargarine reported by the House Committee on Agriculture; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a petition signed by a dozen people in my State, "praying for the abolishment of the American house of lords and the substitution of a republican form of government." I do not know precisely what the petitioners desire, but I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of General Hiram Berdan, of New York city, praying for compensation from the United States for the use of his patented fire-arms; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. EVARTS. I also present a petition of prominent banks and bankers of the city of New York, praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar.

This is a matter in which my constituents having commercial relations in the city of New York take a great interest. The petition is a brief one and is signed by leading corporations and individuals of distinction in commerce and trade. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Your petitioners respectfully represent that on July 12, 1873, Congress enacted a law authorizing the coinage of a "trade-dollar" and making it "a legal tender for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

After $15,569,000 of these "trade-dollars" had been coined, and a large part of them had entered into circulation, Congress, on the 22d day of July, 1876, by taking away its legal-tender quality, virtually repudiated this coin, but the Mint went on coining them until May, 1878.

Soon after the Government began to coin the "standard dollar" no more "trade-dollars" were issued.

It is calculated that there are now in this country less than six million of these trade-dollars, more than 90 per cent. of which have been taken at par.

All that bear date 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 were "legal tender" when issued. Those bearing date 1877, 1878 were issued after the resolution of repudiation.

The withdrawal of the one and two dollar bills is calling into circulation silver dollars, and as the "trade-dollar" and "standard dollar" so nearly resemble each other, innocent parties, particularly laborers, are now receiving trade-dollars in many cases and in ignorance of their repudiation, and then find they can not use them in payment of their bills.

It is bad policy for Government to leave in circulation two coins so nearly alike, one of which is of unlimited legal tender and the other repudiated.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray that Congress would immediately pass a bill for the redemption of the trade-dollar.

Mr. TELLER. I present a resolution adopted at a convention of wool-growers of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho, held at Salt Lake City, remonstrating against a reduction of the tariff on wool, and favoring the restoration of the tariff of 1867 on wool and woolens. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT presented a petition of citizens of Manchester, Conn., praying for legislation imposing a tax upon the manufacture of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Dr. A. T. Mason and other citizens of Hagerstown, Md., praying that increased appropriations be made to enable the National Board of Health to prosecute investigations into the causes of diseases; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAWYER. I present various petitions signed by 914 dairymen and butter-makers of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a law taxing the manufacture of imitation butter. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion wss agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON presented a memorial of members of the bar of the county of Cochise, in the Territory of Arizona, remonstrating against the passage of House bill 5496, to increase the jurisdiction of probate courts in Arizona, and to repeal all acts of the Territorial Assembly creating county courts in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of the ex-soldiers and citizens of the National League, praying that the recommendations of the national committee of the Grand Army of the Republic be favorably considered by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHACE presented a petition of the New England Southern Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of laws for the protection of the Chinese; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Produce Exchange of Chicago, Ill., representing the produce and dairy interests of that State, praying for legislation for the protection of the dairy interests against the sale of imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of measures proposing to place a tax upon the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a joint memorial of Local Assemblies No. 4080, No. 1597, No. 4052, No. 4327, No. 5449, No. 5959, and No. 1912, Knights of Labor, of Englewood, Ill., remonstrating against proposed legislation to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine as injurious to the laboring classes and against sound public policy; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McMILLAN presented petitions of citizens of Saint Paul, Berne, Heron Lake, Mapleton, Pipe Stone, Rushford, Lewiston, Le Seur, Parke's Prairie, Nashville Centre, and Hutchinson, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the imposition of a tax on imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LOGAN presented a memorial of the Produce Exchange of Chicago, Ill., representing the produce and dairy interests of that State, favoring the Scott bill, which has for its object the protection of the dairy interest of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange, protesting against the passage of any law which shall interfere with or prevent the manufacture of oleomargarine or butterine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of Hudson, N. Y., praying for the passage of a bill for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Adams Centre, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing imitation butter 10 cents per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2392) to limit the commercial privileges of vessels of foreign countries in the ports of the United States to such purposes as are accorded to American vessels in the ports of such foreign countries, to report it with amendments. I am instructed to offer the bill as an amendment to the House shipping bill, and I shall do so whenever that bill comes up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2178) to authorize the Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railway and Bridge Company to erect a bridge across the Ohio River, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7938) to authorize the Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railway and Bridge Company to erect a bridge across the Ohio River, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. E. S. BRAGG of Wisconsin, Mr. E. L. VIELE of New York, and Mr. JAMES LAIRD of Nebraska, as Visitors to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., under the provisions of section 1327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1387) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the legal representatives of Eliza M. Ferris, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco in trust for the people of the United States: which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2429) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. F. Terret; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2430) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2431) granting a pension to Henry Shoulders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES. I introduce a bill with the merits of which I am unacquainted; but it has been sent to the Senate accompanied by a message, which has gone to the other branch. At the request of the Interior Department I introduce it and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 2432) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain improvements belonging to white settlers on the Mescalero Indian reservation, in New Mexico, and appropriating a sum of money therefor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2433) granting a pension to Joseph S. Lutz; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2434) to provide for the purchase of grounds and the erection of buildings for the post-office and for other uses for the United States, at Logansport, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2435) granting a pension to Henrietta M. Drum Hunt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of a Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I submit the following amendments intended to be proposed by me to the river and harbor appropriation bill:

For the improvement of the Chehalis River in Washington Territory, $5,000.
For the improvement of the Cowlitz River in Washington Territory, $6,000.
For the improvement of Upper Columbia and Snake Rivers in Oregon and Washington Territory, $36,000.
For the improvement of the harbor at Olympia, Washington Territory, $100,000.
For the improvement of Skagit, Steilaguamish, Nootsack, Snohomish, and Snoqualimic Rivers in Washington Territory, $22,000.

I move that the amendments be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was—

Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was—Ordered, That the papers in the claim of William H. Beck be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BRANCH SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a branch national home for disabled volunteers in Northern New York or Western Vermont, with a view to the care and assistance of disabled volunteer soldiers residing in that section of the country.

L. C. CAPEN.

Mr. HOAR. I offer by request a resolution to pay L. C. Capen $210 as compensation for extra labor performed by him while a messenger in the employ of the Senate, accompanied by a letter from Mr. Capen setting forth the grounds of his claim. I move that the resolution with the accompanying petition be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to L. C. Capen the sum of $210, as compensation for 294 hours of extra labor performed by him while messenger from February 5, 1885, to April 4, 1885.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is now in order.

The Chair will advise the Senate that under the fifth rule it is his duty to interrupt Senators at the end of five minutes, and although it is sometimes an unpleasant duty, Senators will feel that it is simply done in obedience to the imperative rule of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I was unable to hear what the statement of the Chair was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement was simply to remind Senators that it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the five-minute rule, and although it is sometimes unpleasant, yet Senators must remember that it is the rule which imposes the duty and not the wish of the Chair to interpose.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate at this time to take up certain bills relating to public buildings, which are on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senate proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator whether he means to take up all the bills which are reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MAHONE. That is what I propose to do.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to object to the taking up of any series of bills not regularly on the Calendar.

Mr. MAHONE. These bills are on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. It is not proposed to take them up regularly in their order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that assent has been unanimously given. Did the Senator from Michigan rise to make an objection to it?

Mr. CONGER. Is it the desire to go through with those bills?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object. I did not hear the statement when the Chair put it. I object to taking up any series of bills now that will go through with a series of appropriations. We have had that on pensions, have had that on a number of other things, and now it is proposed to take up the public building bills. I should like to see some other business done than simply giving away money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So that there may be no misunderstanding, the Chair will again put the question to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] that he move to take up the bills one by one, to avoid the necessity of asking unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can do that. A Senator may move to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the Calendar during the morning hour.

Mr. MAHONE. Then I move that the Senate take up Order of Business 269, being Senate bill 117.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I ask the Senator from Virginia, as his purpose seems to be to reach by consent action upon a number of bills, to yield for a moment to allow me to ask the consent of the Senate to consider at this time the bill just reported from the Committee on Commerce by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], providing for the erection of a bridge across the Ohio River between Cincinnati and Covington, assuring the Senator that there can be no discussion evoked by it? I think if I were permitted to make a statement of a minute I could convince the Senate that it is important and proper that the bill should be passed now.

Mr. MAHONE. Before yielding to the Senator from Kentucky, I desire to say to the Senate that the bills which I wish to take up this morning are for the most part bills making provisions for the completion of buildings which are already in process of construction. I now yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now I ask that House bill 7938 be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce this morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read in full for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 7938) to authorize the Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railway and Bridge Company to erect a bridge across the Ohio River; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. CONGER. I send to the desk a letter of the Secretary of War in reference to this bridge, which I think will satisfy the Senate that there should be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 13, 1886.

SIR: Your letter of the 11th instant is received. I have no objection to offer to the passage of the bill as it now stands. I understand that the bridge proposed is subject to the restrictions and provisions of the general law in all respects except the two particulars mentioned in the proviso. In reply to your specific inquiry as to "the effect the construction of the bridge contemplated in the bill will have upon the navigable interests of the Ohio River," I would say that I have considered from the first that this question is to be determined by the Secretary of War assisted by the board of engineers provided for in the fourth section of the act of 1883, after the railway company is authorized by law to bridge the river and has presented its plans and conformed to the other requirements provided in that section.

Very respectfully, yours,

WM. C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

Hon. S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KANSAS CITY.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 117) making an appropriation for the extension and enlargement of the United States custom-house at Kansas City, Mo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length if there be no objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is the motion to proceed to the consideration of this series of bills——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to proceed to their consideration one by one.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask if the motion to proceed to consider these public building bills is debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. The motion is to proceed to the consideration of the particular bill which has been stated.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is it not a fact that a majority of the Senate can carry that motion, and if that be so, is it not debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. Under the express terms of the rule a motion to take up a bill during the morning hour is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $150,000 for the purchase of suitable ground and the erection thereon of an additional building as an extension and enlargement of the custom-house at Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I presume that the bill is debatable, whether the motion to take it up is or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is debatable.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. There is no Senator here who can close his eyes to the fact that we have about three committees in the Senate whose only business seems to be to spend money, and that those committees all the time get a preference in the Senate. I should like to see some other business done, so far as I am concerned as a humble representative of a very humble constituency.

Mr. SPOONER. The appropriation is necessary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. A necessary appropriation! Yes, to build a house that nobody knows anything about, and that very few in the Senate know where it is to be built!

I know that these bills will pass; I know that almost every Senator on this floor has a constituency interest to represent in passing them; but I know at the same time that when we pass these bills we are taking money from the people who are not now able to pay it, and that the demagogy is here. Make the most of it here, but do not practice it when you get to your home. If I shall play the demagogue, I shall do it here and not on the hustings.

How many public building bills are to follow this one? How many pension bills have we passed? How many bills granting arrears of pension have we passed without knowing scarcely that we were doing it? And we have pending a general bill for arrears of pension.

Mr. President, I only ask that I shall be permitted to make my protest against what I believe all the people of this country recognize, simply the convening of Congress to make appropriations for one set of people and to tax another.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LAFAYETTE, IND.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 531) to provide for the erection of a public building at Lafayette, Ind., being Order of Business No. 281.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for the purchase of a site and the erection at Lafayette, Ind., of a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in that city, the site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the cost of $100,000.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

And the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of said site and completion of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DETROIT.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 282, being Senate bill 1131.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments. The first amendment was, after the word "million," in line 19, to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $1,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 44, after the word "million," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That if a new site shall be purchased for said building as hereinbefore authorized, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications of said building to be prepared, which said plan and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building, and the approaches thereto, exceeding the portion of $1,300,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan of said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 52, after the word "million," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read:

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any event to increase the cost of the new site and building, including approaches, when completed, beyond the sum of $1,300,000, as provided in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Virginia in charge of this bill to explain wherein this differs from the existing law on the subject? We had a very considerable discussion, I remember, last year on the question of the propriety of enlarging the present building at Detroit, or purchasing a new site; and as I read the language of this bill, it is substantially the language of the present law, and I should be glad to have the Senator from Virginia or one of the Senators from Michigan explain wherein this differs from the existing law.

Mr. PALMER. I suppose I can explain the matter better than any one else. The increase (which I imagine is what the Senator from Iowa wishes to ask about) is caused in this way: Owing to the change of site made by the commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and owing to a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the former bill was shorn of $200,000, which brought our appropriation of $900,000 down to about $700,000. On account of our having removed the site it became very evident after the purchase of the new site that it was very desirable—and in that the Secretary of the Treasury agreed—that we should have the balance of the block, which would call for over $200,000 more. That makes $400,000, which, added to the $900,000 already appropriated, would make $1,300,000.

The fact is, the appropriation is much less than Detroit is entitled to from her position and from the actual state of business there, and if the Senator would like a lot of statements by the rule of three by which that can be proved I have them in my pocket and I can read them.

Mr. ALLISON. I will take some other occasion to have those statements made. I do not ask for them now.

Mr. PALMER. I have them here and they might be interesting reading.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Allow me to ask the Senator how much the aggregate of these appropriations for public buildings will be?

Mr. PALMER. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator tell me how much the aggregate of these appropriations is or will be?

Mr. PALMER. I do not know. I hope many millions. I think that the United States can not do better with its money than to put up suitable public buildings that shall be educational as well as useful where they are demanded for the public business, and I propose always to vote for reasonable and proportionate appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. The reason I made the inquiry respecting this building was that last year the limit of its cost, including the site, was, I think, eight or nine hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. PALMER. Nine hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Now it seems that the new site has already been purchased, as I understand, and in view of the cost of that site it is necessary to increase the limit, and the only object of this bill is to increase the limit from $900,000 to $1,300,000.

Mr. PALMER. That is the only object. I will state here that the proceeds of the sale of the old building and the old site will be over $200,000, so that practically we only get $1,100,000. We are entitled, as I stated before, to about $2,200,000 by the rule of proportion, taking thirty-one cities of the United States as appropriated for.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAINT PAUL.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 554, being Senate bill 1919.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1919) to authorize the purchase of additional ground adjoining the United States court-house and post-office building at Saint Paul, Minn., the erection of a bonded warehouse, and the repair of the existing United States building at said place, and appropriating money therefor.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to amend the bill in line 7 by changing the name "Wabash" to "Wabasha," adding the letter "a," so as to read:

Not to exceed 100 feet on Wabasha street.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I also move to amend, which perhaps the committee will accept, by inserting after the word "lots," in line 6, the words following:

Or in lieu thereof, in his discretion, an equivalent in area of the ground fronting on Fifth street and adjoining said building.

The building is on a corner, and this merely gives the alternative to purchase a site on either side.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 780, being Senate bill 1592.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1592) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Denver, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, line 6, after the word "building," to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the section read:

That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colo., approved May 8, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $575,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to ask my colleague, if he will answer, how much money in the aggregate is covered by these bills that are reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that we are asked to vote upon to-day. It does seem to me that we ought to know how much money we are voting out of the Treasury when we are asked to simply take up bills for some Senator to move an amendment to, and we pass them blindly through.

But a few minutes ago the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] objected to a bill because he said it had been under consideration at the last session, and he finally consented to it because he could understand that the only purpose of the bill was to add $400,000 more to what he objected to at the last session of the Senate.

Now, sir, I am not willing for one to sit here and note that kind of language going into the RECORD, objecting to a bill and then saying that the only difference is that it appropriates $400,000 more, without some inquiry. I should like to know, for one, what I am voting out of the Treasury. We do not hear a bill here except so far as it is necessary to put into it an amendment. Why, sir, if I could do it with becoming diffidence—and I will almost presume it now—I might ask how many States are interested in these appropriations that you are making; and I assume that no Senator would go so far as to violate a constitutional obligation by voting for a proposition in which he had an interest.

We have done nothing but vote away money and take it out of the Treasury. Look at your Treasurer's report; the money is not in the Treasury to get out, and you have to put it into the Treasury before you take it out.

I know that Virginia has a court-house provided for in one of these bills, and I believe I know that three-fourths of the States have court-houses or public buildings in this series of bills; but I claim that until there can be some reason assigned for voting away this money we ought not to do it. I have sat here for the last four weeks doing nothing but quietly acquiescing in taking money out of the Treasury that is not in there, but they say it is in there.

Now, sir, if there be one Senator on this floor who will condescend not to answer me but to answer his own people, I venture to ask how much money are we called on to vote here out of the Treasury, and to tell us what States it is going to; tell us, if it be possible, the necessity for a building somewhere, tell us whether it is to be a court-house or a city hall or something to ornament a town, or something that is simply put into a bill to get some gentleman who was opposed to it to silently acquiesce in it.

I should think I was falling far short of my obligation and my duty to the Senate if I were to ask them to appropriate one dollar, ay, even a silver dollar, without giving them a reason and a public reason for appropriating it.

Sir, I mean to carry this question further than the discussion of it which suggests itself to Senators on this floor. I hear of strikes, I hear of bloodshed, in Chicago, in East Saint Louis, in Saint Louis. Do you expect to sit upon this floor and continuously vote away that which you extract from the pockets of the people, and not suppose they will strike? You are voting away money as if it belonged to you. I have asked gentlemen on this floor to state how they own one farthing of that which is in the United States Treasury. Have you paid in some taxes? Have you paid any taxes that you could estimate and say belonged to you? Yet you sit here and idly vote a million and a half on a public building, and not one Senator in five knows even in what State it is to be located or for what purpose it is to be used.

Now, sir, I do ask again—and that was the purpose of my rising—that some Senator will give us a statement of the amount of money that is to be voted out of the Treasury by these bills, and to how many States it is to go, and whether there is possibly enough of what we call Senatorial courtesy here—I believe I am not charged with practicing a great deal of it—that we can not now and then have the yeas and nays and let it be known who are voting for these indiscriminate appropriations and who are voting against them.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, only a few days since the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds made a very elaborate report in compliance with a resolution introduced by the Senator from Virginia who has just taken his seat, giving the details of every bill that had been reported from that committee and the amount of the appropriation; and if Senators have not read that report I beg leave to refer them to it for very full information on this subject. It is a valuable public document.

The bills that are being pressed for action this morning are, with one or two exceptions, for very small amounts. They seem to be necessary, so far as I know, from the reports of the Treasury Department, and it is necessary that they should be passed very early in order that the buildings may be properly completed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I venerate the Senator from Vermont, who I know is a member of that committee, but how can he expect any Senator on this floor to know that some one has made a report when that report has not been read in the Senate? We have not been asked to hear the report now referred to. We have been asked to do nothing but sit here and vote money for public buildings and public grounds. If there has been a report emanating from that committee, with all due respect to my colleague and to the gentleman who I believe is the senior Senator of the whole body, I have not heard the report and I do not think any other Senator has heard it. If it were worth the while of these gentlemen to make a report, it is worth our while to hear it read. I do think it ought to be read so that we may know what we are voting for.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, the bills which we are now considering have been before the Senate for a good while. They have been printed; they have been within the reach of every member of the Senate, to know not only where all the buildings are located, but on what particular account the bills are proposed, whether for a new building or for the completion of some building already in course of construction. In addition to that, there accompanies every one of these bills a special report giving the reasons for the appropriation, and those reports have been printed and have been placed upon the desks of Senators. So it has been all the while within the reach of the Senator from Virginia to get the information that he now seeks to obtain.

I will add, Mr. President, that the bills which we have under consideration this morning aggregate about a million and a quarter of dollars, all told.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to make one further observation. If that report has been where I could get it and read it, I am unaware of the fact. I have certainly been here in the Senate every day, and possibly my colleague makes the mistake of supposing that I have been away since Tuesday, but I have not.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HARRISONBURG, VA.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 781, being Senate bill No. 2058.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 2058) to complete the public building at Harrisonburg, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT DODGE, IOWA.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 782, being Senate bill 1611.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1611) for the erection of a public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MISS.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 783, being Senate bill 1550.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1550) to provide for an addition to the United States building at Jackson, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable fire-proof addition to the United States building in Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, for the accommodation of the register and the reciver of public lands, and for the safe-keeping of the records of the same, and also for use as offices of the United States revenue officials; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MARQUETTE, MICH.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 784, being Senate bill 1457.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1457) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Marquette, Mich., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the section read:

That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Marquette, Mich., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $125,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of the cost for the erection of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TERRE HAUTE.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 785, being Senate bill 430.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 430) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Terre Haute, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in section 1, line 6, after the word "building," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-eight;" so as to make the section read:

That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Terre Haute, Ind.," approved July 7, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $178,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARKERSBURG.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2191, Order of Business 786.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 2191) to complete repairs and alterations of the public building at Parkersburg, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAHONE. I have no further bills to present this morning.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a resolution for the preparation of a report as to each public work for which an appropriation is made in the river and harbor bill, to report it without amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed, when the river and harbor appropriation bill shall be reported, to report as to each public work for which an appropriation is made in said bill, the facts which render such appropriation advisable and of national importance, and the condition of the work, if begun.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a resolution for an additional clerk to the Committee on Commerce, to report it with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be an additional clerk for the Committee on Commerce for the remainder of the session.

The amendment of the committee was, to add to the resolution:

At a salary of $8 per day; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said salary out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule this resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask then that it be so referred.

Mr. FRYE. Might not the amendment be adopted first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be considered at all except for reference to that committee. The amendment goes to the committee with the resolution.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Committee on Commerce be permitted to sit during the sittings of the Senate for the remainder of the session.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order. The first case on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me, as we have taken up bills a little out of order to-day, it might be well to go on with that course; and I suggest that we take up the pension cases that have been reported since the last day they were considered.

Mr. CONGER. A special hour may be set aside any day by vote to take up pension bills and pass them, as we have always done heretofore; but let us now go on with the Calendar in the regular order of the morning hour.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; if the Senator from Michigan has something he desires to reach, I shall not interpose.

Mr. CONGER. Several Senators have bills which are of importance, and it seems almost impossible to ask that separate bills be taken up on the Calendar, and for that reason, for the accommodation of all Senators, I think we should go on regularly and thus reach in time the bills in which they are interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1219) for the relief of the heirs of Martin Kenofsky was announced as first in order.

Mr. HOAR. What was done with Order of Business 161, being the bill (S. 1406) fixing the time for the meeting of Congress?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That matter went over yesterday informally, retaining its place.

Mr. HOAR. That may as well go on the General Calendar, because I shall ask the Senate to consider it when we consider the constitutional amendment on the same subject introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that will require an express order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, Order of Business 161 will be considered as objected to and go over to the Calendar under the ninth rule.

Mr. HOAR. I did not exactly wish to enter an objection, but I desire it to go on that Calendar by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

MARTIN KENOFSKY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1219) for the relief of the heirs of Martin Kenofsky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, after the words "sum of," the Committee on Foreign Relations reported an amendment to strike out "$8,861" and insert "$4,992.50;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs or legal representatives of Martin Kenofsky the sum of $4,992.50, in full of all demands for and on account of the claim of the said Kenofsky for the proceeds derived from the sale of $4,992.20 of gold coin belonging to him and used in the service of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS ON ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution reported by Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, February 10, 1886, to print 4,000 extra copies of the report on Alaska by L. M. Turner.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report on Alaska, by L. M. Turner, be printed with the necessary illustrations, and that 4,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for distribution under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army.

SEWELL COULSON, AND PORTER, HARRISON & FISHBACK.

The bill (S. 249) for the payment of Sewell Coulson and Porter, Harrison & Fishback, for legal services, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, February 10, 1886, but before concluding was interrupted by—

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it is hardly necessary to read that long report. I am conversant with all the facts in the case. There is a valid claim for legal services there, and I have no doubt the matter is properly stated in the bill. I was counsel myself in the cases mentioned there on the other side, and I know personally that the services were rendered, and I have no doubt that the amount charged was proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to hear the report read. I thought I asked for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The exhibits and papers were being read. The substantial part of the report has already been read, but the reading will proceed if the Senator from Vermont wishes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I asked.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The facts in this case are clearly and fully stated in a report made to the House by the House Committee on Claims, first session, Forty-seventh Congress (Report 1755), which reads as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4431) for the payment of Sewell Coulson, and Porter, Harrison & Fishback, for legal services, having had the same under consideration, have carefully examined all the papers and evidence connected therewith, and find the facts substantially as stated in a letter of Mr. Coulson, which is in part as follows:

"'About the 1st of October, 1864, Samuel McCormick, of Sullivan County, Indiana, was captain of a company of State militia, organized and mustered in his county, under and in pursuance of the act of the State Legislature approved and signed May 11, 1861. Bedee Johnson, John McConnel, John Rotramel, John G. Kimberlain, Thomas Wells, Peter Wilson, and others, were members of said company. This company was frequently called into active service by the provost-marshal of the district, to aid in enforcing the laws of the United States, and in preventing opposition to the drafts or uprising of the people to resist the drafts.

"'In February, 1886, five civil suits were commenced against Captain McCormick and his men, in the Sullivan circuit court, to recover damages for false imprisonment in cases where they had made arrests under and in pursuance to orders from General A. P. Hovey, in command of the district of Indiana, R. W. Thompson, captain and provost-marshal, and Daniel Conover, captain and provost-marshal, both of the seventh Congressional district of Indiana, accompanied by orders from Maj. Gen. James Hughs, in command of the State militia.

"'At the same term of the Sullivan circuit court the grand jury returned an indictment against the same men, charging them with grand larceny for seizing two kegs of powder found concealed, and which were undoubtedly procured and intended to be used in opposing the Government of the United States. I was employed as counsel to defend all of these six cases, to wit: Andrew Humphreys vs. Samuel McCormick et al; Thomas Mayfield vs. Same; James Leach vs. Same; William Holson vs. Same; John Sisson vs. Same; and the State of Indiana vs. Same. On entering their first appearance in the civil cases the defendants filed their affidavits and motions with an offer to make requisite bonds to remove said cases to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana for trial. The motions were severally overruled by Judge Eckles, he holding the act of Congress of 3d of March, 1863, unconstitutional and void, and ruled the defendants to answer, pending which all the cases were continued. At the August term, 1866, judgment was taken by default in the case of Humphreys vs. McCormick et al., and his damages assessed at $25,000. Issues were formed in all the other cases, and the cases of Mayfield vs. McCormick et al. was tried by the court, which resulted in finding a judgment for plaintiffs for $500. These two cases defendants appealed to the supreme court; in the other three, on defendant's application, the venue was changed to the Knox circuit court. The indictment in the criminal case was quashed.

"'After the appeal of the cases of Humphreys and Mayfield to the supreme court Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback, of Indianapolis, were retained to assist in those cases, and did so. They filed a brief that required great labor, learning, and reasearch to prepare, the cases involving new questions, not then fully adjudicated.

"'These cases were decided at the November term, 1866, of the supreme court, by which decision the judgment and ruling of the Sullivan circuit court was reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the court below to pass upon the sufficiency of the bond that might be offered under the law of Congress, &c. (See cases, Mayfield vs. McCormick et al., 27 Indiana, 143, and McCormick et al. vs. Humphreys, 27 Indiana, 144, where a more detailed statement will be found.)

"'Immediately after the decision of the above cases in the supreme court, Judge Baker, of the Knox circuit, ordered the three cases pending in his court by change of venue to be removed to the United States circuit court for the district of Indiana for trial, which was done, and the cases were finally disposed of in that court at the November term, 1867, in favor of the defendants.

"'The cases of Humphrey and Mayfield were transferred to the United States circuit court at the May term thereof, 1868, and leave was given to plead at the November term following.'"

* * * * * * *

The claims for these services were filed with the Secretary of War, and the same were by him referred to the Judge-Advocate-General. Although the facts found by him are substantially as stated above, your committee think it fair to the House to give the facts as found by him, together with his conclusions thereon, which are in these words:

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE, May 10, 1875.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

This is the claim of Sewell Coulson, esq., and of Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback, attorneys, for their fees for professional services rendered in the defense of sundry actions instituted and prosecuted against a militia officer and men of his command, in the State courts and the United States circuit court, within the State of Indiana.

Mr. Coulson's account amounts to $4,500, less a credit of $550—that is to say, $3,950. The account of Porter, &c., is $3,000, less $500, or $2,500. Total, $6,500.

The credits indicated were amounts paid out of a fund appropriated by the State of Indiana for the indemnification of officers and soldiers of the United States and of the State militia who had been exposed to suits, &c., by reason of their military acts. In regard to this fund Governor Baker certifies in his statement, dated April 1, 1870, and contained among the papers, that "The appropriation was wholly insufficient to pay reasonable attorney's fees for the defense of all such suits as were brought. * * * The services rendered by Captain Coulson and Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback were not by any means compensated by the sums which they respectively received, nor was it so considered."

The present claims are accompained by an extended statement by Mr. Coulson, setting forth the facts of the inception and history of the proceedings.

The actions, which were all commenced in February, 1866, were six in number—five being civil suits for damages, and one a criminal prosecution for larceny.

The civil suits were severally instituted by Andrew Humphreys (apprehended and brought to trial by military commission with Milligan and others, for treasonable conspiracy, &c.), who claimed $50,000 for false arrest and imprisonment; by Thomas Mayfield, on account of the seizure from him of arms and ammunition found concealed in his possession with a supposed treasonable purpose; by John Sisson, for an alleged assault and battery and false imprisonment, growing out of the case of Mayfield; by James Leach, for false arrest and imprisonment as a member of the "Sons of Liberty" (a secret traitorous association in aid of the Southern rebellion), charged with resisting the draft; and by William Holdson, whose alleged ground of action was identical with that of Leach. The criminal indictment was in the name of the State of Indiana, and for the larceny of the property of Mayfield, above mentioned. The defendants in each case were Samuel McCormick, a captain of State militia (or of the "Indiana Legion," as it is styled), and certain members of his company, from five to thirteen in number. The order for the arrest of Humphreys was given by Brig. Gen. A. P. Hovey, United States Volunteers, commanding district of Indiana, and was addressed to Capt. John W. Day, First Heavy Artillery, Indiana Volunteers, who was directed to make the arrest "with the force turned over to him for that purpose, by Maj. Gen. Jas. Hughes," commanding Indiana Legion; Captain McCormick being thereupon ordered by General Hughes to report with certain of his company to Captain Day.

For the arrest of Mayfield and the seizure of his property by McCormick the order was given by the United States provost-marshal of the seventh district of Indiana.

For the apprehension of Sisson no order of arrest was ever made. It is represented in the statement of Mr. Coulson that he was never arrested at all, nor in any manner assaulted, &c., as claimed by him in his action.

For the arrest of Leach and Holdson by McCormick the order was given by Capt. W. W. Jones, Twenty-second Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, placed by General Hovey in command of the United States troops in the county of Sullivan, a detachment having been stationed there for the protection of loyal citizens.

Under what specific authority or circumstances the State militia had come to be under the orders of the district commander and provost-marshals at the period of these arrests, &c., is not set forth in Mr Coulson's statement.

The five actions were commenced in State courts, and subsequently removed to the circuit court of the United States, where they were finally disposed of without trial. In the suits by Humphreys and Mayfield, an application having been made and enforced by argument for the removal of the cases to the United States jurisdiction, the same was refused by Judge Eckles, who held the State court, whereupon both suits went to trial, and a verdict or judgment (in the former action of $25,000 and in the latter of $500) was rendered against the defendant. These cases were then appealed to the supreme court of the State, where, after an elaborate argument, the adverse ruling of the court below was reversed and the removal of the suits ordered. The other actions which had meanwhile awaited this result were also then removed. Complaints and answers were thereupon filed in the two first-named suits in the United States court, and after some continuance the same were, as above mentioned, finally dismissed for want of prosecution in November term, 1870. The suits brought by Sisson, Leach, and Holdson were dismissed in May term, 1868, for want of a declaration. The criminal indictment was quashed in or about August, 1866.

Mr. Coulson is understood to have acted as attorney from the beginning to the end of the proceedings. The services of Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback were rendered in the supreme court upon the appeal, and afterward in the United States circuit court.

The proceedings in the action by Mayfield were substantially identical with those in the action by Humphreys, and those in the actions by Leach & Holdson substantially identical with those in the action brought by Sisson.

The performance of the services and reasonableness of the charges are certified to by Judge Eckles of the State circuit court, by Judges Frazer and Ray of the supreme court of the State, before which the appeal in the two principal actions was argued by Governor Baker and by Hon. T. A. Hendricks, John C. New, J. T. Gunn, N. G. Buff, and J. E. McDonald, attorneys and counselors at law of Indiana.

No specific authority from the Secretary of War for the employment, at the expense of the United States, of Mr. Coulson or of Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback, in any of these proceedings, is to be found in the papers exhibited.

If, however, the communication of the Secretary of War, of February 22, 1869, to Hon. H. D. Washburn, M. C., in which the Secretary merely declines to consider the question of compensation till the services are fully performed, and upon the rendition of a final account, is to be viewed as a ratification of such employment, the Secretary would then be authorized to settle these claims, inasmuch as the services were entered upon more than four years before the passage of the act transferring the authority to employ such counsel to the Department of Justice, and were indeed almost entirely concluded before the date of such act. Should the Secretary of War regard himself as fully authorized to entertain the settlement of the charges, it would be the opinion of this bureau that, in view of the difficulty of these cases, the variety of services required in the same during the six years in which they were pending, the successful result of the contest, and of the testimony, above indicated, of the judges and counsel, in favor of the reasonableness of the fees charged, the Secretary would probably be justified in allowing the full amount claimed, although the same certainly appears to this bureau as a full and generous estimate of the value of the services rendered.

If, on the other hand, in view of the fact that no specific engagement of these counsel on the part of the United States, or authority for their employment at its expense, appears among the papers or is even claimed by the parties to have existed; of the fact that the defendants were State militia and not a part of the Army of the United States; of the fact that a provision inadequate though it may have been, was made for the fees of this class of counsel by the Legislature of Indiana, and that their share of it was accepted by claimants, who thus apparently contemplated that their fees were most properly a State charge; and of the further consideration that the payment by the War Department of so considerable an amount as that claimed (at a date when such payments have entirely passed within the sole discretion of the Department of Justice) could hardly have been contemplated by Congress in making the current appropriation for Army contingencies, as well as of the probability that other claims for professional services in these cases may yet be presented by James C. Denny and R. W. Thompson, esq., the Secretary of War should doubt as to his authority for satisfying these charges, or as to the expediency of his settling the same, it would be then suggested whether it would not be well to refer this claim, which in this aspect addresses itself rather to the generosity than to the justice of the Government, to the next Congress, with a view to a specific appropriation for its payment, if the same be deemed proper.

J. HOLT, Judge-Advocate-General.

And there being no funds at the disposal of the Secretary of war out of which said claims could be paid, the same were referred to the then Attorney-General with a recommendation for payment, as shown by the following letter of indorsement:

WAR DEPARTMENT, June 9, 1875.

Approved.

Inasmuch as there are no funds subject to the control of this Department for the payment of such claims, and it being suggested that there are funds subject to the control of the Department of Justice which may properly be applied to such purposes, the papers in this case are respectfully forwarded to the honorable Attorney-General, with recommendation of payment of these claims.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Subsequently, to wit, June 12, 1875, the honorable Attorney-General returned said claims to the Secretary of War, with the following statement:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, June 12, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the papers in the case of Sewall Coulson and Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback, relative to their accounts of fees for services in certain cases in said papers named.

I herewith return those papers, and beg to inform you that there is no appropriation over which this Department has control, and out of which these accounts can be paid.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

EDWARDS PIERREPONT,
Attorney-General.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Afterward, to wit, November 24, 1876, the Secretary of War referred said claims to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, in the following statement:

Respectfully referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for settlement. The account being approved at this Department, but no funds being available, it may be a proper case to report to Congress in the estimates.

By order of the Secretary of War.

H. T. CROSBY, Chief Clerk.

NOVEMBER 24, 1876.

And the said Auditor having examined the claims, did, on the 5th day of August, 1881, render his decision therein in these words:

DECISION BY THIRD AUDITOR.

In the matter of the claims of Sewall Coulson, esq., and Messrs. Porter, Harrison & Fishback for attorney fees.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
August 5, 1881.

The general history of these cases is stated in the report made to the Secretary of War by the Judge-Advocate-General, on May 10, 1875, to which I will refer to avoid recapitulation.

The claimants were not employed under any order or other authority emanating from the Secretary of War, nor at any time while the service was being rendered were they recognized by the Secretary as employed in behalf of the United States. The letter addressed by direction of the Secretary to Hon. H. D. Washburn, M. C., by the Inspector-General on the 22d February, 1869, contained no such negotiation, but merely declined to pass upon a case not then pending in the Department, but hypothetically presented in a letter, and the full particulars of which were not known at the Department.

The parties to whom these professional services were rendered were not in the service of the United States, but were officers and soldiers of the State of Indiana. It does not appear by whom these claimants were retained, but it does appear that part payments on account of these services were made and received from a fund provided by the State of Indiana.

If, as appears very probable, the matters in respect to which the services were rendered were of importance to the United States, it may be highly proper for the General Government to assume the burden of compensating these claimants; but only Congress can assume for the United States an equitable duty not based upon a legal obligation.

The claims not being within my jurisdiction I can not entertain them.

The papers will be transmitted, with this decision, to the Second Comptroller.

E. W. KEIGHTLEY, Auditor.

The decision of the said Auditor was confirmed by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, in these words:

Claim No. 42127.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
March 10, 1882.

Respectfully returned to the Hon. Third Auditor, the papers in the claim of Sewell Coulson et al.

The report of the Auditor is concurred in and approved, and the claim is disallowed.

However meritorious this claim may be, as against the General Government, it seems to be clearly one that can now be properly considered only by Congress.

W. W. UPTON, Comptroller.

"Your committee thought best to give the facts pretty fully in this case, even at the risk of repetition. It will be seen that the payment of these claims was recommended by the Secretary of War, and would probably have been paid by him or the Attorney-General but for the want of funds. The claims were rejected by the Third Auditor upon the ground, as stated by him, that 'the claimants were not employed under any order or other authority emanating from the Secretary of War.' While this may be true, nevertheless the services were rendered, and in the defense of men who were legally ordered to make the arrests and seizures mentioned above. The disturbances in Indiana during the war, and especially at the time of these arrests, are so well known that your committee deem it unnecessary to make any other than a general reference thereto. The arrests, &c., were made in the interest of the Government, and to protect loyal citizens of Indiana. It would have been manifestly unjust to have allowed the defendants in these several suits to have been compelled to pay counsel fees, as their cause was a common one, in which the Government was vitally interested, and your committee assume that counsel was necessary to the proper defense of these men.

"The disposition of all these cases was in favor of the defendants. The value of the services rendered is certified to by the then governor, Conrad Baker, Judge Eckles, who held the State court, by Hon. Joseph E. McDonald, Hon. T. A. Hendricks, by Judges Frazier and Ray, then members of the supreme court of Indiana, and others.

"Your committee believe that in view of the circumstances of this case, it is a proper claim to be paid by the Government, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee adopt the foregoing statement of facts and conclusions, with this further statement:

That while there is a lack of evidence showing an original employment by the Secretary of War, the evidence is conclusive that on a presentation of the e claims to him, with full explanations of all the circumstances, they were by him accepted, recognized, and approved as just and legal claims against the United States, based upon and due and owing on account of valuable professional services rendered in the interest and for the benefit of the General Government at a critical period in its history.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The reading need proceed no further now. Having myself been able to read through the report, which I could not do with any very great advantage after the bill had passed, I withdraw my request to have it further read.

The point seems to be whether these gentlemen were acting under a retainer of the United States when they performed this service, or whether they were acting for the State. The committee find from the correspondence that they were justified in supposing that they were acting under a retainer from the United States or a recognition by the Secretary of War, which, I think, is not an unfair conclusion of the committee, and that point being established, all the Departments agree that they ought to be paid.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I had the honor of reporting this bill, and the Senator from Vermont is entirely right. That is the real state of the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. CAMERON. During my absence some days ago Senate bill 1302, Order of Business 128, was passed over. I should like now to call it up and ask for its passage. It is a bill authorizing the appointment of an assistant secretary of the Navy. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] desires to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular business before the Senate is the Calendar under the eighth rule.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that that be laid aside for a moment and that the Senate take up Senate bill 1302. It was on the Calendar and put aside some days since during my absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves, pending the Calendar, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1302) authorizing the appointment of an assistant secretary of the Navy, and fixing the salary of the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to my friend from Pennsylvania that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] and two or three other Senators, as I remember, who opposed the bill before are not now in their seats, and it would not be quite fair perhaps to take it up in their absence.

Mr. CAMERON. I did not think at the moment of their absence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know that.

Mr. CAMERON. But the Senator from Kansas made a very elaborate speech on the subject, and I suppose he said all he can say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I presume he would like to be here to vote.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Kansas remarked after his speech, when it was proposed to vote, that he had only entered on the vestibule of the argument.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CAMERON. If objection is made I shall not press my request.

A. H. VON LUETTWITZ.

The bill (S. 794) for the relief of A. H. Von Luettwitz was announced as regularly in order.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

GEORGE S. FISHER.

The bill (S. 147) to reimburse George S. Fisher for losses sustained by fire in Japan, November 26, 1866, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MAXEY. There is an adverse report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I move its indefinite postponement, so as to get rid of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WESTERN MIAMI INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1433) for the relief of the Western Miami Indians of Kansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to the Western Miami Indians of Kansas, in the Indian Territory, out of the land fund to their credit in the Treasury, in cash, per capita, or to be expended in such other manner as he may consider best for their interest and welfare, $9,495, in order to relieve their pressing wants and necessities, occasioned by the destruction of their crops, and loss of cattle, hogs, and horses by disease, during the summer and fall of the year 1885.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that bill meet the approval of my friend from Massachusetts?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; I reported it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 1485) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. A bill has passed the House substantially the same as this, though there are some immaterial variations, and I should like to substitute the House bill for this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to proceed to the consideration of the House bill. If there be no objection the House bill will be considered instead of the Senate bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. There are some slight differences between the two bills that the Senator from Arkansas will explain if any Senator desires an explanation.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. They are immaterial. The two bills were compared carefully by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the House bill was considered substantially the same as the Senate bill. There are a few verbal changes, but they are immaterial in their nature.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to offer an amendment to section 9. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has called my attention to an omission there which should be supplied. In the fifth line, after the word "all," the word "fences" should be inserted and a comma, and the word "road" should be changed to "roads;" so as to read: "That said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, roads, and highway crossings," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 1485) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill wants the same amendment, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will notice that but five minutes remain of the morning hour, and the bill can not be read in that time.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to have the bill read and to take it up in the morning the first thing on the Calendar, unless we can have it acted on now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock the consideration of the Calendar is arrested. The bill will be read till 2 o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. There are two bills, one reported from the Senate committee and one reported in the other branch. There are no material differences affecting the provisions of the bill, but there are verbal ones. It is desirable that the Senate should pass, if at all, the bill as it has been reported to the other branch. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and to treat that as the Senate bill. That will cover all the verbal changes which are necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the House bill will be treated as an amendment to the Senate bill, striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserting the House bill No. 6388 as a substitute.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

That the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company on Red River, near Denison, in Grayson County, in the State of Texas, and running thence by the most practicable route through the Indian Territory in the direction of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, to a point of intersection with the projected line of the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway, in the Indian Territory, from Fort Smith to Paris, in the State of Texas, by the most feasible and practical route thereto, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turnouts, branches, sidings, and extensions as said company may deem it to their interest to construct along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Indian Territory, and to take and use a strip of land 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to right of way, for stations, for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road-bed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no more than said addition of land shall be taken for any one station: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be leased or sold by the company, and they shall not be used except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the nation or tribe of Indians from which the same shall have been taken.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants, according to the laws, customs, and usages of any of the Indian nations or tribes through which it may be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed one (who shall act as chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the nation to which said occupant belongs, and one by said railroad company, who, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall take and subscribe, before a district judge, clerk of a district court, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified, shall be returned with their award to and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion thereof, and a majority of said referees shall be competent to act in case of the absence of a member after due notice. And upon the failure of either party to make such appointment within thirty days after the appointment made by the President the vacancy shall be filled by the district judge of the court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or at the district court for the northern district of Texas, upon the application of the other party. The chairman of said board shall appoint the time and place for all hearings within the nation to which such occupant belongs. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $4 per day for each day they are engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, with mileage at 5 cents per mile. Witnesses shall receive the usual fees allowed by the courts of said nations. Costs, including compensation of the referees, shall be made a part of the award and be paid by such railroad company. In case the referees can not agree, then any two of them are authorized to make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the finding of the referees shall have the right, within ninety days after the making of the award and notice of the same, to appeal by original petition to the district court held at Fort Smith, Ark., or the district court for the northern district of Texas, which court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the subject-matter of said petition according to the laws of the State in which the same shall be heard, provided for determining the damage when property is taken for railroad purposes. If upon the hearing of said appeal the judgment of the court shall be for a larger sum than the award of the referees the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company. If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company shall pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and then have the right to enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of the railroad.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company shall not charge the inhabitants of said Territory a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the State of Texas for services or transportation of the same kind: Provided, That passenger rates on said railway shall not exceed 3 cents per mile. Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for freight and passengers on said railway, and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located; and then such State government or governments shall be authorized to fix and regulate the cost of transportation of persons and freights within their respective limits by said railway; but Congress expressly reserves the right to fix and regulate at all times the cost of such transportation by said railway or said company whenever such transportation shall extend from one State into another, or shall extend into more than one State: Provided, however, That the rate of such transportation of passengers, local or interstate, shall not exceed the rate above expressed: And provided further, That said railway company shall carry the mail at such prices as Congress may by law provide; and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation.

SEC. 5. That said railway company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said line may be located, the sum of $50 in addition to compensation provided for in this act for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in said Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $500 as each 10 miles of road is graded: Provided, That if the general council of either of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowances provided for in this section, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting nation or tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3 for the determination of the compensation to be paid to the individual occupant of lands, with the right of appeal to the courts upon the same terms, conditions, and requirements as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting nation or tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said nation or tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision. Said company shall also pay, so long as said Territory is owned and occupied by the Indians, to the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $15 per annum for each mile of railway it shall construct in the said Territory. The money paid to the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act shall be apportioned by him, in accordance with the laws and treaties now in force among the different nations and tribes, according to the number of miles of railway that may be constructed by said railway company through their lands: Provided, That Congress shall have the right, so long as said lands are occupied and possessed by said nations and tribes, to impose such additional taxes upon said railroad as it may deem just and proper for their benefit; and any Territory or State hereafter formed through which said railway shall have been established may exercise the like power as to such part of said railway as may lie within its limits. Said railway company shall have the right to survey and locate its railway immediately after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That said company shall cause maps showing the route of its located lines through said Territory to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the principal chief of each of the nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located; and after the filing of said maps no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void; and said location shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior in sections of 25 miles before construction of any such section shall be begun.

SEC. 7. That the officers, servants, and employés of said company necessary to the construction and management of said road shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon such right of way, but subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws, and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with said intercourse laws.

SEC. 8. That the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Texas and the western district of Arkansas, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have, without reference to the amount in controversy, concurrent jurisdiction over all controversies arising between said Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company and the nations and tribes through whose territory said railway shall be constructed. Said courts shall have like jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all controversies arising between the inhabitants of said nations or tribes and said railway company; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is hereby extended within the limits of said Indian Territory, without distinction as to citizenship of the parties, so far as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build at least 50 miles of its railway in said Territory within three years after the passage of this act, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built; that said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

SEC. 10. That the said Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company shall accept this right of way upon the express condition, binding upon itself, its successors and assigns, that they will neither aid, advise, nor assist in any effort looking toward the changing or extinguishing the present tenure of the Indians in their land, and will not attempt to secure from the Indian nations any further grant of land, or its occupancy, than is hereinbefore provided: Provided, That any violation of the condition mentioned in this section shall operate as a forfeiture of all the rights and privileges of said railway company under this act.

SEC. 11. That all mortgages executed by said railway company conveying any portion of its railroad, with its franchises, that may be constructed in said Indian Territory, shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of their execution, and shall convey all rights and property of said company as therein expressed.

SEC. 12. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act; and the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgages or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

Mr. DAWES. In section 9, line 5, of the substitute, I desire to make the same amendment as was proposed to the previous bill. After the word "all" I move to insert the word "fences."

Mr. MAXEY. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 9 of the substitute, line 5, after the word "all," insert "fences;" so as to read:

That said railroad company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, road and highway crossings, and necessary bridges over said railway, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I should now like to hear the last section of the substitute read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the last section.

The Chief Clerk read section 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 1886.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the pending bill may be concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that the unfinished business be laid aside informally for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that it is not a bill which will involve discussion.

Mr. MAXEY. There will be no debate whatever; it is precisely like the other bill just now passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3173) for the relief of Samuel H. Fleming;

A bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe;

A bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; and

A bill (H. R. 8188) to admit free of duty a certain lecturn for the use of the Saint Luke's Episcopal church, in the parish of Kalamazoo, Michigan.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], and on that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has the floor.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall not be deterred from performing what I conceive to be my duty in regard to the pending measure, or from expressing the reasons which will influence the vote I cast, because of the fact that I was upon the losing side during the last war. That struggle ended twenty years ago, and the animosities and prejudices which naturally grew out of it should cease to be invoked, especially as to matters of legislation.

As for myself, without any sort of bitterness or any retrospect that has the slightest acrimony connected with it, I am conscious that I have kept my oath of loyalty to the Government of the United States in letter and in spirit, and I propose hereafter to make no other promises or professions. I shall answer any allegation or intimation that I am not the equal of any Senator here in patriotic devotion to this country and in loyal aspiration for its welfare and honor as Lord Marmion answered the Douglas:

> And if thou said'st I am not peer
> To any lord in Scotland here,
> Lowland or highland, far or near,
> Lord Angus, thou hast lied!

The soldier who risked life and limb for his country is entitled to know that his country will repair all damages he has received in the line of duty. If disabled and not able to perform manual labor he should receive a liberal pension so as to be placed beyond penury and want. If his life be sacrificed, his last hours should be cheered with the certainty that the loved ones depending upon him shall be the recipients of the country's bounty in whose service he died. This is the contract between the country and the soldier who enters into its service, and the nation that would not keep this contract as a sacred obligation deserves to be blotted out from the map of Christendom.

How well the people of the United States have kept this compact is evidenced by the fact that by the votes of Senators and Representatives from the South as well as the North the enormous amount of $744,040,541.06 has been voted for pensions since 1861, and more than $700,000,000 of this amount has been voted to the Union soldiers of the war between the United States and the confederacy.

Although the South was impoverished and desolated by that war, the people of the South as well as its soldiers have borne without complaint or murmur their portion of the debt necessary to pay the sacred obligation to the soldiers of the Union, their widows and orphans. The Southern soldiers and the widows and orphans of the South have asked and will ask nothing from the victors except the right to weep for their dead and to defend the purity of purpose for which they died.

Steadily and rapidly since 1866 the pension-roll has increased. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that while in 1866 there were 126,722 pensioners receiving $13,459,996, in 1885 there were 345,125 pensioners receiving $65,693,706.

Now can it be expected from our experience in the past that this wonderful increase will pause even for a moment? The generosity of a great people toward the men who fought for their flag, and the anxiety of both political parties to secure what is known as "the soldier vote," have caused this generosity and this political anxiety to be utilized by claim-agents and curbstone lawyers in the city of Washington to invent new laws creating new classes of pensioners and to increase the pensions and the arrearages which they claim to be already due.

At each recurring session of Congress we are flooded with petitions to increase pensions, to originate pensions; and I charge here and now that this demand does not come from the citizen soldiery of this country. It comes almost entirely from Washington city and from the class of lawyers who are engaged in working up and making available for their own purposes these classes of claims.

As a proof of the truth of what I say I read from a letter received from a constituent, which I have now in my possession, and which well illustrates the truth of what I have charged:

Hon. G. G. VEST,
Washington, D. C.:

The inclosed circular will explain itself, and I desire to state that I am very much in need of the increase spoken of, and urgently request that you will use due diligence to aid in the passage of this bill. I am an invalid pensioner from the loss of both my eyes.

The inclosed circular reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6, 1886.

SIR: A bill has been introduced in the United States Senate by Senator WARNER MILLER, and in the House of Representatives by Hon. W. L. SESSIONS, to increase the pensions for the loss of both arms or both legs, or the sight of both eyes, or other injuries resulting in total helplessness, to $100 per month.

If you desire the passage of this bill I would advise you to at once communicate with your United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, urging them to do all in their power to secure favorable action upon this most meritorious measure.

PENSIONER.

By such means as this, Congress has been induced to pass at each recurring session new laws originating pensions and increasing the amount of pensions already granted under existing legislation. Touching and pathetic letters from those whose condition appeals to the sympathy and mercy of every humane Representative and Senator are poured into these Halls. A systematic effort is carried on from time to time, and so soon as the last dollar is wrung from the claimant under existing law the astute and fertile intellect of these legal cormorants located in this city is immediately put to work to invent a new law, and then we are flooded and overwhelmed with petitions from all portions of the country that we should pass it. Is it to be wondered at today that brown-stone fronts and immense fortunes attest the activity and zeal of these persons in Washington city? The soldiers of the country are utilized for the purpose of making private fortunes.

In the State of Missouri there are 109,111 Union soldiers. I undertake to say to-day that those soldiers, belonging to both political parties, have not demanded this legislation. The call for it has emanated in a large degree from the capital of the country; and the military organizations of the country, together with the appeals of private claimants, are being systematically used in order to swell the gains of these persons who are to-day making raids upon the Treasury in the name of the soldiers who risked life and limb for the country's flag.

The bill pending before the Senate has a precedent as to the nature of the relief to be granted, but it has no precedent as to the time within which that relief was given by Congress. Although an attempt was made in Congress in 1858 to give the soldiers of the war of 1812 a service pension, they did not receive pensions until 1871, some forty-seven years after the termination of the service. It was fifty-six years after the service that pensions were granted to the Revolutionary soldiers. The soldiers of the Mexican war, that handful of brave men who carried the flag of this country to the Mexican capital and who gave to the common treasury of the United States the enormous domain that stretches along the Pacific coast and the interior States and Territories adjacent to it, have applied again and again to Congress for a service pension without success.

I must confess some little surprise that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] yesterday defended with such zeal and earnestness the pending bill as it comes from the Committee on Pensions, when in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress that Senator supported a motion to strike out an amendment to the Mexican pension bill which came from the House, and which amendment, placed upon the bill by the Pension Committee of the Senate, was almost identical with the bill now before this body.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. With pleasure.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator well knows, if he will read the RECORD, that I admitted that the measure was meritorious and should pass upon its own merits, and I did not move to strike out the proposition because I was against it, but because I did not wish to have the bill encumbered.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator knows that I would not for any purpose in the world misrepresent him or misstate him.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course; I know that.

Mr. VEST. My impression was, and I have looked at the RECORD, that the Mexican pension bill, as it is termed, came from the House with a provision for a service pension pure and simple, and the Pension Committee of this body placed an amendment upon that bill which limited the pensions to soldiers who had served in the Mexican war, and were disabled, and were unable to perform manual labor.

Mr. BLAIR. The exact condition was this: The service-pension bill came from the House, went to the committee of the Senate, and was reported back a service-pension bill, with this provision and some other matters in the way of an amendment. So the Mexican pension bill as it came from the Senate committee was a service-pension bill, and the Senator from Illinois, I recollect, was opposed to amendments to it. I do not recollect that particular debate, but I remember hearing him express himself on the floor of the Senate as opposed to any additions to the Mexican pension bill at that time.

Mr. VEST. In other words, the Senator from Illinois, as my recollection is now and as I think the RECORD will show, was opposed to limiting the pension. He was in favor of a service pension, as I very well remember. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] now before me gave a history of the pension legislation of the country, and particularly alluded to the act of 1818, which gave a similar pension to that provided for in the pending legislation to the Revolutionary veterans. It was known as the pauper clause, and afterward created great excitement throughout the country, and was stricken out by Congress upon subsequent deliberation.

That I do not misrepresent the Senator from Illinois I quote from a speech delivered by him in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress upon his motion to strike out the disability clause, or the clause which stated that the soldier should not receive a pension unless disabled for manual labor. Said the Senator from Illinois:

I presume that no person in the Senate, not even the Senators who reported the bill, will insist on it that a soldier shall prove that he is a pauper, and that he shall be brought up before a justice of the peace in order to testify that he is a pauper, and is therefore entitled to a pension.

I presume that nobody wants to heap an indignity of that kind upon a man who has served his country.

Is not that substantially the provision that we have in this bill? The Senator shakes his head; but it seems to me to be substantially the same. Eliminating the process by which the proof is to be made to the Department that the soldier is disabled, that he is unable to perform manual labor, where is the difference? It is true that the pending bill does not provide that he shall be taken before a justice of the peace in order to make the proof, but he is certainly compelled to file his claim that he is not able to perform manual labor, and he must prove by additional evidence, if required by the Department, that such is the fact before he can obtain the benefit of the provisions of the pending measure.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who is now the ardent supporter of the pending legislation declared in the debate to which I have alluded, in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, that he was opposed upon principle to all service pensions of every description.

Mr. LOGAN. This is an additional pension.

Mr. VEST. It is not a service pension pure and simple, but it is a modified service pension, because under the provisions of the pending bill the soldier is pensioned not by reason of disability contracted in the service, but he is pensioned for any subsequent disability not connected with the war, because he has been a soldier of the Union. In that far it is a modified service pension. The Senator from Connecticut declared that the act of 1818, which gave a service pension for disability to the veterans of the Revolutionary war, and the act of 1871, which gave a service pension to the veterans of 1812, were vicious legislation, and that he never would support a bill which went further than present disability at the time he spoke. That there may be no mistake in regard to that statement I read from the RECORD the words of the Senator from Connecticut:

For myself I believe that disability is the only correct basis of a pension. I will not insist twenty or twenty-five years after the war that the soldier shall be compelled to prove that the disability was incurred in the service.

That is to say, he will assume that within that length of time the disability did originate from exposure in the service.

I am willing to admit that after as many years have passed as have now passed since the close of the war every soldier who suffers present disability shall receive a pension. But when you go beyond that, when you propose to pension soldiers for service merely, then you are recognizing the principle that a soldier fights for pay.

The provisions of the pending bill go far beyond the statement made then by the Senator from Connecticut. In the present measure it is provided that the soldier who comes out of the war unhurt by wounds or disease and goes back into the struggle of civil life prepared to contend for its emoluments and honors, if at any time afterward disabled from any cause whatever, from accident, from disease, from any of "the ills that flesh is heir to," becomes a pensioner for life. In other words, it is an accident insurance policy for life to every man who served six months during the war and was honorably discharged from the service.

While it is true to a certain extent, as has been eloquently urged by the Senator from Illinois, that the amount to be voted in pensions is not entirely determinate of the question before this body, yet we are compelled, as practical legislators, whenever a measure of this sort is pending before Congress, if we do our duty to the people who have sent us here, to look to the condition of the country and to the amount that must be taken from the Treasury to meet the demands of the bill.

Under this legislation what mortal man can approximate to the amount that will be taken out of the Treasury of the United States? The Senator from New Hampshire, as I understood him the other day in his first address upon this subject, said that the amount would not exceed $25,000,000 annually. I understood the Senator yesterday to modify that statement to some $20,500,000.

Mr. BLAIR. No; the Senator will excuse me——

Mr. VEST. Certainly; if I misunderstood you.

Mr. BLAIR. My statement yesterday was with reference to the soldiers. The dependent parents form another class. I said yesterday that I thought that both classes would be included within $25,000,000.

Mr. VEST. That is conjecture. It is beyond the ken of any mortal man to say what will be the amount taken from the Treasury under this measure. What human prescience can reach the accidents by flood and field, by casualty, by disease over a continent like ours? Who can undertake to say how many railroad trains may be hurled from the track and how many ex-Union soldiers will be maimed by such an accident? Who can say what disease, what pestilence may sweep over this country, and at each recurring visitation swell the pension-list beyond all proportion?

The Senator from Illinois says if it is right, then the amount should be paid irrespective of the sum required. But it is impossible for us to do our duty without knowing beforehand something in regard to the amount that will be taken from the Treasury by the votes we cast. I remember very well when the arrears-of-pension act was being discussed in the Senate and in the House it was predicted that $40,000,000 were the outside figures which would be reached by that law; and statistics, those dubious but ever-attendant insignia, I was about to say of a failing argument, certainly of a doubtful one, were paraded here in long lines to show that the expenditure under that act could never exceed $40,000,000. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that the amount already expended has reached $259,873,972.96, and if the limitation is taken off as proposed now by the Senator from Illinois in his amendment to the Mexican pension bill as it has come from the House the Commissioner of Pensions has stated that the amount required to meet that legislation would be $302,836,200.

Mr. LOGAN. To what legislation does the Senator have reference?

Mr. VEST. I refer to the proposed legislation to take off the limitation on the arrears-of-pension act.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator spoke of the amendment I proposed to offer to the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. VEST. I understood that it had been offered. Perhaps I am in error.

Mr. LOGAN. He spoke of the amendment I proposed as an amendment to the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I only ask the Senator to notice that the Commissioner of Pensions has shown that he is very much mistaken in a great many statements he has made.

Mr. VEST. I quote from the first report which I have before me in regard to the amount necessary to meet this expected legislation or proposed legislation. Subsequently, as I understand now from the report read by the Senator from New Hampshire yesterday, the amount required if the limitation is taken off under the acts of March and September, 1879, will be two hundred and twenty-two million and some hundred thousand dollars, but whether it be $302,000,000 or $222,000,000, either statement answers the purposes of the argument I now make.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that is for those who have already applied.

Mr. VEST. As my colleague says, that amount is for those who have already applied. A great many more will file their applications for arrears of pensions within the dubious and coming future. But, as I was saying, either statement, $302,000,000 or $222,000,000, illustrates the absolute nebulosity, to use the word, which covers this whole question. We were told that it would be $40,000,000 for arrears. We have paid out now $259,000,000, with $222,000,000 more to pay in the near future. Where are we to stop, if pause there be, in this wholesale legislation on this subject?

Thirty-seven years have elapsed since the close of the Mexican war. No such legislation as this has been given to the soldiers of that war. It is true that in 1818 a law was passed by Congress which gave relief or pensions to the disabled soldiers who followed Washington in the struggle for the young Republic; but the Revolutionary war closed on the 19th of October, 1781, and the long lapse of years between 1781 and 1818 had gone by before Congress saw proper to pass any such act.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Revolutionary war closed on the 19th of April, 1783.

Mr. VEST. That is true technically, and yet Yorktown surrendered in 1781.

Mr. HOAR. The troops remained under arms, and General Washington issued to his troops on the 18th of April, 1783, a general order, they then being in camp, declaring that the war would terminate the next day, which was precisely eight years from its beginning, and it may comfort the benevolent soul of the Senator from Missouri to know that he ordered a double ration of rum to be issued to each soldier in commemoration of the event.

Mr. VEST. When it comes to the question of rum, it strikes me that Massachusetts has made a great deal more out of rum than the people of Missouri or the Senator from Missouri. If I am not mistaken, that was the principal staple in the trade of Massachusetts for a great number of years. Trading rum for negroes and selling negroes to the South enriched that people to such an extent that they have ever since been sensitive on the question of negroes and rum both; and they have now undertaken to a large extent to prohibit rum after having exterminated slavery.

It is true that technically the Revolutionary war closed in 1783, but as a matter of fact Yorktown surrendered on the 19th of October, 1781, and it was thirty-seven years afterward before any pension was given to the men who followed Washington and who endured the privations of Valley Forge in their struggle for the flag of our country.

I have spoken of the amount and of the precedents in regard to this question. The general pension laws which are passed by Congress constitute not the only conduit through which the public money is being given out under this cry of relief to the soldiers who preserved the life of the nation. Each recurring session of Congress witnesses an arduous contest between Senators and Representatives as to who shall illustrate his political career with the largest number of private pension bills to be exhibited to an admiring and loving constituency. Our Calendar now is crowded with these private pension bills, and the daily press in localities where Senators and Representatives reside is filled with long columns of pension bills that attest the sincerity and zeal of the persons who represent their constituencies in the respective bodies of Congress. But the other day 240 special pension bills were taken to the President, the largest portion of which passed this body without being read, or if read, so eagerly and impatiently that no knowledge of their contents came to any member of this body outside of the Pension Committee.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. This process has been going on for many years, as the Senator says, and I ask him if he knows of a single instance wherein Congress has by special act granted a pension to an individual, officer, soldier, or relative of a soldier, where in his belief that pension was granted unjustly, he being himself familiar with the facts?

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I am familiar with the facts. I shall be perfectly frank in the discussion of this question, and I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that with very great reluctance I have brought myself to oppose the pending measure. I believe that I but voice the feeling of many of my colleagues situated like myself on this side of the Chamber when I say that we have felt a delicacy, to use that word, in interfering with either public or private pension bills on account of the fact that we were ex-confederates.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will permit me to say that I was entirely prepared for the honorable avowal which he makes in reference to his disposition toward this general bill and the special acts of which he speaks. I wish to say for myself, having by compulsion if not from disposition become very familiar with applications for relief under special acts, that I have never known a single one to pass the Senate committee or to pass this body where I do not believe the Senator from Missouri, himself being the judge, would have allowed the case and would have voted for it; and I have never known to be developed in the public prints or in the public councils a single instance where there was reason to believe that Congress had acted either injudiciously or too hastily or had been imposed upon fraudulently—not one.

Mr. VEST. It is impossible for an exact issue to be made between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself as to his allegation. I have not been upon the Pension Committee. I have submitted—that is the word—to this legislation on account of the fact which I have mentioned, the fact that I was upon the losing side in the last war; and I have left this matter to those Senators more fortunate than myself in that struggle, who represented the victorious side in that contest. But when this bill is pending, breaking down what I conceive to be the real and correct principle of the whole pension system, representing as I do a border State which furnished about an equal number of soldiers to each side in that conflict, I felt it my duty, against the delicacy of motive which has hitherto controlled me, to enter my protest against this legislation.

I do not believe that any man is entitled to a pension from his country unless after at least thirty-five years from his service, except under the contract which I have named, that so far as a pecuniary compensation can do so the damages he received while in the service shall be repaired. This bill breaks down or ignores that principle entirely. It is simply the precursor, the avant-coureur, to the wider and broader legislation of giving within the near future a service pension to every man who served in the Union Army.

The Senator from New Hampshire says that in each one of the individual cases no injustice was done, but on the contrary simple justice was meted out to the claimants. In the large majority, in fact I may say in all those cases the Pension Department had passed upon the claims and refused them.

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, no; not many.

Mr. VEST. Well, it is passing strange that they came to Congress if their claims could be passed through the ordinary channel of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but he is misled evidently. The cases which are reviewed by the Pension Committee after having been acted upon by the Commissioner of Pensions are almost universally cases where by reason of defect in the formal proof, documentary or otherwise, the Pension Commissioner does not feel justified in making the allowance under the law. So far from the action of the committee being always a reversal of the opinion of the office in reference to these cases, the parties come frequently to the committee with a letter from the Commissioner in which he recommends, by special act, the granting of the pension, because, though the claim is just and equitable, by reason of the limitations of the law which confine him he can not meet the requirements of the case.

Then there are many other cases where it was evident upon examination that a good cause for pension existed and it is impossible, by reason of lapse of time or the destruction of testimony, to establish the case to the satisfaction of any technical mind; and yet a mind looking upon the evidence from the standpoint of a master in chancery would find a verdict for the applicant. Many cases of that kind come to Congress.

It is not right to close without saying that in many instances the action of the office is directly overruled, and in that regard it may be proper to say that there seems to me to be no impropriety in assuming that the judgment of a member of the House of Representatives or a member of the Senate carefully given, after the examination of the facts in any particular case, is as likely to be right as that of a $1,200 clerk.

Mr. VEST. I do not doubt that there are numbers of cases which appeal to the equitable jurisdiction of Congress as against, to use the expression, the common-law judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions; but I do know, limited as my knowledge is on this subject, that there are numbers of pension bills which have failed in preceding Congresses that have passed through this Congress. I know that within my personal knowledge.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator must know that as time passes on it is possible for the applicant to acquire new testimony and to strengthen his case, not by the development of falsehood but by the recovery of facts which previously had been lost to him. It does not follow that the case is fraudulently sustained simply because as time passes on it becomes stronger, nor does it follow that the original decision rejecting the case was itself right.

Mr. VEST. I am not speaking of cases of fraud; I am speaking in regard to the sufficiency of proof. I know cases where the identical proof has failed in the preceding Congress and has been sufficient for this.

Mr. BLAIR. That might be.

Mr. VEST. I know bills that have received not a single vote in committee which when one of these pension "spasms," to use the word, has struck the committee or the Senate have passed through without question. The two hundred and forty bills that went to the President of the United States in one day embraced or caused an expenditure of $35,000 annually from the public Treasury. They received absolutely no attention in the Senate, and the only examination they had was from the Pension Committee. We have now, I am afraid to say how many more of these bills pending. The Calendar evidences the fact that about half of it is taken up with individual pension bills, and they will be passed after a report from the Pension Committee. So year after year, by general and special legislation, we are taking from the public Treasury enormous sums of money to enrich the claim agents and curbstone lawyers in the city of Washington without any demand for it on the part of the citizen soldiers of the country.

I have a right to speak for some of these soldiers, because they are my political friends and supported me for my present position in the Senate. They went into the war and bared their breasts to shot and shell honestly for the country's flag, and they deserve all credit and honor for it. They took their chances in the storm of battle. If they survived uninjured by wounds or disease, they bared their bosoms to the civic conflict, the struggle in civil life for emolument and honor upon an equal basis and footing with their fellow-citizens around them. It is the boast and honor of the citizen-soldier of the United States that he does not ask from the country after the contract between him and the country is ended, after he has served as a soldier, and in the providence of God has escaped wounds and disease, that on account of some railroad accident, some attack of typhoid fever, he may be enabled to come to the Treasury and say, "I escaped from the war untouched, my contract with the country was ended, but I now propose to become a pensioner upon the common Treasury of the people."

Mr. President, I am tired for one of being used by the pension-claim agents of Washington city to increase their spoils or by ambitious statesmen to enhance their political fortunes. I am determined to make this issue with my own people, and I declare here to-day that I am not going any further in the direction in which we have been recklessly hurrying. This bill means an indefinite raid upon the public Treasury for an indefinite time. It means that the people's money shall be taken from the Treasury for the purpose of paying for a length of years beyond the prescience of any mortal man an indefinite amount of money, and I shall vote for no such measure.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the details of the bill; I only rise to make a few general remarks on the subject of pensions and to take this occasion to correct some statements which have gone out to the country.

I would say in the outset that the present Commissioner of Pensions has made some reflection upon the late administration of the Pension Office. That is a matter which I understand is now under consideration by a proper committee of this body. I therefore shall say nothing upon that subject. I shall leave it until the proper time.

Every soldier who went into the Army of the United States went in with a contract that if he came out disabled in any manner he should receive a pension of a certain character. That was a contract as binding upon the General Government as the contract to pay its bonded debt or any other obligation of the United States. Further than that the Government did not go; further than that there is no legal obligation upon the Government. Whether we ought to pension the soldier who is unfortunate because of occurrences independent of his Army record is a question addressed, first, I suppose to our economic judgment, whether we are able to do it; and secondly, whether we ought to do it in view of the services rendered with a proper regard for the honor of the nation.

At all times, in all portions of the world, and in all history, the men who have gone out and fought the battles of the country have occupied a high position in the affections of the people. All nations have in some way attempted to reward them for their devotion to their country. If we were asked to vote money out of the Treasury for such a purpose when there happens to be a very large sum of money there not at present being used, I suppose the simple question to be presented is, are we able to do it? I do not know that anybody has contended, or will contend, that the United States Government is not able to do not simply what it has contracted to do, but the generous thing, if it sees fit.

I say we made a contract with the soldier to pay him a pension in a certain contingency. We provided at once the machinery for determining whether he was entitled to it under the contract. It was a contract on our part as to which we reserved the right to determine for ourselves whether the obligation existed. We called together a great number of people of moderate capacity, of but little learning, and we put them at work to adjudicate in our behalf as our employés upon the questions presented by these applicants, not for bounty but for what was rightfully the due the applicants under the contract. We denied to those people the opportunity of going into the market and hiring competent attorneys to represent them before our own tribunal created for the purpose of adjudicating their claims. We shut the doors of the Department against this class of men when they came there to inquire what was their record except that they first came through the source and in the manner that we provided they should come.

Year after year these men came and lodged their complaint before our tribunal, and complained year after year that we did not adjudicate upon their claims, but held them in suspense, until many a soldier who had lodged his complaint, before it became a matter of determination, had passed beyond the benefits that were supposed to be conferred upon him by his contract. Year after year they petitioned Congress for more efficient methods of adjudication. I recollect when I was in the Senate some years ago—and the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] referred to it yesterday—this Chamber resounded with the denunciations of claim agents and the fraudulent soldier claims that were presented. I remember that a distinguished Senator, who is not in the Chamber to-day, repeated day after day in the hearing of many members of the Senate that 10 per cent. of all the claims which had been allowed were fraudulent claims; and, as the Senator from Illinois said, for the purpose of determining whether the claims were fraudulent or not—that was the purpose expressed—the Government went to work and first made out a list of every man who received a pension and the amount that he received, and then the lists were published in the country papers all over the United States, and the people were invited to make their complaints as to any persons on the roll they could find who were not entitled to a pension.

I am glad that I do not remember who introduced that resolution, because if I say anything of it that might be considered harsh it will not be personal. That resolution was introduced into this body at the bid and beck of men who wanted to know who were the soldiers of the United States. It can be demonstrated that as much as $100, for that was developed recently where I had an opportunity to know, was paid for the first publication of that volume that was lodged in the second-hand book stores of this city. Thereupon every claim agent hired clerks and sat them down to write to those soldiers that they were not receiving as much as they were entitled under the law to receive. Then came a flood of applications from those men who believed they were not receiving what the law entitled them to have, and who had been informed, by persons who asserted that they knew, that they were not so receiving it, and that if they would apply to them they would receive an additional sum.

I forgot to say that in the early legislation when we denied to the soldier the opportunity to select his own attorney, or at least to pay him what he saw fit, we fixed a provision in the statute that no attorney should be paid more than $25, and that he should not be paid until he had secured the allowance of the claim. By the same method exactly that the pension-roll was made up and published that provision of the statute was repealed, and every claim agent was allowed to charge the sum of $10, and $10 only. That was done in the interest apparently and professedly of the soldier, but it was in the interest in fact of the claim agents of the country.

I will stop here a moment before I allude to some other things to show how that worked. A man started a claim agency; he sent out his circulars all over the country to every soldier, whether he was on the roll or whether he was off the pension-roll, and solicited either that he should apply for a pension or that he should apply for an increased pension. He drew upon him as much as he could, to the extent of $10. When he had that done, he stopped. I do not think it is a stretch of imagination when I say that he turned the case, in some instances, over to another man and he to another from three to four and five times. He turned the case over to somebody else because he had gotten all he could. When he could not get any more he ceased his effort. The soldier appealed in vain to have his case moved, and it was not stirred. Then some other fellow sat down and sent a circular and said, "I understand your claim has dragged. Your agent does not press it. Send it to me." Then to the new agent it went with another payment. When he got what he could get out of the claimant, to the extent of the $10, he sent it to another, and so it went on by collusion ad infinitum just as long as the soldier would respond.

The claim agents, I am glad to say, were not all of that character. There were very many reputable men who did their duty before the Department in an honest and straightforward way as an attorney would do it in court.

Subsequently there was a revision of that provision and the old law was restored. The effect was that there was no inducement for a man then to get up a false, fictitious claim to induce a soldier to send in a plea for a pension when he knew he had not any claim, and it relieved the office of a great number of claims, and relieved the soldiers from being robbed by a class of unworthy men.

Now, I wish to come back to what has been so often said about the fraud upon the Treasury of the United States by the granting of pensions. In the first place, I want to reiterate again that we have not paid a dollar except as we contracted to pay, unless in the few cases which have gone through here when there was a lack of evidence of such a character as would enable the Department of the Interior to grant the pension. Those are insignificant in number, and in the great majority of cases, as I can say from an experience on the Committee on Pensions, there could be no doubt but that the soldier was entitled to receive his pension but for lack of some connecting link of proof that he failed to get.

The cry that there was fraud in the pension laws affected the Pension Office. I have no hesitation in saying that but a few years ago there was a feeling in the Pension Office that every application which came in was a fraud, and that every clerk regarded it as his duty to hunt out and, if possible, find some method by which the application could be rejected. I do not know, and nobody will ever be able to determine, how many men have claims pending that ought to be allowed. There are one hundred and fifty thousand invalid pension claims still pending and undetermined—more perhaps than that, but at least that number. A great many persons who are entitled to pensions will never be able to make the proof; others will never make the proof because of their ignorance.

I have had some considerable observation and some experience in these matters, and I have found that it was impossible and it will be impossible with the best administration of the office to prevent errors and mistakes with the materials that are furnished the Pension Office for the adjudication of these claims. I recollect during my previous term in the Senate a case was called to my attention of an old woman whom I had known in the western part of the State of New York who had lost a son in battle. There was no question about his having been killed in defense of his country; no question of that kind was presented to the Department; but when the evidence was presented the Department said to the old lady, "You have not produced proper evidence as to the fact that this man was your son;" and she was told, "You must obtain the evidence of some person who was present when the child was born and send that to the Department." The old woman sat down and waited for fifteen long years under the impression that that was the law, under the impression that she must produce that proof or else she could not get a pension. It was only by accident that I discovered that such a demand had been made upon this old woman, and when she was eighty years of age, after having supported herself for seventeen years by her toil and her labor, she finally got a pension. The stupidity of a clerk or of a pension agent had kept her out of it, not the ingratitude of the Government; and the records are full of cases of that kind, and they ever will be while you have human agents to determine such questions. Now and then undoubtedly an agent errs on the other side, and occasionally it is probably true that somebody gets a pension who is not strictly entitled to it under the law.

But I remember in 1880, if that was the time, when there seemed to be so much anxiety, when we allowed to the Secretary of the Interior additional force for the purpose of detecting frauds, and when we filled the country everywhere with the agents of the Government investigating the question whether these men were entitled to be on the roll or not; when we called upon all their neighbors and everybody in connection with them or who knew anything about them to send in their complaints, we did not find the half of 1 per cent.—not one man in two hundred was found to be on the roll without being entitled to be there. Since that time the Department has been furnished with additional agents, and the system of investigation of those claims has been materially improved. There are now in the field at least one hundred and fifty men of a better class and better grade, who are sent out, and the Commissioner sends them anywhere that he pleases whenever there is a complaint. An anonymous letter, charging that a soldier is receiving a pension to which he is not entitled, is received, and even such a letter always has found, and always should find, ready response. The Commissioner sends a person there at once to investigate the case, and if it is found that the man is not entitled to a pension he is dropped off the roll; or if there is doubt about it he is dropped off the roll.

Mr. President, I recollect about a year ago, owing to a change of administration, there was a good deal said about the purging of the roll. I do not contend that anybody connected with the administration was responsible for it; I have no reason to suppose that any person charged with pension affairs was; I want to make a disclaimer of that; but the newspapers contained from time to time statements that at such a place, at Boston for example, there had been so many dropped from the roll, at Chicago so many had been dropped from the roll, and that the roll was now being purged of all the dishonest and fraudulent claims which had been allowed under previous administrations. I recollect that just about a year ago a man came here from the State of New York who announced that he had come to the conclusion that he had been receiving a pension from the Government long enough. He was receiving a large pension, $72 a month, and he said that he had received more than he ought to receive, that he was able to take care of himself, and he came here and proposed to surrender his pension. The newspapers were full of the fact that this reform had reached even the pensioners themselves and that they too were about to assist in purging the roll of the fraudulent claims. It turned out a few days afterward that this poor, unfortunate fellow was an escaped lunatic from one of the asylums in New York, and he was soon returned to the asylum, where I am sorry to say he is still confined.

If there are persons improperly on the pension-roll it is practically the fault of the Government, for all the agencies that are necessary have been given to the Department for the purpose of eliminating such frauds. I do not myself believe that there is any considerable number of such cases in existence, while I do believe that, under the technical rules which have been adopted from time to time by the Department, there are thousands of people who have applied who are not receiving pensions to which they are properly entitled, and that there are others who have been deterred from making applications by the strictness of the rules.

Up to 1884 it was the rule that a man who went into the Army, who was accepted by the Government after an examination as to his physical ability, had to prove that he was a sound man when he entered the Army, and thousands of cases were rejected because the applicants could not submit such proof. Congress has since provided another rule, that the presumption should be that the man was sound when he enlisted in the Army.

Here I want to refer to the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions, in which I find that there were 345,125 pensioners on the roll. I find that during the last year 15,233 persons were dropped, or less than 5 per cent. of the whole number on the roll. I believe that a great many people in the United States, when that statement is made, suppose that those whose names were dropped from the roll were dropped because they were improperly there. Of this number of invalid pensioners the names of 3,998 were dropped because they were dead; of widows and dependent relatives 1,694 were dead, and so on, until the total number who were dropped from the roll on account of death, remarriage, or because they were minors coming to the age fixed by legal limitation, or because the pensioners had failed to call for their pensions and for other causes not given, including frauds and all other things, was less than 2,000, or 1,914 to be exact, a mere bagatelle, and only a small percentage of these were dropped, mind you, because they ought never to have been upon the roll.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make any extended remarks upon the question of pensions. I simply rose to say that I have always regarded the obligation of the Government to pay the soldier equal to that to pay any other debt. We talk a great deal about the expense of the pension-list, as if it was something that we ought not to have paid, something that we might have avoided or from which we might have escaped. I suppose we need not have paid the nearly $3,000,000,000 that we owed when the war closed. I suppose we might have repudiated it, and we could have repudiated it and stood before the world in a great deal better condition than if we should repudiate our contracts with the men who fought for us at $13 a month. We have paid to the pensioners in the United States $744,000,000; we have paid as interest on the debt to the men who loaned the money to carry on the war more than three times that sum, and we are paying their debt besides. We have no right to repudiate either obligation. They are both sacred and should be kept, and to the satisfaction of us all the Government is able to keep its obligation both to the men who loaned it the money and to the men who fought its battles.

We boast sometimes that we have dealt liberally with the soldiers, and we also boast of the total amount we have paid them when we want to congratulate ourselves as a nation that we have done so much. We figure up and say we pay $65,000,000 a year to pensioners. We do not pay any more than we contracted to pay, and we do not pay any very magnificent sum to the men who took their lives in their hands and maintained the integrity of the nation.

I have here the list showing the amount that we are paying, to which I referred yesterday when the Senator from Illinois was speaking, and I will refer to it again.

We are paying 1,260 persons $1 a month. We are paying, as I said yesterday, $2 a month to 26,134—$2 a month or $24 a year. We are paying to 60,268 persons $4 a month or a little less than $50 a year. We are paying to 34,639 pensioners $6 a month. When you reach $12 a month you have got 15,480 receiving that amount. Then we rise to some of the higher numbers, and we have pensioners at $40, $47, $48, $50, $72, one at $75, and one at $100.

Mr. President, the one at $100 is the present Commissioner of Pensions, and I do not mention it to say anything to his discredit. I say here and now, whatever criticism may have been made on his receiving the pension, that, in my judgment, he does not receive a dollar more than he is entitled to receive from this Government. I do not believe any man who is in his condition in consequence of his service to the country ought to be asked to take less money as long as there is a dollar in the Treasury. I think, on the contrary, that many of these men who are receiving the pittance of a dollar a month, of $2 a month, of $3 a month, and $5 a month, ought to be receiving double the latter sum as compensation for what they are suffering and under the contract, and I want to say here that I am satisfied the Department has never been overliberal in rating these people high. Why? Because there has been such a thundering at the door of the office against large pensions, and such a cry as if it was an extravagance, that he has to be a very courageous officer who goes beyond the very strictest letter of the law.

Mr. President, I believe the proposition to put the Mexican war soldiers upon the pension-roll, without reference to their disability, without reference to their poverty, has met with the universal approval of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. I recognize the great service rendered by the Mexican war veterans; I recognize the fact that they carved out of Mexico for us an empire that has added incalculably to the wealth of the country, that has strengthened it and made it great and powerful; but I do not recognize their services as to be compared with those of the men who went out to battle for the integrity of the country, to save its territorial integrity, to save its principles, and to maintain it intact as a nation. They are entitled to immeasurably more than the other men. They are entitled to greater credit because the work was greater, inasmuch as human liberty, human freedom, is greater than dollars and cents or territorial area; and if we can vote service pensions to the one we ought to vote them to the other; and if we can vote them to but one we should vote them to the men who have rendered, in my judgment, the greatest service that men have rendered to governments in modern times.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I said yesterday all that I desired to say in reference to the general features of this bill, but I wish to reply for a moment to a remark made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who is not now in his seat.

I have never heard an argument in this Chamber that I considered substantially good in opposition to granting a pension to a soldier who was disabled from wounds or disease, or from any misfortune that had befallen him where it was owing to no fault on his part; but the argument resorted to to-day is the same one that has been resorted to for years whenever a bill was before the Congress of the United States to grant pensions. The objection was, first, the amount to be taken out of the Treasury; second, that agents about this city were building brownstone fronts. I have heard that argument a dozen times. As to whether they build brown-stone fronts or any other kind of fronts I have naught to say, for I do not know; but I will say in reply to the Senator that no pension agent can obtain a pension for a soldier under the law unless that soldier is entitled to it, provided the officers of the Government do their duty.

What answer is it to the misfortunes of a man who is entitled under the law to a pension to say that some attorney may ask to be his agent in obtaining his pension? Is that an answer to his disability? Is that an answer to his misfortune? Is that an answer to the equity in his case as to whether he shall be allowed a pension by this Government or shall have it refused? Why, sir, this red rag has been shaken in the Senate Chamber time and again. If men can not be frightened by the amount that is to be expended for these unfortunate soldiers, next we are told it is the pension agents of Washington city who are urging these bills.

Sir, if the Senator were present I would tell him who was the only man who has spoken to me on this subject. Pension agents may have sought the Senator's presence, but they have not been seeking mine. I have had letters from poor unfortunate soldiers, which I frequently receive and always respond to; but aside from letters the only application was from a poor unfortunate man from the State of New York, legless, walking on wooden legs. He came to me and discussed this question of pensions, and he is the only man who has done it outside of this Chamber. If that man without legs, who lost them in battle for his country, is one of the pension agents who are to be benefited, in God's name let him be benefited. I have never heard of him as a pension agent; but if that class of unfortunate men can be benefited by the Congress of the United States doing for them that which in my judgment is honorable and is a duty incumbent on the representatives of the people, I am ready now and at all times to do it. I will repeat what I said yesterday, that I have no respect for a government which allows the poor soldier who has become a wreck, not by his own fault but by misfortune, either by disease or by any accident that may happen to him, to perish, and which says to him, "True, you helped save our country when it was in its direst trouble, and now that misfortune has overtaken you, though the Treasury is plethoric, we must economize; it is true you are unfortunate, but there is a pension agent up here in town who might make money, and therefore you shall not have the bounty of this great Government."

Mr. President, such arguments as these are unworthy of the Senate of the United States. The only question should be, "Is he entitled to the bounty of his Government?" If he is, give it to him; if he is not, let him go a beggar before the world.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will withhold that motion for five minutes. There are a few observations I wish to make.

Mr. CAMERON. I prefer to insist on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the motion will not prevail, for five minutes at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I only want five minutes.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the intimation that this bill is the offspring of the mercenary brain of claim agents is as far from the truth as any intimation possibly could be. So far as I know, it is a bill in which the claim agents never have exhibited the slightest interest whatever. The principle involved in this bill was incorporated in our legislation, as I have already stated, as early as the year 1818, and in a more emphatic form than it is embraced in this bill. It continued to be the law with reference to the soldiers of the Revolutionary war and their widows for fourteen years, when a service pension pure and simple, giving to all those soldiers and their widows a pension at a specified rate regardless of disability and regardless of want or dependence, was enacted into law.

Then again we have by a proposition not adopted in the year 1858, but the adoption of which was delayed unquestionably by the outbreak of the war, rendering it by reason of its great burdens impossible for us to assume it earlier, and the adoption of which was for that reason deferred until 1871, asserted the same principle by legislation and applied it to the soldiers and the widows of the soldiers of the war of 1812. And on more than one occasion, I think three times, the House of Representatives has passed a service-pension bill, pure and simple, in favor of the survivors of the Mexican war. Once the Senate has passed that bill. So the principle involved here and its extension to those who are without any dependence, any need, or any disability, has been in all these instances already indorsed in the history of legislation, and to fail to indorse it at the present time would be to institute an exception in regard to those soldiers who preserved the unity of our institutions and the integrity of our territory.

It is true, sir, that it is at the present time proposed to extend the benefits of the public bounty, if you choose so to call it, to this class of disabled and dependent men a little earlier than was done in the case of the Revolutionary soldiers; but it is to be remembered that the exactions of war in these modern times are even greater than they were then. Arms are more deadly; the exactions of campaign life are greater than they were then. Beyond this, the wealth of the country, its capacity to assist those who are in need of assistance, is altogether out of proportion to what it was in the earlier day. At the time when our fathers assumed the burden of assistance to the indigent soldiers of the Revolution we were in the most adverse industrial circumstances known at any period of our history since the Revolutionary war itself and the few years which immediately followed it before the organization of the Government. And yet notwithstanding those circumstances the nation assumed a far heavier pecuniary burden then than it is proposed that we take upon our shoulders now, when we have a plethoric Treasury and billions upon billions of property untaxed and paying as yet nothing whatever into the national coffers.

Why, sir, the funds which we have in our Treasury, as we all know, are levied upon personal habits which it would be better to dispense with, upon commodities which it would be better for the country were they entirely destroyed save for a few legitimate purposes, and upon the luxuries of life as they are introduced from foreign lands. Substantially two-thirds of the income of this Government is levied upon our customs; and that tariff makes its collections almost universally, as every Senator knows and as the whole country knows, upon articles not necessaries of life, so that that taxation comes out of wealth and is but a redistribution to the masses at large of money which it would be better had it never accumulated in the form of the large possessions and the large fortunes of our wealthier people.

It is thus, Mr. President, an absolute blessing to take the money which we have obtained by the customs service of the country and distribute it among the people at large, and the same observation might be made with reference to the income from the internal-revenue system.

Allusion has been made to the alleged fact that the increases of pension, of which there have been some instances in the present Congress, add to the fees of the claim agent; but that is not the case. The arrears-of-pension bill adds very slightly to the fees of the agents. It was not designed to do so at all, because the arrears are never paid save where there has been already a favorable adjudication and the fees of the agent are payable for that adjudication whether there are any arrears paid when the case is established or not, and most of those arrears were paid by a direct order from the Government itself without the interposition of any fee whatever to any agent at all. So the point made by the Senator that that legislation or any legislation increasing existing pensions is in the interest of claim agents is entirely aside of the mark.

Now, Mr. President, a word as to the origin of this particular bill further than the precedents to which I have alluded. I hold in my hand the printed minutes of a hearing before the Committee on Pensions accorded to George S. Merrill, Louis Wagner, James Tanner, John C. Linehan, and John S. Kountz, who were the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic charged with the recommendation of what the Grand Army deems to be necessary pension legislation, and among the various items of legislation which they indorse and recommend is precisely that which is contained in this bill. It is a bill indorsed, so far as I know, universally by the soldier element of the country, and not by them only, but by the great mass of our liberal-minded citizens who have given attention to the wants and necessities of the soldiery throughout the land. I wish to read a remark made by General Merrill before the committee:

Of the nearly three hundred thousand cases pending in the Pension Office the great bulk are delayed because of the lack of evidence, and the evidence can not be produced because the witnesses are dead. They can not produce them. And unless some general provision of this kind is passed giving these men pensions that are to-day disabled, it is impossible for them to get pensions, and they must go to the almshouses. It is a public scandal for that to occur. Just in that line we said to your committee, two years ago, that we were opposed to the eight-dollars-a-month pension bill.

He is alluding now to the service-pension bill which so many favor, applicable to the soldiers of the late war.

We have been endeavoring to sustain that position—

That is, of opposition to that bill—

We have been endeavoring to sustain that position, but to-day the eight-dollars-a-month bill is becoming a more formidable question than ever before. Perhaps we see it more closely, for we have been making the fight against it in the Grand Army. I see by a telegraphic dispatch to-day from New York that the assembly of that State has passed a resolution in favor of a universal pension bill. Now, you may pass such a bill, but it does not remedy any of the other defects or deficiencies of the pension legislation. Indeed, it gives a well man a pension to the actual disadvantage of the disabled soldier, and the well man ought to stand back and let the cripples get a pension first. This idea is gathering force, because Congress in the last two years has not succeeded in passing bills which have passed the Senate or the House. Between the House and Senate this legislation has failed, and it is this failure that is giving the impetus to the eight-dollar-a-month bill to-day. I know that the pension committee of the Grand Army can not stand up much longer in the Grand Army of the Republic and contest the passage of the eight-dollar-a-month bill unless something is done speedily.

And their recommendation is that this bill be enacted into law which will simply provide for all those who are disabled to earn their living and must be assisted from some source. Now, this particular bill is a bill which I had myself the honor to originate and to write, without suggestion from any mortal being, and introduce into the Senate of the Forty-eighth Congress, first session; and it is Senate bill No. 1342 of that session. That bill went to the committee. Presently a bill came from the House, and was referred to the Senate Committee on Pensions, was taken charge of by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and in committee the provisions of this bill were incorporated. It was reported to the Senate and moved as an amendment to the Mexican pension bill of the House. So, then, I am able to state that this measure originates, not in the brain of any claim agent whatever; it originates with the soldiers of the country and in the necessities of the case. It is the natural outgrowth of the sentiment of public justice which the whole nation, I believe, will be glad to recognize in the enactment of this bill into law.

I give way now to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that is done I desire to offer an amendment to the bill before the Senate, and I ask that it be read at the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section:

SEC. —. Any pension that is payable under this act, and is not provided for under an existing law, shall be payable only out of the money derived, or that shall hereafter be derived, under the internal-revenue laws of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress by the 10th of December, 1886, what rate per cent. of taxation upon the capital stock of corporations will be sufficient to pay the expense incurred and to be incurred under this act, not to include in such estimate any corporation whose capital stock is less than $50,000, nor any corporation created to promote religion, good morals, charity, education, or health.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before submitting the question to the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money in the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 8188) to admit free of duty a certain lecturn for the use of the Saint Luke's Episcopal church in the parish of Kalamazoo, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

A bill (H. R. 3173) for the relief of Samuel H. Fleming; and

A bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not press his motion now.

Mr. CAMERON. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. FAIR (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Nevada], who is not in his seat.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Berry,	Dolph,	Harrison,	Pugh,
Brown,	Eustis,	Hawley,	Ransom,
Call,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Vest,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 14, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NON-PAYING CUSTOM-HOUSES, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, with accompanying papers, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information in regard to custom-houses or ports of entry at which the expense to the Government exceeds the revenue collected; and submitting draught of a bill to fix salaries of collectors and officers of customs and to consolidate customs districts; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, asking authority to apply a certain unexpended balance of appropriation "for fuel, &c.," to supply deficiency in appropriations "for contingent expenses, Treasury Department, gas, &c.," for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SORGHUM AND BEET SUGAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting certain papers in response to a resolution of the House calling for information concerning the process and methods of making sorghum and beet sugar; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, laid before the House a bill of the Senate of the following title; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed, namely:

A bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GROSVENOR, indefinitely, on account of ill health and pressing business.

To Mr. HILL, until Wednesday next.

ST. LUKE'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, KALAMAZOO.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8188) to admit free of duty a certain lecturn for the use of the St. Luke's Episcopal church, in the parish of Kalamazoo, Mich., and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit free of duty, at the custom-house in Boston, Mass., a cross lecturn, for the use of the St. Luke's Episcopal church, of the parish of Kalamazoo, Mich., imported by Rev. R. E. Jones, the rector of said church, and consigned to ——.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out the word "cross," in the fifth line, and insert "brass;" and fill the blank in the eighth line by inserting "Messrs. Jones, McDuffie, and Stratton."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL H. FLEMMING.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3173) for the relief of Samuel H. Flemming and put the same upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officer of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Samuel H. Flemming, of North Carolina, the sum of $206.66, for carrying the United States mails in North Carolina in 1870.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for a moment to enable me to ask consent to pass this bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I will withdraw the call.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1387) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans., and put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the additional sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the completion of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices, at the city of Wichita, State of Kansas, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the requirements of an act for that purpose approved March 3, 1885. The limit of cost prescribed in said act is hereby extended as aforesaid, and no plan shall be approved which will involve an expenditure for site and building complete, including approaches, greater than the limit herein fixed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money under the sale made under an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederate Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes:" Provided, That the interest shall be paid at the rate now provided by said act: And provided further, That such extension shall be for five years only from the time said payments have or shall become due.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask consent, Mr. Speaker, to submit an amendment, which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, extending the time also to the Omaha reservation.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the provisions of this act shall be, and are hereby, extended to the purchasers of lands in the Omaha Indian reservation in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. MORRISON. I shall object to the amendment.

Mr. DORSEY. Then I withdraw it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRAFTON MONROE.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar, and have considered at this time, the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department be, and he is hereby, directed, in adjusting the accounts of Grafton Monroe, late postmaster at Annapolis, Md., to credit him, the said Grafton Monroe, in his accounts as such postmaster, with $4,315.13, the same being for postage-stamps and money-order funds burglariously stolen from the post-office at Annapolis, Md., on the morning of February 4, 1884, said credit being recommended by the then Postmaster-General after a full investigation of all the circumstances attending said burglary.

SEC. 2. That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department be, and he is hereby, directed, in adjusting the accounts of Grafton Monroe, late postmaster at Annapolis, Md., to credit him, the said Grafton Monroe, in his accounts as such postmaster, with $2,430, the same being for postal funds burglariously stolen from the post-office at Annapolis, Md., on the morning of February 4, 1884: Provided, That it shall be proven to the satisfaction of said Auditor that said postal funds were lost as aforesaid without fault or negligence upon the part of said postmaster.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the read time, and passed.

Mr. COMPTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2156, and that the same be now considered.

Mr. MORRISON. I object, and demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair will proceed to call the committees for reports of a private nature.

The original bill (H. R. 3240) was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, would a motion that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar take precedence of the motion just made?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. But the result is just the same. If the House refuses to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, under the rule the public business will proceed as on other days.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state that my purpose in making this motion is to call up the bill which was under consideration when the House adjourned yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, this being Friday, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 91, noes 31.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HATCH in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

FRANCIS W. HALDEMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was under consideration last Friday when the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar rose.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of Francis W. Haldeman.

Mr. SPRINGER. As this bill was under consideration when the Committee of the Whole rose last Friday, and as there were not many members present at that time, I ask that the bill be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. With the amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the bill will be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Francis W. Haldeman, of Avoca, State of Iowa, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, as compensation for services performed and money expended for the benefit of the United States during the late civil war.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "and fifty," in line 6, so as to make the bill read, "the sum of $200," &c.

Mr. SPRINGER. Was that amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. Upon examination of the record the Chair learns that the amendment was agreed to. The pending question is on the motion that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill and the three bills immediately following it on the Calendar relating to private land claims be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

ERNEST H. WARDWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Ernest H. Wardwell, of Garrett County, Maryland, late a captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army from the 11th day of March to the 18th day of May, 1865; and also the three months' additional pay proper as first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Second Regiment North Carolina Union Volunteers (white), the same as allowed to all volunteer officers under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1865.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The report (by Mr. LYMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell, report as follows:

That this claim was presented to the Forty-eighth Congress, and a favorable report thereon was made by Mr. Lyman (Massachusetts), March 18, 1884, and this bill passed the House February 6, 1885. It was reported favorably by Mr. HAMPTON (South Carolina), without amendment, from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Inasmuch as the examination by your committee has led them to the same favorable conclusion as that reached by the Committee on Military Affairs in both Houses, and by this House in the Forty-eighth Congress, this committee now adopt the report approved in the last Congress and recommend that the bill (H. R. 1062) do pass.

The report incorporated in this is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 3236, beg leave to submit the following report:

"Ernest H. Wardell, in May, 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, and served for more than three months without pay. On September 7 of the same year he enlisted as a private in the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers. November 8, 1862, he was commissioned second lieutenant, Second Louisiana (Union) Volunteers. April 4, 1863, he resigned on account of sickness. February 5, 1864, he was commissioned first lieutenant and quartermaster Second North Carolina (Union) Volunteers. February 23, 1865, he was mustered out to accept a commission which had been promised him as captain and assistant quartermaster, in which grade he was confirmed by the Senate March 11, 1865. His commission, dated April 15, 1865, was forwarded to him May 11, and was accepted May 18. He was honorably mustered out of service July 28, 1865.

"From this record it appears that Captain Wardwell had an honorable though not continuous service of over three years.

"He claims that he should receive pay from March 11, 1865, to May 18, 1865, and also three months' extra pay under the act of March 3, 1865.

"There was a certain delay between March 11, 1865, when Captain Wardwell was confirmed by the Senate, and May 11, when his commission was sent to him. For this period of delay he thinks he ought to receive the pay of his rank, because he resigned his lieutenantcy to accept the commission of captain which had been promised him, and was present and ready to receive his commission at the date of his confirmation. It appears, however, that in addition to the time usually required for the making out and signature of the commission, there was a further delay caused by the assassination of President Lincoln, April 14. By law and regulations an officer does not begin to draw pay until he has received and accepted his commission and has taken the oath. Unfortunate circumstances caused a delay of some weeks to Captain Wardwell in the receipt of his commission, and it seems not unreasonable to allow him pay during this period of waiting, because he resigned his lieutenantcy on the positive information that he had been appointed a captain, and he was present and was ready to assume his new duties.

"The act of March 3, 1865, grants three months' extra pay to officers then in commission, and who should continue in service to the close of the war. Captain Wardwell was mustered out February 23, 1865, and was not confirmed by the Senate as captain till March 11, and only accepted his commission on the 18th of May, so that he was not in service on the 3d of March, 1865, and could not legally draw the three months' extra pay.

"But as Captain Wardwell, after being in the Army nearly three years, resigned for the sole purpose of receiving his new commission, and was present and ready to be mustered in under it, he may not improperly be considered as constructively in the service on the 3d of March, 1865, and therefore entitled to three months' extra pay.

"The committee, therefore, report that the bill should pass."

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] who reported this bill is not present; but the report seems to indicate that the bill should pass. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILSON B. GEORGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3373) to correct the military record of Wilson B. George.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Wilson B. George, late a private soldier in Company L, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, be, and he hereby is, relieved from the charges on which he was dishonorably discharged on the 5th day of December, 1864, and that he be taken and considered as an honorably discharged soldier: Provided, however, That this act shall not be taken or construed as entitling said Wilson B. George to any further pay or allowances as a soldier: And provided further, That said dishonorable discharge shall not in any manner affect any claim for pension said Wilson B. George may have against the Government of the United States, but said claim for pension shall be considered and determined the same as though said George had never been dishonorably discharged.

Mr. FINDLAY. The report in this case is adverse.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. FINDLAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill to correct the military record of Wilson B. George, late a private soldier in Company L, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

The military record of this soldier, as shown by a letter from the Adjutant-General of the Army, herewith appended and made a part of this report, discloses the fact that private George, for conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline and offering violence to his superior officer, was found guilty and ordered to be shot, a sentence which was mitigated to imprisonment at hard labor during the unexpired term of his enlistment, to be followed by a dishonorable discharge, with loss of all pay and allowances due and to become due.

Whatever may be the ulterior object of the bill, the committee are of the opinion that the correction of a military record, in itself a grave exercise of power, and to be used sparingly and only on considerations of the very highest moment, find nothing in the facts of this case to justify it, and they recommend therefore that the bill do lie upon the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 22, 1885.

SIR: In reply to your request of the 25th ultimo, for the military record of Wilson B. George, as of Company L, Fourth Iowa Cavalry, I have the honor to inform you that the official records show that private George was enrolled November 17, 1861, at Mount Pleasant, and mustered into service November 25, 1861, to serve three years; was tried by a general court-martial December 9, 1863, for conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline, and offering violence to his superior officer, found guilty of both charges and sentenced to be shot to death. The sentence was mitigated to confinement at hard labor during the unexpired term of his enlistment, and then to be dishonorably discharged the service with loss of all pay and allowances due or to become due.

In accordance with this sentence he was dishonorably discharged, to date December 6, 1864.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

Hon. JOSEPH LYMAN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. GEDDES. I have been requested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] to ask that this bill be passed for to-day informally. He is necessarily absent, and desires to be heard in advocacy of the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally. Is there objection?

Mr. FINDLAY and Mr. REAGAN objected.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FINDLAY that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie on the table, the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM K. HAMMOND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1740) for the relief of William K. Hammond.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That William K. Hammond be recognized as a recruiting officer for the Second North Carolina Regiment, and receive the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry for the period from December 22, 1863, to August 12, 1864; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment to the said William K. Hammond, his heirs or assigns, for his services as recruiting officer for the said regiment during the said period, be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money remaining in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "December 22, 1863," and insert "March 12, 1864."

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, and Mr. EDEN called for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. REID, of North Carolina), was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1740) for the relief of William K. Hammond, submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to give Lieut. William K. Hammond, of the Second North Carolina Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of infantry from December 22, 1863, to August 12, 1864.

Your committee find that William K. Hammond was recognized as a member of the Second North Carolina Volunteers as early as December 17, 1863, and that March 12, 1864, he was appointed a second lieutenant in the Second North Carolina Volunteers, subject to approval of Major-General Butler.

That from the said 12th of March, 1864, to the 12th day of August, 1864, said Hammond performed the duties of a lieutenant in the said Second North Carolina Volunteers.

August 12, 1864, said Hammond was duly appointed and duly mustered into the service as a second lieutenant in the above-named regiment, and that his said services were valuable and often of the most difficult and dangerous character.

Your committee does not find that said Hammond was acting as lieutenant prior to March 12, 1864, by competent authority, or that he was entitled to any higher grade than that of second lieutenant.

Your committee therefore recommend that said bill be amended by striking out the words "December 22, 1863," in lines 6 and 7, and inserting in place thereof the words "March 12, 1864;" and that said bill, when so amended, do pass.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I move the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims, and ask that the bill with that amendment be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. EDEN. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. It shortens by a few months the time for which pay and allowances are to be granted.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I now move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS SAMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4139) for the relief of Thomas Sampson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, it was enacted that the Secretary of the Treasury prepare medals of honor, to be distinguished as life-saving medals, to be bestowed upon any persons who should thereafter imperil their own lives to save the lives of others from the sea; and

Whereas Thomas Sampson had theretofore, at various times, greatly distinguished himself in rescuing human beings from death in the manner prescribed by said act: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to cause to be prepared a medal of honor, with suitable devices, to be bestowed upon Thomas Sampson, of the city of New York, according to the provisions contained in section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of life-saving stations and houses of refuge upon the the sea and lake coasts of the United States, and to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service."

SEC. 2. That the said Thomas Sampson be, and he hereby is, entitled to receive all the benefits of said section in said act contained, just as though he had rendered the services subsequent to the approval of said act.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. JAMES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. IRION) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4139) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to bestow upon Thomas Sampson, of New York city, a life-saving medal of honor, beg leave to report as follows:

A similar bill was before the Forty-seventh Congress, was considered by the Committee on Commerce, and a favorable report was submitted by Mr. Page, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

The committee consider the case a meritorious one and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House report No. 355, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3025) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to bestow upon Thomas Sampson, of New York city, a life-saving medal of honor, beg leave to report as follows:

Under the act of June 20, 1874, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to have prepared medals of honor "which shall be bestowed upon any person who shall hereafter endanger their own lives in saving or endeavoring to save lives from perils of the sea."

It appears that prior to the passage of this act Sampson had rescued a number of persons from drowning; had received medals for his gallantry from the mayor, Humane Society, and Board of Underwriters of New York city, and other organizations, and is highly indorsed by leading citizens in connection with these services, as well as others of a different character rendered by him to the Government.

The fact that the rescues were made prior to the enactment of the above provision of law deprives Sampson of its benefits.

The committee consider the case a meritorious one and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. T. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of John P. T. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant to John P. T. Davis, late second lieutenant of Company H, Fifty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the military service as of the date of November 6, 1862.

The report (by Mr GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 449) for the relief of John P. Y. Davis, respectfully report as follows:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 16, first session Forty-eighth Congress, which report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

[House Report No. 1494, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5417) for the relief of John P. Y. Davis, reports as follows:

That the bill under consideration directs the Secretary of War to grant to John P. Y. Davis, late second lieutenant, Company H, Fifty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the military service as of the date of November 6, 1862.

The facts gathered from papers accompanying the bill show that John P. Y. Davis was mustered in as second lieutenant with Company H, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteers, February 1, 1862, to serve three years. He was tried by general court-martial convened at Fort Pillow, Tennessee, pursuant to General Orders No. 2, of date October 29, 1862, from headquarters district of Columbus; charge, absent without leave; found guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed from the service, to date from November 6, 1862. The disability to re-enter the service resulting therefrom was removed by letter from the Adjutant-General United States Army to the governor of Indiana, dated January 15, 1866.

It appears from the proof submitted that on or about the 19th day of September, 1862, the said Lieutenant Davis was prostrated by a severe attack of fever, and became very feeble in body and mind in consequence of said sickness, and while in this weak and debilitated state of mind and body that Major Strickland, then in command of the regiment, persuaded and induced the said Lieutenant Davis that he had better visit his home to regain his health; that he, the said Major Strickland, would see that it was all right, &c.; that under these inducements the said Lieutenant Davis left his post and went North and returned voluntarily to his command as soon as his health was restored, in about three weeks afterward. Shortly after his return to his regiment he was summoned before a military court-martial, and on a charge of absence without leave was tried and dismissed the service. This was the whole offense for which this soldier was tried.

Your committee are of opinion that the relief should be granted, and report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

Your committee therefore adopt said House report as the report of this committee, and report the accompanying bill (H. R. 449) for his relief with recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SIDNEY R. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1511) for the relief of Sidney R. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Sidney R. Smith, late a sergeant in the Thirty-third Regiment of New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 10th day of March, 1864, the date at which he was assigned to duty under his commission as such, to the date of his actual discharge from service, deducting therefrom the pay received by him as sergeant during said period.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record of the said Sidney R. Smith and to muster him as a second lieutenant of infantry, to date March 10, 1864, the date at which he entered upon duty under the commission issued to him by the governor of the State of New Jersey as of that rank.

Mr. KLEINER. Unless objection is made, or some one calls for the reading of the report, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COWLES. Let the report of the committee be read.

The report (by Mr. KLEINER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1511) for the relief of Sidney R. Smith, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

Sidney R. Smith enlisted in the military service of the Government in the Thirty-third Regiment New Jersey Volunteers on the 31st day of July, 1863, for three years or during the war.

On the 29th of December, 1863, he was by the governor of New Jersey commissioned as a second lieutenant in said regiment. He received said commission on the 10th of March, 1864, and was immediately ordered by the commanding officer of the regiment to equip himself, which he did promptly, and he was thereupon assigned to duty with Company G of said regiment, there being a vacancy of both first and second lieutenant in the company at the time; that from the time he was assigned to duty as aforesaid until his separation from his command said command was continuously in active service attending the advance of the Army in Northern Georgia, and no opportunity occurred for his muster into service; that he continued on duty with the company until the 8th of May, 1864, when, in an engagement known as Rocky Faced Ridge, Georgia, the commanding officer of the company, Captain Battell, was killed, when Lieutenat Smith assumed command until he was himself severely wounded, losing his left forearm, when he was ordered back to officers' hospital at Nashville, Tenn., where he remained under treatment until he received leave of absence for twenty days.

After he returned home gangrene set in in his wound, and he was unable to return to hospital until September, 1864, his condition in the mean time being regularly reported by the attending surgeon to the surgeon in charge of hospital at Nashville.

When he returned he remained in hospital until 19th of November, 1864, when he reported to the commanding officer at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The regiment then being with General Sherman on his march to the sea, and the line of communication having been severed, it was impossible for him to rejoin his command, and he was assigned to duty with the Twentieth Army Corps detachment, where he was engaged equipping for service convalescent soldiers. When General Hood advanced upon Nashville, Lieutenant Smith, with the command under his charge, was engaged in the battle of Dalton, Ga.; was subsequently ordered back to Nashville, and actively participated in the several engagements which followed.

After the battle mentioned, his wound broke out afresh, and it never having entirely healed, he was again sent to the officers' hospital at Nashville, where he remained until January 9, 1865, when he was discharged therefrom, and on same date received orders to report to his command at Savannah, Ga.

That upon his arrival at Hilton Head, S. C., February 8, 1865, he found that his command had started northward. He was then ordered to report for duty to the commanding officer at Blair's Landing, S. C., by whom he was ordered to duty as commanding officer of detachment Second Division Twentieth Army Corps. The last of March he was relieved from duty at that point and ordered to report to his command, which he did, taking with him about two hundred men belonging to his regiment.

After rejoining his command, April 5, 1865, he was regularly mustered into service as of the rank to which he had been commissioned as stated, and shortly thereafter he resigned on account of his disabled condition.

In consequence of his assignment to duty as a commissioned officer he was compelled to and did employ a servant, and to pay his own expenses while in hospital.

That is not through any fault or negligence of Lieutenant Smith, but solely on account of wounds received while in the line and performance of duty, which compelled a separation from his command and prevented him from being mustered into service at the time he received his commission.

This claimant under the circumstances mentioned should be paid the compensation he would have been entitled to if he had been mustered into the service in pursuance of the commission received by him. It would be a great hardship and gross injustice to deny it to him.

A case similar to this was presented at one time to President Lincoln. He wrote to the War Department as follows:

"I remember nothing of this case. I desire that it shall be investigated and that Captain Bowry be paid for the services actually rendered, if any. The Government can not afford to accept services and refuse payment for them.

"A. LINCOLN."

The papers were returned to him with the statement that Captain Bowry had not been mustered into the service prior to February 6, 1862, the period for which pay was claimed being anterior thereto. Under date of August, 1862, President Lincoln replied to this "red-tape" suggestion as follows:

"I did not ask for information as to whether this man has been mustered into the service. Have we accepted his actual services? If we have, let him be paid for them, unless there is positive law against it."

"A. LINCOLN."

Congress has provided by a general law for the relief of officers who failed to be mustered into the service, but this case does not come within its provisions. It is, however, so manifestly just that your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. KLEINER. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL M. GAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the letters patent numbered 85299, dated December 29, 1868, which were granted by the Patent Office of the United States to Samuel M. Gaines, of Glasgow, Ky., for the period of seventeen years from the date of the original grant, "method of teaching the rudiments of chemistry," be, and are hereby, referred to the Commissioner of Patents, to hear and determine the facts as to whether they shall be continued in force for the period of seven years from the 29th day of December, 1885.

Mr. MARTIN. I move the amendment be agreed to, and the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope we shall have some explanation of this bill from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, there is much about this invention to claim the attention and to commend it to the favor of this House.

The invention is one of those works of inventive genius which always excite feelings of pleasant surprise; it is one of the fruits of that high and daring order of mind which is always seeking to pluck from the realm of the unknowable something deemed unattainable. Upon examination of it we find that the inventor has sought to represent fifteen out of the sixty-four or sixty-five different kinds of elements or simple bodies which have been thus far revealed by means of analysis. These selected elements are those concerned or employed in the formation of by far the greater portion of the familiar objects about us, whether they be mineral, vegetable, or animal; and these elements are represented by cubes of different sizes and different colors. By such means the relative weight of the atoms, the structure of the molecules, and other features necessary to a thorough comprehension of the subject are made visible to the naked eye. When we remember that atoms and molecules, of which bodies are made up, are so small as to be beyond the unaided power of the human eye, and that such elements as hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen are invisible in any quantity, great or small, we will readily perceive how remarkable was the inventive talent of him who believed them the subject of materialization.

The spiritualist believes that the souls of the departed may be recalled from the "vasty deep" of eternity and made to take a material, tangible form; and it may be that Mr. Gaines caught the idea from the dream of those enthusiasts. Certain it is that he has not alone materialized the gases, which we do not see, which we can not feel, and the very existence of which we know only by the absolute need we have for them. But he has done even more; he has shown the relative weight of the atoms; has shown the structure of the molecules, and has represented the leading characteristic of each by the color given to the cube representing it. Now, to illustrate what I have said, it is necessary to describe the invention known as "Gaines's chemical alphabet," and which is used in the inventor's new system of "object teaching." This "chemical alphabet" consists of cubes of wood of different sizes and of different colors, each representing an atom of one of the elements or simple bodies of nature.

As an atom of hydrogen is the lightest particle of matter known to science, the smallest cube of the number represents it. H, the symbol for hydrogen, is placed upon one side of the cube, while the figure 1, representing its atomic weight, is put on each of the other sides. The pale-blue color of this cube is intended to indicate that hydrogen burns with a pale-blue flame. Taking another cube, the symbol O, for oxygen, is put upon one side of it, and the figure 16, representing its atomic weight, is found upon the other faces of the cube. The Roman numeral II put upon the same face with the symbol indicates its quantivalence—one of the distinctive features of the system—and means that one atom of oxygen has the value of two atoms of hydrogen. The color of this cube is red, the most striking characteristic of oxygen, namely, its power to make things burn. We next take nitrogen, represented by the cube marked N, its symbol, and the color given it is sky-blue. because nitrogen constitutes about four-fifths of the bulk of our atmosphere, which when seen in mass has that color.

Let us next proceed to the use of the apparatus. The teacher having written upon the blackboard the symbol representing a molecule of water, namely H_2O, the class is called upon to state the weight of the three items. Add sixteen for the oxygen cube and two for the hydrogen cubes, and you have two-eighteenths, or one-ninth; showing that eight parts of it are oxygen and one part of hydrogen; eight parts of the great ocean is oxygen gas and one portion of it is hydrogen. This in brief is the invention, and its application in practice—a kindergarten system for teaching the elements of chemistry in so easy and simple a manner that even a child may comprehend—indeed, may see it; it is an object put before his eyes! [Applause.]

Having explained the nature of the invention in a very general manner, as well as its application in practice, I will ask the Clerk to read the report of the Committee on Patents (which I make a part of my remarks), for the purpose of showing the reasons which influenced the Committee on Patents to make a report favorable to the passage of the bill after amendment as therein proposed.

I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 821) for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines, have had the same under consideration, and now report the same to the House, with an amendment, and recommend its passage.

This bill provides for an extension of the letters patent which were granted to Samuel M. Gaines, numbered 85299, and dated December 29, 1868, for "method of teaching the rudiments of chemistry," for the period of seven years from the 29th day of December, 1885. The committee have determined to recommend the passage of this bill, because, in their judgment, it has merit; because the patentee has received no just remuneration for his invention; and, lastly, because further time and labor, with the expense incident thereto, will be required to make the said method of general utility to the public. Besides, it is not an article of manufacture to be put on the market, and upon which the user might be taxed in the form of royalty, but its object is to remedy and correct the system introduced by Berzelius, of illustrating chemical compositions and reactions to the eye by means of symbols and equations, which is too abstract for beginners, by means of a chemical alphabet, found by actual experiment to be far more efficient than any other method heretofore used for such purpose.

Amend House bill 821 by adding to said bill the following words at the end of line 13: "And the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to grant an extension of the patent herein described for the period herein named."

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Chairman, after hearing the interesting discussion of this question by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN], I will not go into the merits of the pending case. He has presented it so well I shall not pursue the scientific investigation further than he has done. But I do wish to state that I had the honor of introducing this bill for the relief of Samuel M. Gaines. He lives in my town of Bowling Green, in Kentucky, and I have known him for many years. He had charge of a female school there for a long time. He was a widower with two or three daughters, who were dependent upon him for support. He was unable to introduce his patent in the time limited by the law for that purpose on account of his poverty. The limitation having expired, he now asks the time be extended so he may derive some benefit from his invention, as well as the world at large.

It is regarded not only by the gentlemen on this committee who have investigated it but by others to be an invention of the highest character and the greatest value. Some of the testimonials in regard to it have already been read by my friend from Alabama. They all show this to be a grand invention.

I know there is in the minds of gentlemen some prejudice against the extension of patents, but, as was remarked by my distinguished friend, if there ever was a case where a patent should be extended it is the one now pending.

I wish also to bear witness to the fact that to my knowledge Professor Gaines is one of the most excellent gentlemen I ever knew in my life. He has given me the information that he has prepared a book adapted to his invention, which will be of great benefit to the world at large when published. No one will be deprived of any privilege or right now possessed by the extension of this patent. He simply asks that it may be extended, and that I hope will be done without opposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have usually opposed the extension of patents. I do not understand from the very able and learned argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN] why it was that this gentleman, the proposed beneficiary of this act, has not availed himself of the privileges and the benefits of his invention during the lifetime of the invention. It may be, of course, this subject is one of such great abstruseness that the ordinary mind failed to comprehend it during the lifetime of the patent, or preferred to grope in ignorance; or possibly an additional length of time should be allowed to the inventor in this case to enable the times, which he seems to be considerably ahead of, to catch up with him. [Laughter.] It must be apparent to all that he has gone ahead of the times. Previous scientists have heretofore devoted themselves to measuring the distances of the fixed stars, to inventing peculiar and delicate apparatus by which they could weigh the sun or the north star in the balance and compute the distances between the planets.

But this scientist has taken the opposite direction, and has gone down into the very depths of molecules and atoms to furnish the apparatus by which you can weigh infinitesimal particles of matter and photograph a molecule of water. [Laughter.]

This seems to be a most extraordinary invention; it is a process by which you may establish kindergartens through the medium of which the little children of the country can learn what constitutes a molecule by sight, and can see with photographic distinctness the colors of the particles of oxygen and hydrogen. [Laughter.] I confess it astounds me. If this gentleman has succeeded in accomplishing this wonderful and extraordinary result, which has conferred and is to confer so much benefit upon humanity and so little pecuniary result to the inventor, there is nothing to equal it except the profound mysteries of Providence, of which Job, in the throes of one of his tribulations, spoke when he said:

Which removeth the mountains, and they know not; which overturneth them in His anger;
Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble;
Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars;
Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea;
Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south;
Which doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana (from his seat). Give us the authority you are reading from. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. My distinguished friend from Indiana asks what authority I read from. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to feel compelled——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SCOTT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 6429 granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark.

Also, that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 1394 to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property.

The message further announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 13) for the relief of William J. Smith, late surveyor of customs for the port of Memphis, State of Tennessee;

A bill (S. 1057) granting the right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railroad Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (S. 1069) for the relief of George E. W. Sharetts;

A bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance; and

A bill (S. 1298) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to fit out an expedition to observe the total eclipse of the sun which occurs on the 29th of August, 1886.

SAMUEL M. GAINES.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted I had been asked for the authority from which I read. [Laughter.] I regret very much to feel compelled to acknowledge the ignorance of gentlemen of the authority from which I read, the great words of wisdom, for I had hoped it was so familiar in the American Congress that that would not be necessary; though I feared that there might be some members even of this Congress who would not have known that I was reading from the ninth chapter of the book of Job, verses 5 to 11. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Why don't you stick to your text?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Indiana——

Mr. HOLMAN. Be sure that you do not get the gentlemen from Indiana mixed. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. My friend here insists that I shall stick to my text. I am going to stick to it. It is my intention to stick to it, and I call upon the honorable chairman of the Committee of the Whole here for his information upon the subject whether by means of this mysterious invention we will be enabled to detect the subtile difference that exists between oleomargarine and butter. [Laughter.] If this invention will accomplish that marvelous result it ought to be extended indefinitely; and as we are conferring what we understand to be nothing in the way of pecuniary benefit upon the inventor, the extension should be accompanied, as a fit testimonial, by a photograph of the old flag and a big appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will my friend from Illinois be kind enough to read the rest of the document from which he quoted? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I would with pleasure for the benefit of my distinguished friend from Michigan, but I refer him to the book, which I will take pleasure in commending to him, as I am sure he is not familiar with it.

Mr. SWOPE. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will be kind enough to indicate by what color oxygen and hydrogen are represented?

Mr. SPRINGER. That will appear from the remarks of my distinguished friend from Alabama. It has all been photographed there, and will appear to-morrow morning in the RECORD.

Mr. KELLEY. If I understood the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] aright, he gave us a description of this invention from Job. Now science and invention have made such extreme progress since Job's day that I would rather have this bill referred to the Academy of Sciences and let them say whether this is an invention that ought to be patented by special act.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If Job discovered it you can not patent it now.

Mr. KELLEY. I felt that embarrassment, but I did not like to reflect on the right of Job to demand anything after the sufferings he had endured. [Laughter.] But I would really like to have the opinion of the Academy of Sciences, which we can get by the next private bill day, so as to know whether we are not being carried away by an invention having fallen into the hands of gentlemen who have not kept themselves up in the records of invention and scientific discovery. I therefore hope that when we come to consider this bill it will be referred to the committee on natural sciences. I suggest this, meaning no disrespect to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]——

A MEMBER. Or Job.

Mr. KELLEY. Or even to Job. But I would respect the opinions of the Academy of Sciences on modern inventions beyond those of the three gentlemen united.

Mr. WILSON. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to the fact that in the beginning of his explanation the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN] stated that this inventor had "plucked the unattainable from the realms of the unknowable;" and I ask the gentleman if under these circumstances he should not have his patent?

Mr. KELLEY. That is very well; but this is not the only man who has founded kindergartens that have taught children something.

Mr. MARTIN. I think we have had sport enough over this matter. I now propose to make a statement in addition to the explanation I gave at the outset, and which has excited the mirth of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON]. I will make this statement, that this is nothing more than a simple invention of blocks, colored, numbered, and lettered, by which the various substances, gases, &c., of which chemistry takes cognizance are represented and brought to the eye. It is so simple and plain that by taking these blocks in a moment or two the most intricate and delicate combinations of chemistry and everything relating to that science can be brought to the mind and made so plain and comprehensible that a little child can as easily understand it as a wise man. All the formulæ can be set up in these little blocks instead of being written down with letters.

I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that this matter has been brought to the attention of the Academy of Sciences, if by that he means the great scientific men of the world, whose opinions I hold in my hand. I have here a little pamphlet of certificates which have been given to the inventor showing the invention is one of great value and utility.

Mr. KELLEY. I will assure the gentleman from Alabama that in what I said I was not joking. We have an Academy of Sciences established under the auspices of Congress for the purpose of examining just such questions as this. Its head and center is here in Washington. When I hear things described as being among the unattainable and unknowable I feel at least that I would like that academy to have——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. A crack at them.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, as the gentleman says, to have a crack at them. Let us know whether we can penetrate the unknowable and possess ourselves of the unattainable.

Mr. MARTIN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I have exactly the same feeling on that subject as the gentleman has. But when I find the testimony of the first men who are at the head of their pursuit all testifying and cheerfully testifying as to the value, importance, and utility of this invention, I am content, and I am perfectly willing for my own part to vote to extend the patent for the brief term of seven years, to enable an old school teacher who has worked this thing out of his own brain to bring it to perfection, and, if he can, to make it compensate him somewhat for the time and labor he has bestowed upon it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It seems to me that the opinions of these gentlemen, "like the flowers that bloom in spring," do not apply to this case. This is a question as to whether you will broaden the scope of the patent system so as to include all improvements which hereafter may be made in methods of teaching. If it be proper to give a patent in this case or to extend this patent for this valuable method of teaching chemistry, then certainly it is by analogy as proper to patent and extend patents for any improvement in teaching any possible science, to patent any improvement that may be used in common schools, and the simple statement of that fact is, to my mind, the very best reason why this bill should not pass. I question whether the patent originally ought to have been given. You may patent machinery, but when you come to patenting improved methods of teaching it does seem to me that the limits are being stretched altogether too far.

Mr. WILSON. Are there not patents on educational apparatus and copyrights on books used in teaching?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If I had my way there would be no copyrights on books used in common schools.

But this is something which applies to colleges; it applies to modes of teaching, and my point is this: Say what you may as to the copyright system and as to patents upon apparatus also, where you apply the principle to a case of this sort, and then project it beyond this, as you will do presently, patenting every conceivable method devised for instruction, I for one shall oppose it.

The amendment reported by the committee, adding, in line 13, after the word "eighty-five," the words "and the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and empowered to grant an extension of the patent herein described for the period herein named," was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall this bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, is it in order now to move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. DUNN. Then I make the motion that this bill be reported to the House with the enacting clause stricken out. I desire to speak to that motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that the motion in Committee of the Whole to strike out the enacting clause is of the same character as the motion to lay on the table in the House, and is not debatable.

Mr. DUNN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that motion, and move to strike out the last word, because I wish to make a few remarks on this bill.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that all bills of this character are measures to maintain and perpetuate taxation of the most oppressive, burdensome, and extortionate character. It is that unseen and indirect method of taxation which robs the people without their knowledge. There is but one species of monopoly actually created by the laws of the United States, and that is created by the patent laws. Monopolies grow up under the operation of other laws, but the patent law is the only one that directly creates them. I had the honor to introduce into this House during the present session a bill to change the patent laws. That bill proposes to take away from the patentee and his assignees the exclusive right to manufacture, vend, and use the patented or discovered article, and provides that a just and liberal royalty, or upon the gross sales of the patented article, shall be secured and paid to the patentee or his assignee, and that all people who secure to him the payment of that royalty shall have the right to manufacture, sell, and use the patented article. That takes out of the patent law the element of monopoly.

It takes the whole country into partnership with the inventor, gives the people the benefit of it, and deprives the patent jobber, the patent broker, who now robs both the inventor and the public, of his occupation. That bill, if it should be reported favorably, would, I am satisfied, be passed by the House, and it would give the inventor himself better protection than he has to-day and more certain remuneration for his invention or discovery. The patent laws as now administered impose upon the people of the United States a larger aggregate measure of taxation than all other tax laws put together, State and national—I say it intrepidly, bold as it may appear. In their extortionate operations they reach every furrow, every workshop, every household, every individual in this broad land, and rob them ad libitum. The rate of taxation imposed by the patent laws goes by the hundred and thousand per cent. above the just and legitimate value of the article. What has the Goodyear Rubber Company robbed the people of this country of in excess of the just value of their goods? What has the Singer Sewing-Machine Company similarly robbed the people of this country of? What have the inventors and manufacturers of agricultural implements also robbed the people of this country of?

What have all these patented articles, numbered by the thousand and the hundred thousand, which can not be enumerated, robbed the country of? What has the Bell Telephone monopoly robbed the country of? Let me tell my friends that the Bell Telephone monopolists are to-day but upon the threshold of the vast field of plunder that lies before them. They have not yet fairly entered upon their work; they have not yet got their hands into the pockets of the people up to their wrists, and they will go in up to the shoulder before they stop. And it is so with all other owners of patents which are or may be organized into monopolies. These patent organizations have gone further to corrupt the judiciary of the country than any other one legalized interest. They constitute a system of monopoly which should be stamped out. I want to tell gentlemen here, and to repeat with emphasis the language of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] in this House a few days ago, that we have reached and far exceed the just limits of taxation. No wiser, no more timely, declaration than that has been made in this House.

When I speak of these taxes I mean not only those which are expressly and avowedly imposed as taxes per se, but I mean that vast field of resulting taxation which is concealed and unknown to the tax-payer, but which is made possible in a thousand forms, reaching like the tentacles of the devil-fish to every individual and every interest in this country, robbing them as mercilessly as that monster draws the life-blood of his victim.

The people complain. They are in arms. There is bloodshed. Congress and the country are inquiring the reason of the disquietude and distress. It is that taxation which is unseen and which has been legalized and made possible by legislation in this House in many different forms. Its most odious form is that of the patent laws. Our whole system of Government has been perverted, drawn away from the original basis on which the fathers placed it when they created it, and has been converted into a huge system of jobbery.

The taxing powers of the Government in dozens of different forms have been surrendered to associations of wealth, and by unseen and mysterious agencies the people are robbed of their earnings and the just fruits of their industry, and they know not why, where, nor how it is done. The direct taxes known and seen by the people, willingly and cheerfully paid, are the least of all these taxes. We have surrendered to associations of wealth the great, the primal powers which the Constitution attributes to Congress. The power to regulate commerce, attributed to Congress, imposed upon it, has been surrendered to associations of wealth known as railroad corporations. They have invested $9,000,000,000—no, I should rather say they had issued stock and bonds to the amount of $9,000,000,000—on which they tax the commerce and the traffic of the country for enough to pay interest and dividends on those $9,000,000,000 of stocks and bonds. Their actual invested capital is about three and one-half billions of dollars. They take the country's note for $3 to every $1 invested, and they collect interest upon the whole amount. Cheap as transportation in this country seems to be, if it were brought down to the basis of legitimate earnings on the money actually and honestly invested it would be, I doubt not, one-half what it is to-day, and yet pay a liberal remuneration on the capital invested.

The power to coin money and fix its value, to regulate the currency, has been surrendered to banking corporations. Instead of one United States bank we have to-day more than twenty-two hundred, exercising powers that belong to the Government and should not be intrusted to associations of wealth, and coupled with the powers surrendered to these associations is the power to contract and expand the currency at will. My friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] some days ago pointed to these methods of taxation and robbery. Let me tell him that he was firing over the head of the real enemy when he was firing at the national banks, amenable as they were to his able criticism.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. DUNN. It is the taxation that is extorted under the operation of this surrender of the powers of Government that is impoverishing the people and driving them to desperation. The indirect and unseen taxation was the enemy that lay in ambush nearer to him than that at which he was firing. He was sound and correct in what he said, but he did not say half enough.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, as it was impossible for me to say all, if I was sound and correct in what I did say, I am not obnoxious to criticism.

Mr. DUNN. It is almost impossible for any one to say all that ought to be said on this subject. The power of taxation, the power to lay and collect duties on imports for the purpose of paying the debts of the Government and providing for the common defense and welfare, has been farmed out, absolutely farmed out, to associations of wealth engaged in what is called the protected manufactures and industries of this country. For every single dollar that goes into the Treasury of the Government under that system of taxation $5 go into the coffers of private associations of wealth or individuals to increase their private profit and build up their private enterprises. When we look at all these vast surrenders of power, this absolute transformation of the Government from one which was intended to give its bests results to all its people to what it is to-day, it is enough to fix the brand of treason upon the men who did it.

Where is your free people's Republic of thirty years ago? What is it to-day but a huge system of jobbery, that is taxing and robbing the people to poverty, to ignorance, to violence, and to bloodshed? Unless these evils are corrected there will come a day when this young Samson of the people will rise in his might, and, bursting these bands asunder, inflict just and merited punishment upon those who have been guilty of the attempt to throttle and bind and destroy them.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In reply to the remark of the gentleman that I shot over the head of the real enemy when I shot at the national banks, I want to say that I think I shot at the head. In my judgment the national-bank monopoly is associated with all the other monopolies of this country, and stands at the head.

Mr. DUNN. I said not that the gentleman did not fire at a proper subject for his excellent artillery, but that he fired over the head of the more dangerous and unseen enemy—these invisible forms of taxation which lie concealed nearer to him.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If they were invisible I could not be expected to fire at them.

Mr. DUNN. I want to remind gentlemen again that these patent laws constitute a greater and worse burden than any of the others. I know nothing and care nothing about this particular case. I am opposed to the perpetuation of such monopolies and such taxing power in any form, and shall oppose it in every form in which it may make its appearance here. I oppose the extension of any and all patents.

Several MEMBERS. "Vote!"

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to reply to the gentleman's proposition to strike out that single word. [Cries of "Vote!"] I will make my reply as brief as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Only a pro forma amendment is pending, and general debate has not been closed.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood there was an amendment of the committee pending to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment of the committee pending, to which the gentleman from Arkansas submitted a pro forma amendment when he rose to address the committee; but it was not necessary, as general debate has not been closed.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I have the floor for an hour if I choose to occupy it.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, I ask before we approve this bill which is commended to us by such extraordinary assertions that we take the opinion of the official adviser of Congress in such matters—the National Academy of Science. I do it in all sincerity and in all respect to the gentlemen who press the bill.

I am not afraid, as is the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], of its ruining the country by the amount of money it will draw from the pockets of people who may want to use the patent, for, as I understand, the patent existed for seventeen years and nobody ever thought of buying one of the instruments, and therefore I can not believe that if we give it seven years additional life the demand for it will ruin the country.

I want to address the committee again to say that, while as at present advised I am against the extension of this patent, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has not spoken for me. I dissent from his premises in toto. I have read translations of much that both Most and Spies have published, but they have not convinced me that property is robbery and this country is going to the dogs because the Government imposes taxes and appoints assessors and collectors. I do not accept any of their infernal doctrines. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Good!

Mr. KELLEY. But I do believe that a great invention is property, which should be protected by a just government. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman will allow me. No one will doubt he is in favor of high taxes. He has left the country in no doubt about that. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. I am in favor of taxation to so develop States that there may be something to tax. [Applause on the Republican side.] I will discuss that proposition on the basis of Arkansas when we get up a bill reported by a committee of this House of which I am a member. I believe in developing the resources of a country, in giving the people of a country employment in other seasons than when agriculture requires either planting or reaping. [Applause.]

I believe, sir, that if the politicians of Arkansas would permit the development of the material resources of that State she would shine resplendent among the industrial nations of the world, and her people would abound in wealth. What other State has her material resources?

Mr. DUNN. What prevents it?

Mr. KELLEY. What prevents it! Why, the absurd economic theories, devotion to which led to the formation of your southern confederacy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is just it.

Mr. KELLEY. Popular belief that our workshops should be on the other side of the ocean instead of in the United States. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.] That is what is the matter with you.

What prevents you!

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. Why the principle of that provision of your confederate constitution.

Mr. DUNN. Have you not one law——

Mr. KELLEY. It is my turn now, and I do not yield.

Mr. DUNN. Have you not one law for Arkansas to-day and another for Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor, and does not yield.

Mr. KELLEY. No; I do not yield.

Mr. DUNN. I grant you have a law which robs Arkansas.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not yield; nor do I ask the gentleman to make my remarks.

What prevents them! Why, sir, it is that constitution which lives in their hearts and minds and controls them, which prohibits, so far as law and popular principle can do it, the development of the resources of great States. Sir, that constitution, against the establishment of which Abraham Lincoln and Edwin M. Stanton, the Army and the Navy of the United States, and the loyal people of the country were "arch-conspirators," prohibited the development of the resources of the States over which it was intended to prevail as fundamental law. In roundabout language it declared that the boundless and vastly diversified mineral resources and manufacturing power of the country should not be developed so long as the oppressed laborers of Europe could under the control of the concentrated capital of the world make wares and fabrics cheaper than they could be made in those undeveloped States where capital was needed. That is the whole story. It is devotion to this theory that keeps the South poor.

Where, for instance, outside of the State of Arkansas, on the American continent can you find beds of purest chalcedony from which an ingenious, cultivated, and industrious people would supply the world with precious works of art?

Mr. DUNN. You do not send 2 per cent. of all of your manufactures to the world.

Mr. KELLEY. I will not consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman shall continue to interrupt me.

Where are there beds of better ore for iron or for steel, whether Bessemer, open-hearth, or basic? Where are there more willing laborers than in the State of Arkansas and other undeveloped portions of the late confederated States; and, let me ask, where does illiteracy so prevail? Yes, the comparative poverty and ignorance of the entire South are legitimate results of that same system of infernal devotion to foreign commerce to the exclusion of the utilization of their own native material and the development of the faculties of their own people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Of what has the mowing-machine robbed the country? By what statute, State or national, was any citizen of Arkansas ever compelled to buy a mowing-machine? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

What Arkansas woman was ever arrested and lugged before the courts of law because she did not buy a sewing-machine? [Laughter.] Sir, the gentleman is not old enough, but if he were and would recall Arkansas as she was half a century ago, when bands of freebooters made her their refuge and there was not an industrial invention known within her borders, he would be ready to agree with gentlemen on this side of the House that if it had not been for patented invention Arkansas would still be a wilderness.

Mr. DUNN. And Pennsylvania protection has been raiding it ever since Murrell quit.

Mr. KELLEY. Pennsylvania has done her whole duty in the premises. She furnished the Army against that free-trade constitution as many able-bodied men in proportion to her population as any other State. [Applause on the Republican side.] Her people were all "arch-conspirators" against the perpetuity of the constitution of the Confederate States of America. [Renewed applause.]

I have probably gone far enough. If I went further I might touch upon the domain of the tariff [laughter], and I therefore yield to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the committee for consideration has not challenged the slightest attention from either of the honorable gentlemen who have just spoken. The discussion has taken a wide range. It was very far from my thought to take any part in this debate. I avail myself of the courtesy of my honored friend from Pennsylvania, Judge KELLEY, only to reply to the observations of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] with reference to the operation and influence of our system of patent laws; but I have been so happily anticipated by the father of the House, Judge KELLEY, in much that I would say, that I shall detain the committee but a very short time.

My friend from Arkansas has rightly said that in some cases inventions have been so utilized in this country as, in a measure, to exact unjust tribute from our people. That has been exceptional, however. The instances are few and far between. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that our fathers did no wiser thing for their posterity than when they provided in the Constitution for encouraging and cherishing the growth of literature and art among our people by securing to inventors and authors for a term of years the exclusive ownership of the product of their genius. The unequaled growth and development of the arts and the marvelous progress made in all the fields of literature are due, and almost wholly due, to the protection afforded to inventors and authors under our beneficent patent and copyright laws.

The genius of invention lies at the very foundation of our industrial growth. Everything about this Hall bears witness to the good that has been done by the inventive genius of the country. In some rare instances there may have been what seemed to be unjust exactions by those owning and controlling valuable inventions, and I agree with my friend that possibly, if such a thing was practicable, it would be well to do here as is done in Germany with reference to certain inventions.

Mr. DUNN. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Do you not believe that a liberal royalty would be better, and would more uniformly compensate the inventor himself, than the present system?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was just about to refer to that. Under the German system there are certain inventions upon which the government reserves the right to and does fix a royalty. It relates to that class of inventions which, on account of their utility, go into such general use that if retained in the hands of monopoly hardships might result by reason of the price being placed beyond the reach of many of the people. There is, however, this difficulty in the way of adopting such a system here: One invention is often so related to and blended with others, and necessarily so, that it is almost if not quite impossible to tell just what device or improvement would properly be covered by the royalty. I have given the subject much thought, and am inclined to the belief that, however desirable in result, the German system would, in practical operation in the United States, be impracticable if not impossible.

Now, I wish for a moment to call the attention of the committee to the suggestion of the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania. No man in this country is compelled to use an invention. He may let it severely alone if he prefers for any reason to do so. It does not devolve upon the farmer to use a horse-rake or a mowing-machine or a thresher. He may still rake his grain with a hand-rake, cut his grass with a scythe, his grain with a sickle, and thrash it with a flail or upon the tramping-floor. We may still go to church in a jolt-wagon instead of availing ourselves of the more modern phaeton or traveling carriage. We may still go for the doctor upon a horse or afoot instead of using the telegraph or the telephone or going upon the swift-moving train. We may still put wheat in one end of a sack and a stone in the other to balance it and swing the sack across the back of a mule and take it miles across the country to mill or market instead or availing ourselves of the modern instrumentalities, the product of inventive genius, which will enable us to do it cheaper and better at a tenth of the cost of time and labor. I say this only to illustrate that we may resolutely stick to the old ways if we will We are not compelled by law to have things either comfortable or convenient. But it is susceptible of easy demonstration that under the system which my friend seems to disparage it has been made easier and cheaper in all the affairs of life to have both the comforts and the conveniences which are in this day and generation almost indispensable to happiness.

The growth of industrial art, while rapid in one sense, is yet so gradual that we are apt to ignore the marvelous achievements in the matter of practical results attained. In a short time the broad fields of the South will be white with cotton. Why, Mr. Chairman, all the adult population of the United States would not be equal to harvesting the cotton picking the fibers from the seed, and preparing and putting the product into cloth by the old hand process and without the intervention of modern inventions.

Think of a nation of fifty-five millions of people being unequal to caring for and utilizing a single crop in one section of the country. This seems like an exaggerated statement, and yet it is susceptible of demonstration. And not only would the labor be enormous but the cost of the coarsest calico would be equal to the cost of a yard of silk to-day.

Why, sir, but for the inventive genius of this country our lines of settlements would not to-day have reached beyond the Alleghanies.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman allow me one remark?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNN. That is the stereotyped answer to every argument that is made against extortion, against the right to extort unreasonable charges. What the gentleman has been stating is not what I was arguing. I say that the patenting of these invented articles and these discoveries under the law which gives the inventor or his assigns the exclusive right to do what he pleases with them destroys all competition in manufacture, all competition in sale, all competition in any methods of use, and causes the thing to be sold at a price four or five times higher than it ought to be.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is what my friend said. I understood him perfectly. I do not think any one misunderstood him. I want to say to him the experience and history of the world is that without the full and adequate protection which our law affords to the inventive genius of the country there would be no development in the line of industry, no competition for which he sighs, since the very germ from which competition in the various arts must grow, would sicken and die the moment you take away the exclusive property right of the inventor in the thing which he invents. In the absence of law which secured to men the fruit and coinage of their hands and brain, science hid itself in the cloisters. It had nothing for and gave nothing to the people. What there was of learning, what there was of science and art was hid away in temples and cathedrals, and was retained without law by the few and scattered curses instead of blessings among men. It was not until encouragement was given to the inventive genius of the world that rapid progress became possible, and a superior and enlightened civilization was ushered in. The tax, if any, is in each case self-imposed, and for dimes exacted dollars are returned. I wish in this connection to call the attention of my honored friend to a fact not generally known, and which he therefore naturally overlooks. It is this: There is not 10 per cent. of the inventions of this country that pay back to the inventors, or to anybody except our whole people who use and enjoy them, 10 per cent. of the cost of their production.

Of the four hundred patents I signed each week not 10 per cent. ever paid the inventors a tenth of the cost of their production, and yet each and every one was a valuable step in the growth and development of the art to which it related. Alone it could not be made available to yield profit to the inventor. And so the world obtains all these improvements, these progressive steps in the growth of the art, without paying a penny. We pay full value possibly for those great improvements which work a revolution in the art or method, and even in these the advantage in the use of the improvement is in excess of the increased cost; else clearly they would not be purchased, for men do not buy or hire without a view to profit. The advantage is always weighed in the balance against the increased cost over the old method. Few have any just conception of the number of persons who have bestowed earnest effort in investigation, thought, and labor in the production of the finished machines by which such wonderful results are obtained. The sewing-machine of to-day is a remarkable instance. The first crude machine was invented more than two centuries ago in Paris, France. And, sir, the production of the finished machine of to-day with all the appliances, engaged the effort in thought and action of a greater number of men than Cæsar led in the conquest of Gaul.

The mowing-machine in crude form antedates the Christian era. It was used in Colchis. The reaper and mower seen to-day in the harvest fields of our country are the product of the efforts of a greater number of men than were required to build the lines of railway to the Pacific Ocean. Sir, the genius of artisans and mechanics throughout the world and especially in the United States is at work daily solving the great problem of lightening the burdens of the toiler by securing better and larger results with less use and wear of human energy and muscle. They are busy everywhere increasing and cheapening the comforts and conveniences of life, each having under our system for a term of years the exclusive ownership of the valuable thing he has contributed to the growth of art or literature.

The history of the world shows conclusively that men do not put forth an effort except in the hope and expectation of reaping a proper reward. No man or woman ever struggled to produce a sewing-machine merely to do his or her own sewing, nor would McCormack have labored, studied, and experimented a lifetime to produce a reaper merely to cut his own harvests, nor yet to give without just compensation the result of his efforts to the community at large. Our knowledge of men and the experience of mankind leaves no doubt of the correctness of this proposition.

Now, I desire to call the attention of my friend to another matter in reference to the inventive genius of the country. There is a widespread belief that when an instrument, device, or machine is produced which enables one man to do the work of five or six, wages are thereby necessarily and permanently reduced. The result is exactly the reverse. Instead of reducing wages they are in fact increased. Our industries are multiplied and labor redistributed and lightened. The inventive genius of our country redistributes labor, lightens the burdens of the laborer, increases the comforts of home, multiplies the means of enjoyment, and adds to the sum of human happiness. Why, sir, there are one hundred industries in the United States to-day employing thousands of men that did not exist five years ago, each one of those industries filling an important part in our vast economic system.

I had occasion while preparing the exhibit for the New Orleans Exposition to investigate in order to see how far the inventive genius of this country in producing labor-saving machines and machinery tended to reduce wages. I found the result was simply to redistribute the labor. In the shoe factories of New England, where one man by means of labor-saving machinery was enabled to do the work of twelve, the wages were advanced while the output was vastly increased. Our people do not go barefooted from spring to fall now; shoes are within the reach of all.

I desired to make this reply to my friend from Arkansas because I did not want the allegation to go out unquestioned that the patent laws of this country, which secure to every inventor the product of his genius, are working against the best interests of our people. That is not true. Mr. Chairman, there never was a time in the history of this Republic, there never was a time in the history of the world when a day's labor would purchase so much that is necessary and needful for the comfort and convenience of mankind. Never in the world! Talk about our struggling people. Why, sir, do you reflect that within a generation we have received into our midst nearly eight millions of people from Europe, that we have taken them into the ranks of labor, and into our social and political organism as well.

Those people have had to find in our mills, shops, factories, fields, and mines the opportunity to earn a livelihood. And to-day, I say to the gentleman, it is due to the inventive genius of this country, from which has sprung our multiplied industries, that we have been enabled to do this. Look at the results. Why, sir, the wage of one day's labor in Boston or New York will pay the freight on a year's supply shipped from the city of Chicago to New York or Boston. In other words, the price which an artisan or mechanic in Boston or New York gets for a day's labor will pay the cost of shipping his year's supply from the city of Chicago to Boston and New York, and that result is due and due alone to the inventive genius of this country, fostered, cherished, and protected by our system of patent laws.

My friend says that the patent laws impose an unperceived and unknown, though oppressive, tax upon us. What is there in this country that costs more than it did half a century ago? What comfort and convenience has not been enlarged, increased, and cheapened? What burden has not been lightened by the fruits of the genius of invention? Name one.

Mr. DUNN. That is not the question. The question is, What is there in this country that does not cost more to-day because of the excessive tax upon it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There is absolutely nothing that costs more. Every man is able to produce more now. There is not a man in America that can not produce 500 per cent. more in every direction than he could twenty-five or fifty years ago. The farmer can plant a far greater number of acres with less labor and less expense—can take care of more acres of land, take care of it better, and have his crops in better condition than he could in the older day. Nor is the labor of the husbandman now, as formerly, a constant wear and waste of muscle. He does have to pay more for each laborer, but the general cost of production is less.

Mr. DUNN. And he has less at the end of the year.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One moment. My friend can not hire a man now to go into the field to rake and bind behind the cradle, but the same man gets more wages for sitting up and driving the horses that haul the mowing machine, or the reaper, or cultivator. You can not get working men to toil as they once did. The day of drudgery has passed away. The brain has come to the relief of the hand, the mind to the relief of the muscle. Our miners will not dig as they used to. Why? Because modern inventions and appliances have enabled one man, without the effort which so rapidly wore out the workman, to do the work of ten, and the interest and the humanity of the employer compels him to adopt the labor-saving appliances. Coal is dug for less now than it was years ago. It is shipped for less; the cost of production generally is less, and hence the cost to the consumer is much less than formerly; and, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, nobody is obliged to use modern inventions.

There is nothing to hinder my friend from Arkansas in case he has the toothache from going to the old-fashioned dentist and being dragged around the floor two or three times before his tooth is extracted. [Laughter.] Or, if he prefers, he can adopt the modern method, and go to a dentist who is abreast with the age and have the tooth extracted almost without pain. If amputation of a leg is necessary, he has still the right to have his leg sawed off by the old method, instead of adopting the new, by which the operation is comparatively painless and perfectly safe. It is the inventive genius of the young Republic, encouraged by the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof, that has made us what we are, the first among the nations of the earth in industrial growth. It is interesting to compare the machines and implements of to-day with those of the olden time. Consider the art of war. Why, sir, if there had been mounted upon the walls of Troy our modern enginery of war "Argive Helen" could have summoned to her side her maids and unaided driven the Greeks from the plains before the city and have sunk the Grecian fleet, had she been opposed only by the implements of war the invading hosts are said to have used in that famous siege. [Applause.]

Sir, it will not do to protest against what the inventive genius of this country has done, or to denounce it as a source of unjust or needless extortion. It has cheapened everything. It has carried blessings to every household in our land, and has placed them within the reach of all.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has put the case well with reference to the protective system. I will not enter upon that line of discussion. I proposed only and very briefly to point out the result of our patent system in securing better methods and increased comforts at reduced cost.

Mr. Chairman, how is the inventive genius stirred into active effort? Why, sir, clearly by giving to that genius the enjoyment of the result of its effort. Why, sir, in every shop the man who was busy hammering into shape a horseshoe asked: "Is it not possible to make this horseshoe without wearing out the muscles of the men who stand at the forge?" And in answer the spirit of our law said: If you produce such a machine it shall be your exclusive property for a term of years in consideration of your labor in its production and the ultimate blessing to mankind. The result was that in time the genius of the workman solved the problem. A mechanic—a mechanic, not a millionaire, not an idler—constructed a machine which makes more horseshoes in a day, and makes them better, than fifty blacksmiths could. The blacksmith that used to make horseshoe-nails—the man in whose shops we as boys used to sit and at whom we used to look with admiration of the cunning of his hands, to whom we talked, while resting he leaned upon his anvil—that man asked himself daily if there was not some machine possible by which his labors could be lessened and he be made prosperous in the production of such a machine, and the result was that the struggling inventive genius finally gave to the world a machine which would do the work of a hundred blacksmiths in making horseshoe-nails, and would make them better and cheaper. And so it goes through the whole range and field of art. Thus the artisans and mechanics of our country in the development of their several arts—blessed themselves, and better still, they conferred a lasting blessing on their fellow men.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a single minute?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Always.

Mr. KELLEY. My friend's description of the manufacture of horseshoe nails, and other nails, recalls very vividly to my mind what I spent some days in studying in the neighborhood of Birmingham, England, in 1883. There I saw nails made by women and their daughters, in the nail-works of England, where our patent law does not operate. There you find the mother, assisted by her daughter, working fourteen hours a day and the two getting a shilling and a half, what with us would be 37½ cents.

Mr. MILLS. But one man here makes as much as five men over there.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the interruption. I wish to say one other thing. It seems as if Providence had guided and controlled the genius of invention so as to meet in proper order the growing wants of men, kindred inventions in the same art going forward hand in hand. This is happily illustrated by the fact that while Whitney down near the Gulf was giving the world the much needed cotton-gin, a colaborer across the ocean was finishing the spinning-jenny. And in another shop a busy workman was completing the loom. All working unknown to each other, to one great end—to comfortably and cheaply clothe our people. And though older in conception, yet later in maturing came the sewing-machine. So amid the cotton fields of America Whitney by his genius enabled the planter to prepare his cotton for the manufacturer. Hargraves, an English mechanic, had produced the spinning-jenny. And Cartwright had invented the loom, and in a short time, although all the fields throughout the South whitened with the cotton crop, inventive genius had prepared the way to take care of it so as to make our clothing cheaper and more abundant.

The same idea is grandly exemplified in the development of the art of printing? When the Dark Ages passed away and the Reformation was ushered in, it was necessary to facilitate the dissemination of great truths, to scatter them broadcast throughout the world. What followed? The invention of the art of printing; and on the heels of that there came in time the power-press; so that to-day the thoughts of worthy men, and I regret to say the unworthy, too, are carried on the wings of lightning and given to the press everywhere, so that the sententious suggestions of my honored friend from Arkansas will be read to-morrow in every hamlet throughout this country as well as, I am glad to say, that thoroughly efficacious antidote administered by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

I wish to say but one thing further, for I had no expectation of trespassing so long on the time and patience of the House. The spirit which actuates my friend from Arkansas is the same spirit which mobbed Jacquard in Lyons when he sought to bless his people by giving to them the Jacquard loom, through the aid of which a handful of men could do the work of a hundred. It is the same spirit which mobbed the inventor of the sewing-machine in Paris; the same spirit which in England mobbed that genius in mechanics Hargreaves because it was supposed his invention would take bread out of the mouths of the laborers who worked in the factory by his side. Yet I take it, the gentleman from Arkansas will, like those who in Lyons mobbed Jacquard and afterward contributed to build a monument to his genius, live to thank the inventors of this and other countries for what they have done to bless mankind.

If I should make any criticism upon the disposition of the people represented by my honored friend from Arkansas it would be that they have refused to keep pace with the growing spirit of the age. They have had to be dragged along slowly; but I trust they are coming surely. I am willing, sir, if it be not ill-advised, to suggest the comparison, to take any State of the Union where inventive genius has been encouraged, where the people have made haste to use turbine wheels and engines and sewing-machines and telegraphs and telephones—in other words, where they have been quick to avail themselves of the best method of achieving important results—I am willing to compare any such State or locality in point of intelligence, industry, the comfort of its people, and in point of true contentment and that happiness which springs from wise content, with any section of this country or any other where the spirit which actuates my honorable friend from Arkansas is in the ascendency. The results will speak for themselves, and are more potent than any language I can employ.

The inventive genius of this country hunts out every furrow and seeks to turn it broader and deeper. It seeks the woman who is using the needle and says to her, "Do not use your fingers; use machinery." In other words, it seeks to lessen the toil which makes man a burthen bearer, and seeks to enable him to do by his genius that which our fathers did with their muscle alone.

I desire to say that the intellectual coinage of my friend is as much his property as that which he creates with his hands, and may be of vastly more importance to mankind. There is not a wheel that turns in all this universe, not a trip-hammer that falls, not a spindle that whirls, that did not first turn and fall and whirl in the brain of the inventor. The machine is but the materialization of the inventor's conception. And the result of his intellectual effort is as much his property as if it was merely and wholly the work of his hands—work fashioned out of physical substances without the exercise of the genius of invention. If this truth be not recognized, then inventive genius will shut itself up, will cease to be active, for no man exerts himself except for the reward which is to follow. My friend, if he will investigate this subject carefully, will find that his criticisms upon that system under which our Government protects the inventors and authors of the country are unwarranted and unjust.

There are so many things coming into my mind as I stand here which illustrate so thoroughly the advantages we have obtained from fostering and cherishing the inventive genius of our people that if I should attempt to recite them I should detain the House much longer than I desire and much longer than members would be willing to listen. I will, however, cite one or two marked instances to which my honorable friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] called my attention yesterday. Bessemer steel is one, the value of this invention in saving to the country is not estimated by hundreds of millions only, but by thousands of millions of dollars. The other invention to which that same friend also called my attention is the machine for testing the strength of wood, iron, and steel, used in the construction of buildings, bridges, &c. Thousands of lives have been saved as the result of its adoption, and the saving in dollars to this people amounts to hundreds of millions. Mr. Chairman, the genius of invention is the inspiration of God; and it can not do otherwise than bless us when wisely directed. [Applause.]

I will not consume more time to-day, but I shall take occasion at an early period, if opportunity is offered, to furnish to the House and the country some statistics which will set forth somewhat in detail the marvelous growth of the industrial arts in this country; how greatly our industries have been multiplied; how opportunities for remunerative employment have been increased; to what vast extent the comforts and conveniences which adorn, beautify, and make healthful the homes of our land have multiplied and cheapened. I shall do this in connection with the proposition to give the honorable Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Montgomery, the force actually necessary to dispose of the vast business brought to his bureau. I feel well assured, Mr. Chairman, that upon careful study of this question gentlemen will reach the conclusion that in nothing did our fathers show greater wisdom than in providing for the encouragement of the coining and printing of noble and ennobling thoughts and the production of labor-saving machinery. I return to my honored friend from Pennsylvania such portion of the hour as remains. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. The general demand seems to be for a vote; and, unless somebody has some special benediction to pronounce, I will now ask for a vote.

Mr. DUNN. I have a "special benediction to pronounce" for the benefit of my friends on the other side.

Mr. KELLEY. Then I reserve the residue of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. DUNN. I am not at all surprised, Mr. Chairman, my criticism of the policies which have obtained during the past twenty-five years of bad legislation and administration should have roused to the very depths the friends, adherents, and advocates of high taxation and monopoly extortion. I anticipated that, and I am gratified at the result.

Let the galled jade wince, my withers are unwrung!

Now for reply to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr.

KELLEY]. Who doubts if the Government would longer exist without a method of taxes which enables Pennsylvania and other such States with like interest to develop by robbing the tax-paying people by means of an unseen, unknown, unpublished, and unconsented-to system of taxes. [Applause.]

That gentleman, as he always has done, claims to be the special champion of labor. I will ask the Clerk to read what is said by a master workman and laborer of Pennsylvania—what he says in behalf of Pennsylvania capital and monopoly, of associated wealth clothed with power to extort and rob under an unjust system of taxation.

Mr. KELLEY. Name the author.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Powderly. You will get his name when the article is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREE TRADE IN LABOR—THE KIND OF WORKERS PROTECTED INTERESTS EMPLOY IN PENNSYLVANIA.

SCRANTON, PA., June 24.

Ex-Mayor Powderly, of this city, general master-workman of the Knights of Labor, who has just returned from a trip to the Connellsville coke region, said Saturday that he never believed such degradation possible as he had witnessed among the Hungarians in that portion of Pennsylvania. The condition of the women who worked at and around the glowing furnaces, doing tasks that would try the stoutest men, he described as being most lamentable, and surpassing in grim realism anything he had ever heard or read on the subject. He says: "I have often heard of the employment of women at the coke-ovens, but never had an opportunity of seeing it before. At 6 o'clock in the morning I went to the coke-works, and there I saw that the stories I had heard about this matter were not exaggerated. At one of the ovens I saw a woman half naked drawing the hot coke from the chamber. She had no covering on her head and very little on her person. Her appearance was that of one whose spirit had been broken by hardship and hard work. Her attire consisted of a coarse chemise and a pair of cowhide boots. In a freight car close by stood another woman forking the coke as it came to the car. Forking is the term used to indicate the disposition of the coke when it is thrown into the car. The person who does the forking throws the coal to either end of the car as it is wheeled in. The woman stood in the doorway and was dressed in a rough, loose-fitting outer garment and an apron. Her person from the waist up was exposed. When she stooped over to handle the coke she caught her hair between her teeth in order to keep it out of her way. Her feet were encased in a pair of heavy shoes and her legs were exposed from the knees down. Her babe, which she brought to the works with her, lay in front of the car, with scarcely any covering except the shadow of a wheelbarrow, which was turned up in order to protect the child from the rays of the sun. Many more such scenes met my view, and some of them were even worse than this. The opposition to the Hungarians amounts to a hatred, which is liable at any time to burst forth into a blaze that may sweep them entirely out of the country."

Mr. DUNN. Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] hands me an extract from the New York Herald, which I also ask the Clerk to read. It gives a further account of the beauties, luxuries, and wealth and delight of that protected labor. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DUNN. I do not yield.

Mr. KELLEY. I thought the gentleman had taken his seat.

Mr. DUNN. No; I have a good deal more to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. I do not ask him to yield.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will have patience to hear what is coming.

The Clerk read as follows:

WORN OUT—AFTER YEARS OF STRUGGLING LITTLE EMILY HEARN FINDS LONG REST.

Yesterday the body of little Emily Hearn lay in a casket, and beside it stood those who had loved her, and their tears fell upon her shroud. She seemed to rest in sleep; it hardly seemed as though it was death. A smile softened the rigid lines of her mouth, while the lips and the cheeks were softly tinged with a pink that might have adorned a rose. The neighbors and the acquaintances who lived in the same building—No. 47½ Carmine street—reverently glanced at the dead girl's face and gave their whole heart's sympathy to the poor widow whose main support she had been.

Yes, she had toiled for the mother and the little brothers since the time she had first been able to earn a dollar, and only ceased to toil when exhausted nature revolted as she sat making gay millinery feathers at her bench in the factory. Of the young girl the kind-hearted neighbors talked freely. In the humble dwelling she was known as "Pretty Emily." Her features were regular, her hazel eyes large and flashing, and her black hair when shaken from the comb fell in great masses, so that she, to please the mother who adored her, would laughingly sit upon it, "just to show the folks how long it was."

MUCH LABOR AND SMALL EARNINGS.

She had one of those faces, those sweet, open faces, that men as they pass through the streets turn to look at. "And had she not those who would love her?" said the mother amid sobs. "Lord bless you, sir, my girl was a good girl, and she listened to no nonsense. It was from bed to the shop, from the shop to the work she brought home with her. She was one of the industrious kind." Of her virtues and industry the neighbors were never tired telling.

"And what did she earn working so hard?"

"Six dollars a week, please you, sir."

The little maid, for she was scarcely eighteen, was loyal by nature, true in heart and faithful to those few persons with whom she came in contact. For three years she had worked for her employers in the Grand street millinery goods factory, and she was fond of them and they of her. Only a week ago the two other girls who had been employed there left to go to another place where fur goods were made. It was the very height of the employers' busy season, yet they deserted him. Little Emily believed it a "shabby trick," and "she tried to do too much," so says the son of one of her employers.

DIED FROM OVERWORK.

"She left her table, where she had been making dark-blue pompons, and started for the stairs," said the same young man. "She went up as I came down. She was suddenly ill. Mother went up and saw her lying down. Mother said, 'She is overworked; let her sleep.' Later mother went up to see her, and she came down saying, 'I don't like Emily's looks; her cheeks are getting blue.' I was out. Mother went for a doctor and father tried to make Emily drink a little cognac, but she was insensible. The doctor came, but Emily was dead."

Deputy Coroner O'Meagher made a post-mortem examination of the body. He said: "She died of congestion of the brain. Her blood was watery from general debility, caused by overwork."

Indeed, into her work she had put her life; it was all she had to give.

They took her from the workshop to the place which had been her home and left her with her mother. And to-day, between the hours when the church bells will ring for morning and evening service, she will be borne away to Calvary Cemetery to be laid among those who have fallen asleep before her. At rest—poor little Emily Hearn, poor little factory girl.

Mr. DUNN. There is another from the great protected silk manufacturing industry, where they all should be happy and clothed in fine raiment.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SILK-WEAVERS' APPEAL.

The striking silk weavers, of West Hoboken and Union Hill, N. J., have issued a circular, setting forth that their wages have been steadily reduced during the past five years until now they are less than 50 per cent. of what they were. At the same time living expenses have increased by the advance of rents and cost of necessaries. They believe that overproduction can be checked by decreasing the hours of labor, and their productions will consequently command better prices. They state their position is that of white slaves; that the manufacturer pays them paltry wages, while he lives in princely style. Their demand is for bread, and they appeal to the people to aid them.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, that ought to be an answer to all that has been said by those who claim to be the special champions and protectors of labor. No such conditions as these have ever existed in Arkansas or the South. The day is coming, has come, when they will no longer be able to rob the wages of the laborer of half its value by doubling the cost of that which is necessary for him to live upon with an unseen and insidious tax and persuade the laborer that it is protection to him.

In the name of protection you have robbed labor of its wages; you have robbed the life of labor and of laborers and their families of its happiness and pleasure, and you send their children to premature graves with the prayers and the smiles of the pharisee upon your lips, while you send them to a pauper's grave prematurely prepared for them, and pocket the ill-gotten fruits of protection.

The gentleman says that but for the unwisdom and folly of Arkansas politicians Arkansas would be great to-day.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will not be interrupted. This is the best speech for protection ever made on this floor.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will yield for a question.

Mr. DUNN. No; I do not yield. I hope the gentlemen from Pennsylvania will be able to keep their seats while I occupy the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman did not keep his seat while the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the floor.

Mr. MILLIKEN. No; the gentleman from Arkansas did not appear to be very well anchored while the gentleman from Pennsylvania was speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas declines to be interrupted.

Mr. DUNN. I expected the galled jades to wince. I expected that. I am not surprised. It shows that my shots are well directed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that it was the folly of Arkansas politicians, which he uttered with a sneer, which prevented that State from blooming and developing as a garden. He is mistaken as to whom Arkansas is indebted for its present condition, which is not perhaps as deplorable as the gentleman might imagine. Still I confess that it has been grievously wronged and robbed.

If the account is carefully examined and the guilty parties detected requisition would be sent to Pennsylvania for the robbers. It is the Pennsylvania statesman who has robbed Arkansas and also other tax-paying communities of their just prosperity; and I am aware, and I grant him, that this policy of protection has allowed them to do it; that this Government in fact lays one hand upon the property of the agricultural communities, and with the other transfers it to the pockets of his constituents; and that is what a judge of the Supreme Court called "robbery."

But I am not here to make a tariff speech. The people are coming to understand all of that. What have I said that looks toward striking down the inventive genius or impoverishing it or discouraging it? I think that those who framed this Government intended that the laws should be so enacted and so administered that the greatest possible freedom and benefits and happiness should flow to all the people, not to favored associations of wealth alone. I know that it is the theory of old countries and of our own Federalist friends that the masses of the people could not be trusted to govern and to shape the future of this country; that they are not safe; that some favored class ought to have the control of the Government. This Government denies that to any class, and leaves the whole power in the hands of all the people for their benefit. Every living soul in this country it was intended should share equally the blessings and benefits of the Government. It was thought that the efforts of the wisest and best statesmanship would so direct affairs that each and all should be permitted to participate, and not the favored few.

But these powers have been surrendered to associations of wealth who are no better born than anybody else that I am aware of, and they are taxing the masses of the people of this country out of the just fruits of their earnings. This has created the results which we now seek to correct, but the people are more restless, more discontented, because your system of monopoly and protection deprives them not only of half of their wages, but of the just measure of employment that belongs to them. One of the great apostles of protection announced not long since that the time was coming when the statesmanship of this country would be called upon to determine how production could be limited instead of finding how markets can be extended. That long and oft promised home market that was to enrich everybody has not appeared, but the result has brought riots and bloodshed and butchery, short time, lock-outs, strikes, lower wages, and richer employers. We are all to live upon one another—the manufacturers to live upon all other producers and all other laborers, and everybody else to live upon him.

If I may be pardoned a homely and rather rough metaphor, to pursue that theory to its logical conclusion is about as unwise as to feed a dog upon his own tail and expect him to grow fat upon it—just about as wise as that.

There is but one policy, and that is to extend our markets to compete with all the manufactures of the whole world, and not only sell agricultural products abroad, but manufactures as well. We are exporting to-day, I believe, about 1 or 1½ per cent. of what we manufacture. Eighty per cent. of all that we do export is made up of agricultural products. And let me tell gentlemen that the time has come when the American laborer, by the influence of railroads, telegraphs, and improvements which have spread themselves over the whole earth, is brought face to face with that long-talked-of pauper labor of the whole world. India, through the Suez Canal, is reaching the markets of the world which formerly took your wheat from the Northwest. That India which exported 40,000 bushels of wheat a few years ago exported more than 40,000,000 bushels last year. They can produce it and lay it down in the markets of consumption cheaper than you can transport it to and across the sea in the near future if our present restrictive policy is adhered to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman tell us how it is that they are able to produce wheat so cheaply in India? Is it not by the cheap labor they have there, and does he want American labor to be reduced to that level?

Mr. DUNN. They are enabled to produce it so cheaply because of cheap labor, cheap living, and cheap taxation, but however it comes we must confront it and compete with it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What clothes do they wear?

Mr. DUNN. Their condition is bad, wretched, and miserable. Take care that you do not tax your own people into a worse condition. They may take the markets and employments away from our people if we continue to increase the cost of production.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We will protect them from that.

Mr. DUNN. Your protection has brought you riot and bloodshed and poverty, and the squalor which you have heard described in the extracts reads from the Clerk's desk to-day.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNN. I can not. I am not an advocate of unconditional free trade. That is not practicable now. But I want to get away from those outrageous war measures of taxation and protection which you adhere to.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman have the goodness to state what his position is?

Mr. DUNN. I do not yield further to the gentleman. I come back to the question under discussion. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], the late Commissioner of Patents, was roused to frenzy, and delivered to us here a most admirable commencement oration on the splendors that have resulted from the inventive genius of the world, and especially of this country, that was delightful, and shows his admirable ability for such an address as that. But I think that the office of statesmanship is to consider and ascertain correctly all the resources of the country of every character, for food, for commerce, for industries, for labor, and to so legislate that they shall be kept within reach of every living soul in this country at the lowest possible price and under the most favorable conditions possible.

I want to give to the people of this country the results of inventive genius. While I would give genius its reward in full measure for all its discoveries, and would protect the inventor in all of them, I want to give to mankind the fruits of his invention at the lowest possible rates. Instead of creating one gigantic monopoly, one great manufacturing establishment employing a limited number of hands and taking four or five or ten times the legitimate price that ought to be paid for the invented article, I would put all the laborers in the country at work upon it and would allow all the workshops in the land to be open and in competition with each other for the manufacture of the article; and instead of giving employment to a few hundreds I would give it to all in the country, and give that article to the consumer cheaper by tenfold than it is given to them by that policy which the gentleman advocates. That is what I favor.

I want to place all the necessaries of life within the reach of everybody. It is no answer for the gentleman to tell me if people do not want an article they need not take it. That is not the question. The point is, all the people ought to get everything they require at the lowest possible price. I do not favor a policy which makes all the necessaries of life dearer, which makes life harder, and the struggle for life more terrible than it already is. You have made it bad enough.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my profound acknowledgments to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] for having justified me in referring to Grand Master-Workman Powderly as my friend and as my earnest and intelligent colaborer in the cause of protection. It has never been my privilege to meet Mr. Powderly, but I have received through many sources his kind acknowledgment of my services in behalf of the laborers of the country when defending that provision of Republican policy and law to which intelligent laborers look for the maintenance of just compensation for faithful work. I desire also to thank the gentleman for having quoted Mr. Powderly's description of the laborers imported by contract into this country, as it justifies me in saying that against such importations I was among the earliest and have been among the steadiest and most vehement opponents.

Here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 19, 1884, which contains the discussion upon the labor bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] on behalf of the Committee on Labor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Let me correct the gentleman. That bill was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FORAN].

Mr. KELLEY. Well, you were championing it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I am glad to know that we agreed once. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of that bill I begged a few minutes, and in the course of my remarks said:

> I have looked upon the misery of the British, French, Belgian, German, and Austrian laborers. I tried during the tariff debate to depict the sufferings of some of them. I was told when I did so that all the ills I had pointed to could be found in this country.
> I painfully admit that specimens of them all can be found in this country. The only answer I can make is that they are not general here, as they are elsewhere. They are merely seminal here; there they are in full fruition; there they are not only germinal, but you will find them blooming everywhere you find population at all condensed. It is our duty to guard against their spread while we may. Let us avail ourselves of every means by which we may inspire with hope and ambition the poor foreigners who have come to our shores, or who have been thrust upon them by speculating contractors and have drifted into the tenement houses and cellars of New York and elsewhere. Do not let us permit avarice to add to their numbers. Do not let us gratify the greed of Pole, Italian, or Slav by welcoming to the ranks of our laborers men and women from the worst associations of Eastern and Southern Europe. Do not let us—

I invite to this early utterance the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas who has intimated that I am the creature of capitalists. I wish I had capital invested or deposited, but it could not add to my freedom or independence, for there is no capitalist or combination of capitalists in the country that can put foot upon me or control my opinions or conduct.

Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. KELLEY. I decline to be interrupted. The gentleman need not shake his Arkansian finger at me. [Laughter.] On the occasion in question, I went on to say:

> Do not let us permit grasping capitalists, whether making glass, or coke, or iron, or any other product, to herd together men and women who seem to be without a clear recognition of social or moral distinction between the sexes, if we may judge from their daily life and the manner in which they inhabit indiscriminately their large but unfurnished sleeping apartments. Can we prohibit such immigration? We have the general-welfare clause put at us now and again, and, should I fail to find power elsewhere in the Constitution, I would invoke the general-welfare clause in behalf of the laborers of the country.

Sir, I need not ask assent to this doctrine from Arkansas, a State which employs in her manufacturing industries less than one-fifth of less than one-third of 1 per cent. of the manufacturing workmen of the country. They who are arithmeticians may work out the problem for themselves: the proportions are less than one-fifth of less than one-third of either the capital or the employés engaged in manufactures in this country. The gentleman can not contradict it.

Sir, I have been laboring, against Democratic opposition, since 1866 to relieve from duty raw materials imported for manufactures and to relieve our manufactures of the burden of internal taxation. Every tobacco-grower, every tobacco manufacturer, every maker of cigars, cheroots, cigarettes, whether man, woman, or child, is burdened by this Democratic taxation against which I have been battling for twenty years.

Mr. DUNN. Who levied those taxes?

Mr. KELLEY. Who levied them? Why, the "arch-conspirators" against the rebel army, Stanton and Lincoln and a Republican Congress, levied them in order to provide means to maintain the Union and the supremacy of the national flag. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DUNN. And you——

Mr. KELLEY. I decline to yield. I say, Mr. Chairman, that for twenty years I have striven to relieve the tobacco-grower of Arkansas from this Democratic internal taxation which should have been abolished long ago. For twenty years I have labored, in season and out of season, to give free alcohol to the arts for the manufacture of drugs, medicines, and varnishes, and in the ten thousand industries of the country into which it enters; but Democratic love of foreign importations has said, "No; tax our corn, as you do now, 90 cents a bushel if we attempt to convert it into liquid; tax our tobacco as you do now, but in God's name keep out factories and workshops from our free country by abolishing protective duties."

They forget they can no longer whip their laborers as they used to do when slavery existed; that labor is now free, and that they may as well let the free laborer of Arkansas be prosperous. They adhere to the doctrine that prevailed when great workshops were justly regarded as dangerous to the institution of slavery. They should remember that that institution ceased to exist nearly a quarter of a century ago.

I find that on January 16, 1866, I said:

My anxiety is not about the debt. It is that the taxes it involves shall be as little oppressive as possible and be so adjusted that while defending our industry against foreign assault they may add nothing to the cost of those necessaries of life which we can not produce and for which we must therefore look to other lands. The raw materials entering our manufactures, which we are yet unable to produce, but on which we unwisely impose duties, I would put into the free-list with tea, coffee, and other such purely foreign essentials of life, and would impose duties on commodities that compete with American productions, so as to protect every feeble or infant branch of industry and quicken those that are robust. I would thus cheapen the elements of life and enable those whose capital is embarked in any branch of production to offer such wages to the skilled workmen of all lands as would steadily and rapidly increase our numbers; and, as is always the case in the neighborhood of growing cities or towns of considerable extent, increase the returns for farm labor. This policy would open new mines and quarries, build new furnaces, forges, and factories, and rapidly increase the taxable property and taxable inhabitants of the country.

I would like to know—I would like the gentleman from Arkansas to give me a categorical answer to the question whether the average wages of a laboring woman in Arkansas are like those that were earned by the little girl an account of whose death he caused to be read—a dollar a day? She was but a child; she was working under the "oppression" of the tariff system, but her wages were more than have ever been given as an average to any laboring woman in Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I will answer the gentleman, of course, as he asks me a question. The wages of a laboring woman in Arkansas depend altogether upon which woman it is and what she is doing; but——

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the average wages.

Mr. DUNN. But more than half her wages are robbed from her today by a protective system which doubles the cost of living. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.]

Mr. KELLEY. Sir, I shall have occasion to show what the industry of Arkansas is. I shall have an opportunity to show how many workshops she has, how many people she employs in them, what wages she pays. There is not a woman in the State who ever consecutively for a month received the wages that were paid to that poor, little, overworked girl—a dollar a day.

Mr. DUNN. What is the gentleman's authority for that statement?

Mr. KELLEY. My authority is the United States census and the patent facts of the case—the poverty of the dwellers within that magnificently endowed region known to the world as the State of Arkansas. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I will reserve that. I want a little rest.

Mr. DUNN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, one would suppose from the speech of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that a good deal of the fatigue of which he now complains was the result of exertion to get rid of the internal-revenue system. It is well for us to recur in this connection to the history of legislation on this subject. The system was inaugurated by the party of which the gentleman is a member.

Mr. KELLEY. It could not help it, having a war on its hands.

Mr. MCMILLIN. "Having a war on its hands!" If the gentleman pleads war and the extremities of war, I will go to another time when there was no war raging. I speak of a period eighteen years after the war closed. After his party had lost control of the House of Representatives and had been out of power for years they were restored to power in the Forty-seventh Congress. They had the House, they had the Senate, they had the Executive. For years we had been listening to speeches from the gentleman from Pennsylvania of exactly the same tone as that which has rung out here to-day. For years he had complained that the Democratic House would not recommend a repeal of the internal-revenue system. For years he had said that it was a system of oppression; for years he had said it was an outrage to continue it; for years he said that its continuance was incompatible with the best interests of the country. When his party organized the House and came into full power that distinguished gentleman [Mr. KELLEY] was made chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He thereby held the authority to say whether or not the internal-revenue system should continue. After he was elected and after his party was in power he had stated on this floor that the internal-revenue system ought to be repealed. Yet when the test came, when the power was in his hands, and his sworn duty was to conserve the best interests of the country, he came before this House and refused to recommend any such measure, but, on the contrary, said that his caucus had determined otherwise, and he would obey the caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman in one minute whether I did not report a bill——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have but little time.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well. I ask the gentleman whether I did not report a bill repealing internal-revenue taxes, and whether——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I can not yield further.

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman brought in a bill to repeal the tax on banks.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman reported a bill to repeal the tax on banks and to reduce certain internal-revenue taxes, but I never heard, and the country never heard, of a single officer that he complained of as an engine of oppression being cut off. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. I had no support in the Democratic or Republican party.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman's party was in full power. Whose fault was it if he had no support? What more? He reported a bill to repeal the tax on certain cosmetics, to repeal taxes on banks, and to reduce the tax on playing-cards, but leaving it on Bibles. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] That is the history of the whole business.

Now, sir, when the Democratic party is to be blamed I want all who are fairly deserving of a share of the blame to bare their shoulders, take it, and to stand to it. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. If I could have had Democratic support then against my own party I would have repealed the internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman came and notified us that Democratic aid would not be accepted, because he said his caucus determined otherwise, and he would stand by his caucus, Democrats to the contrary notwithstanding. [Laughter and applause.] When the proposition came before the House to repeal the internal-revenue taxes, or to reduce them to an extent beyond the recommendations of the gentleman's bill, the gentleman must not be remembered as one who voted for the amendment and for the reduction.

Mr. KELLEY. Who made such a demand? Who moved such an amendment? If one was submitted I supported it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I know the gentleman does not like to share this responsibility in connection with his utterances to-day, but in what I have said I only wanted to call attention to the facts of history, and was determined they should be made known.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no man reveres my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] more than I do, but I will not, after having heard him for years revile against the internal-revenue system, and seen him with power in his hands, and seen him refuse to use it to secure the repeal, I will not, I say, take all the responsibility for keeping that system up when it justly belongs to him. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. I must say I have never seen an instant in which I had the power in my hands.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he did not vote through the tellers against taking the tax off tobacco in the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. KELLEY. I never voted against taking the tax off tobacco.

Mr. SPRINGER. I saw the gentleman go through the tellers and vote against taking off the tobacco tax.

Mr. KELLEY. When you wanted to allow your favorites to sell 100 pounds without restriction——

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman went through the tellers and voted against the proposition. I saw him do it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I regret I can not yield to these interruptions further, because I have but a moment more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What has been complained of by the country, Mr. Chairman, in connection with the internal-revenue system was its oppressive administration and its large number of officers. While the internal-revenue taxes were reduced by the gentleman's party in the Forty-seventh Congress, and on his recommendation as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, they never got rid of a single bit of the obnoxious machinery, not a particle of this oppression of administration. Now, sir, the surplus annually is less than the internal-revenue taxation, from thirty to fifty millions of dollars less; and when the gentleman stood here confronted with the fact that when he repealed the internal-revenue taxes he must place an additional tax on coffee or something else he did what every statesman was bound to do, he hesitated to make that reduction and to place with it the tax on coffee. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. The record shows otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. I take the floor now, Mr. Chairman, and I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing general debate.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe I have six minutes of my time remaining. I desire to ask any gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has submitted a privileged motion, that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. KELLEY. I want simply to ask——

Mr. MARTIN. I will withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. KELLEY. I want simply to ask the members of the Committee of Ways and Means whether any Democratic member of the present Committee of Ways and Means favors the repeal of the internal-revenue taxes?

Mr. MORRISON. I think not. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has charged that the strikes and the labor troubles in this country arise from high taxation. To my mind these strikes arise from the intelligence of the working masses of this country. The efforts on the part of the workingmen themselves to better their condition by reason of their intelligence give rise to these strikes and other movements seeking to accomplish the same end on their part throughout the United States. You hear of none of these things in China, where the laboring classes have not the intelligence which moves them to seek their amelioration and raise themselves from their pauperism.

Mr. DUNN. And that is the result of Chinese protection, is it not?

Mr. BAYNE. It is not a question of taxation. It is a question of intelligence. Why, sir, in free-trade England but a short time ago twenty thousand men marched through the streets of London in demonstration of their intentions to improve their condition.

You hear of such demonstrations only in those countries, and emphatically in the United States, where labor is intelligent and educated. You do not hear of them in Arkansas, where labor is not educated.

Mr. DUNN. Let me ask the gentleman——

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; you declined to yield to me even for a moment, and I shall not yield to you.

You do hear of strikes among the intelligent workmen of Pennsylvania. Our working people there are well off. In my own county of Allegheny the workingmen own more property and represent more wealth than the entire State of Arkansas.

The gentleman talks about the strikes being the result of poverty and taxation. Why, I repeat, in China, among its pauper population, there are no strikes. Its people are ignorant and poor.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, and that labor has been reduced to that condition of pauperism by centuries of protection amounting to absolute prohibition.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope I will not be interrupted.

I say wherever you have educated men, thinking men, you will find men who are seeking to better their condition. You will find men who agitate the labor question for their own protection against low and unjust wages.

Now, sir, the gentleman has called attention to a colony of Hungarians in the western part of Pennsylvania. What has that to do with this question? It is a transplantation from Europe.

Mr. DUNN. By protectionists.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I must ask the protection of the rules of the House against these constant interruptions, or else I shall ask for more time if this thing is to go on.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Now the "galled jade" winces on that side. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BAYNE. That colony in Western Pennsylvania represents all the essential elements of European labor and that class of European civilization which is represented by its working people.

These free-trade laborers were imported into this country under the contract system and against the protest of Pennsylvania and Pennsylvanians, as every vote will show that has ever been recorded upon the subject by Pennsylvanians in Congress.

Mr. DUNN. But not against the protest of Pennsylvania manufacturers.

Mr. BAYNE. It represents an essentially foreign element and foreign methods; an element that is as foreign to our United States as that represented by the Chinese in San Francisco, which illustrates the Chinese mode of living and Chinese civilization.

But, sir, you go among the workingmen of Pennsylvania east and west throughout all of the limits of that broad Commonwealth, and you will find an educated class, a thrifty class. You will find them owning property, having deposits in the savings-banks of the State. You will find among them intelligence and cultivation, and you will find them equal to any class of the people throughout this great Union in any section of our common country.

Mr. MCADOO. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MCADOO. This discussion is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill under discussion. I make this point of order because I understand that eighty gentlemen have signified their intention of discussing the tariff in the regular manner, and I object to the introduction in this way of the debate, thereby giving gentlemen an opportunity in advance of those who are entitled to be heard upon the question.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not wonder the gentleman objects.

Mr. BAYNE. The galled jades are wincing on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask a ruling on the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the point of order, and he will confine himself to the subject.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that in the county of Allegheny, where I live, there are more wages paid to labor in one year than are paid in three years in the whole State of Arkansas. In that county there were paid in one year over $22,000,000 to the workingmen; and in one bank in that county there are deposits of $9,000,000, a large proportion of which deposits are owned by the workingmen of the county. They own their own houses. They can strike to better their condition, and they can sustain their strikes; and in the struggle with monopolists and against combined capital they are holding their own; and under the leadership of a man like Mr. Powderly, whose prudent counsels and wise course is commended by all thinking people all over the country, they are achieving better conditions and results every day for themselves. The condition of these men in that State, their prosperity in Pennsylvania, is attributable to this law of protection which the gentleman from Arkansas has berated and traduced as resulting in the oppression of the people in different sections of the country.

I have said that the county of Allegheny, in Western Pennsylvania, pays more in wages in one year than the whole State of Arkansas does in three years. I now have the figures. The census of 1880 shows that the total amount paid in wages in Arkansas during the year was $925,328, while in Allegheny County there was paid a total for the year of $22,371,951 and in the State of Pennsylvania over $134,000,000.

The average paid to hands in Arkansas is about $195 per year, while the average in Allegheny County is over $450.

And the people of Pennsylvania not only pay good wages, but they are educated. I find in the census that in Arkansas in 1880 there were 97,990 native whites—mark you, native whites; not colored persons or foreigners—above ten years of age who could not write—about 25.5 per cent. of the population. In Pennsylvania there were but 123,206 of native whites who could not write, or 4.8 per cent.

So it is easy to see how things go in Pennsylvania as compared with Arkansas. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to limit debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, what is the bill? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question). The "ayes" have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I addressed the Chair before the question was put for the purpose of inquiring whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was adopted. I had that right as a member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state no amendment was offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The only amendment to the bill was the amendment submitted by the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division on this vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 33.

So (further count not being called for) the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1393) granting a pension to Silas S. White;

A bill (H. R. 1406) granting a pension to Simmons W. Harden;

A bill (H. R. 1582) for the relief of Eleanor C. Bangham;

A bill (H. R. 2145) for the relief of Rebecca Eldridge;

A bill (H. R. 3921) granting a pension to Richard Gear; and

A bill (H. R. 5254) to increase the pension of George W. Smith.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on this bill.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

HENRY MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Henry Martin, of Seward County, Nebraska, or his legal representatives or assigns, may select and shall be allowed a patent for 80 acres of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States in the State of Nebraska, not mineral in character, and in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, and if unsurveyed when taken, to conform when surveyed to the general system of the United States land surveys; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to issue scrip, in legal subdivisions, to the said Martin, or his legal representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this act, which scrip shall be received in payment for said land.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the report may be read.

The report (by Mr. DORSEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin, respectfully submit the following report:

Henry Martin made homestead entry No. 15209, at Lincoln, Nebr., December 15, 1874, of the E. ½ SW. ¼, and W. ½ SE. ¼, Sec. 2, T. 11 N., R. 4 E., containing 160 acres. It appears that Martin's entry to the W. ½ SE. ¼ was erroneously allowed by the register and receiver, as the same was embraced in a prior entry.

The fact that the 80 acres had been embraced in a prior entry was unknown to Martin, and it was selected by him in good faith and upon the assurance of the register and receiver that the land was vacant and unappropriated public land.

Martin, immediately upon making said entry, took possession of the land, erected a house and made valuable improvements, and made it his home. Sixteen months after the entry and occupation of the land he was advised by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that his entry was held for cancellation to the extent of said 80 acres, and he was allowed to retain the E. ½ of SW. ¼, Sec. 2 (80 acres), as his homestead, or have his entire entry canceled and be allowed to make a new entry.

The land, in the time intervening between his entry and his receiving information that the register and receiver had made an error in allowing his entry of said 80 acres in conflict, had all been taken up for miles beyond this tract upon which he had made his home and improvements.

Martin was a poor man, who had lost his leg while in line of duty as a Union soldier during the late war (as a private in Company A, Eighth New Jersey Volunteers).

Every dollar he had was invested in this land, and it was a matter of impossibility for him and his family to leave their home and commence anew. He therefore remained on the 80 acres which were not canceled.

Martin subsequently applied for permission to make an additional entry. This application was denied, as his entry was made after the Revised Statutes took effect.

Martin has continuously endeavored from that time to this to secure an additional entry of 80 acres, but has been informed by the Land Office that his only remedy would be relief by special act.

This is a meritorious case. Martin has, through no fault of his, but by reason of an error of the officers of the land office, been deprived of the right to letters patent for 160 acres, to which he would have been entitled had no error been made by the local officers. He is a crippled soldier, with a large family, who are dependent upon his labor for support. He therefore asks simply justice, namely, that he be granted scrip to the amount of 80 acres, which he may locate upon any of the unappropriated public land in the State of Nebraska which is not mineral in character.

The committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "Nebraska," insert the words "subject to entry."

Mr. SPRINGER. This amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], who introduced the bill.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. M. ENGLISH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2244) for the relief of J. M. English, the administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased, $12,000, out of any money appropriated for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims; that amount being found due and allowed to Richard Fitzpatrick, during his lifetime, by the Court of Claims, as compensation for the use and occupation of his property by the United States Government.

Mr. TRIGG. This is a bill to provide for the payment of a judgment of the Court of Claims. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims of this House. It was also unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims last session. I do not think it is necessary to make any statement unless some gentleman has any objection to urge against the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RELIEF OF LIGHT-HOUSE EMPLOYÈS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 190) for the relief of certain employés and others of the twelfth United States light-house district; reported by Mr. MCKENNA from the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,465.65, in payment of certain claims against the United States Government not heretofore paid because of the defalcation and forgeries of John T. Best, late clerk of the engineer of the twelfth light-house district, and due the several claimants as follows: Employés at Point Conception light, $3,784.70; Miguel Ortego, $478.14; Charles Ashton, $270; Pigeon Point light station, $980.99; sundry small bills, $1,200.95; Martin and P. B. Murphy, $10,000; O. B. Shaw, $1,748.87.

Mr. FELTON. This bill is simply to pay an indebtedness of the United States incurred four years ago to certain employés, mechanics, and laborers in the twelfth United States light-house district. It has been examined by three different commissions of the Light-House Department, and I have in my hand the report containing the recommendation of each commission that this bill be passed, and stating that there is no question whatsoever of the indebtedness and that the money ought to be paid. I do not desire to take up the time of the House in having the report read, but it can be read if any gentleman desires it.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PATTISON & CALDWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1813) for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it is represented that in an attempt to extinguish the fire by which the distillery of Pattison & Caldwell, located at Hamilton, Ohio, was destroyed, water was thrown into, ran into, and become intermixed with certain distilled spirits then in the drawing-off cisterns in the cistern-room of said distillery; that by reason of said intermixture said spirits were reduced twenty degrees below proof; and that, under that provision of law by which a tax of 90 cents is imposed on each and every wine-gallon of distilled spirits when below proof, said Pattison & Caldwell were required to pay, and did pay, internal-revenue taxes upon said spirits to the amount of $510.30 in excess of the sum they would have been required to pay thereon had there been no such intermixture: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to said Pattison & Caldwell so much, not exceeding $510.30, as it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they have paid as internal-revenue taxes on said spirits in excess of what they would have been required to pay thereon had there been no such intermixture of water and reduction of proof.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any recommendation of the bill from the Internal-Revenue Bureau?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. The report might as well be read. It embodies the recommendation of the officers of the Department.

Mr. KING. Is this bill reported favorably by the committee which had the matter in charge?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is favorably reported by the committee. The Clerk will read the report:

The report (by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1813) for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

That the bill is the same as Senate bill 956 of the Forty-eighth Congress, which received a favorable report (No. 356) from the Committee on Finance; which report, after careful consideration by this committee, is adopted as its own, and is as follows:

That the bill, together with the accompanying papers, was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by him referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In view of the facts set forth in the letter of the Commissioner, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report, the committee recommend that the relief be granted.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 8, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter and inclosures of Hon. Justin S. Morrill, chairman of the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, addressed to you and by you referred to me for report. Mr. Morrill incloses a copy of Senate bill 956 for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell, and papers relating thereto, and asks that you will direct the proper officer of your Department to report the facts, and also his views as to the propriety of granting the relief.

Senate bill No. 956 recites the circumstances of the destruction of the distillery of Pattison & Caldwell by fire, when water thrown upon the burning building ran into the spirit cisterns and became intermingled with the spirits therein so as to reduce the same twenty degrees below proof, and the tax of 90 cents was exacted as required by law on each wine gallon of said spirits, and proposes to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to said Pattison & Caldwell so much, not exceeding $510.30, as it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they have paid as internal-revenue taxes on said spirits in excess of what they would have been required to pay thereon had there been no such intermixture of water and reduction of proof.

I have the honor to report as follows:

The records of this office show that the distillery of Messrs. Pattison & Caldwell was destroyed by fire March 18, 1883; that the contents of the receiving cisterns were damaged and reduced below proof by water from the fire-engines; that the spirits so damaged and reduced below proof were drawn off and warehoused on the 28th of March, 1883, the gauger's report showing 2,899 wine and 2,319.20 proof gallons, and that they were withdrawn and the tax paid on the number of wine gallons, 2,899, April 19, 1883. Had the tax been collected on the proof gallons only it would have been collected on 2,332 gallons, the difference between this and 2,319.20 being made by the fractions of over one-half. The difference between the number of wine and taxable gallons was therefore 567 gallons, the tax on which, at 90 cents per gallon, is $510.30.

I am of the opinion that the bill (S. 956) is an equitable one, and that a bill of this nature should become a law.

Very respectfully,

WALTER EVANS, Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

E. J. PHILLIPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 5553; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the accounts of E. J. Phillips, postmaster at Oberlin, Ohio, and credit him in said settlement with the sum of $2,114.89, the same being for United States postage-stamps of the value of $1,837.64, and money-order funds amounting to $277.25, lost by a burglary, without any fault or negligence of the postmaster.

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this bill is reported in pursuance of the recommendation of the Post-Office Department. An investigation of the matter has shown that the postmaster was in no way at fault. I therefore move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question before that motion is put?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. If it be true that this postmaster was without fault in relation to the loss of these stamps, why is he not relieved under the general law passed some years ago?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. He could be relieved so far as the stamps are concerned; but there are some other items as to which he could not be relieved under the general law, and the Department recommended this course.

Mr. CANNON. Then this does not apply to relief for the stamps?

Mr. BROWN, of Ohio. Yes. The Department recommends that he be credited for both in this way.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If I may be pardoned, I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that under the general law the Department has no authority to act in a case where the amount exceeds $2,000.

Mr. BEACH. Does this case exceed $2,000?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. It does.

Mr. GEDDES. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I presented this matter in person at the Department, and was willing, on behalf of the postmaster concerned (who resides at Oberlin, Ohio, in my district), to waive or lose the odd $124, or whatever the exact amount was, and I made that suggestion; but the Department declined it, saying that he ought not to lose any portion of the money, and that the account ought to be made correct on the record, and the Department advised this course. I then filed a bill in the last Congress, which was favorably reported by the committee but was not reached on the Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but is there any reason why at least as to the stamps lost the Department should not give him the necessary relief under the law now in existence?

Mr. GEDDES. The law officer of the Department has decided otherwise.

Mr. CANNON. On what ground?

Mr. GEDDES. Well, he had his own judgment about it, and declined very positively to act, and advised him to come here.

Mr. CANNON. Then the trouble about the matter is this, I fear: that the special agent does not make a report which brings this case within the general law.

Mr. GEDDES. Oh, I assure the gentleman from Illinois that there is no trouble of that kind about it. The Department found the case in all respects meritorious, and it was only on the purely technical ground that they could not give this relief under the law that they declined to give relief, and advised this method.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. On the ground that they could not give relief where the amount exceeded $2,000?

Mr. GEDDES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, but the stamps lost, I understand, did not amount to $2,000.

Mr. GEDDES. No.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is certainly no reason why the Department should not grant relief to the extent of the value of the stamps lost. The only object I have in asking these questions is that I fear, from the circumstances of the case, that this postmaster is not entitled to relief on account of some carelessness on his own part.

Mr. GEDDES. Oh, not at all. I wish I had here the letter from the Post-Office Department on the subject; I would read it to the gentleman from Illinois, and he would see that the postmaster is wholly and entirely faultless in the matter, as shown by an official investigation.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If the gentleman will pardon me again, I will state, as a member of the Committee on Claims, that we have never passed on any claim of this character until we have received a letter from the Department showing that the loss occurred without neglect or fault on the part of the postmaster; and that was the case in this instance.

Mr. GEDDES. That is the case, and that was the decision of the Department, and they would willingly have given the necessary relief if they could have done so under the law.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand it is agreed on all hands that up to $2,000 there is authority in the Department under the general law to grant relief, and I understand that the stamps did not amount to $2,000. Yet, notwithstanding this clear authority to relieve, the Postmaster-General, through his representative, sends this claimant to Congress. Now, if all that be true, the Department itself ought to be reformed.

Mr. GEDDES. I will not stop to debate that question now. If you will just let this bill pass and let this man be relieved, we will reform the Department hereafter.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If the gentleman from Illinois will aid the Committee on Claims, there is a general bill now reported from that committee to reform this very thing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if it were not that I know from what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] both have said, that they have investigated this matter, I should say there was a "nigger in the wood-pile."

Mr. GEDDES. Not at all. It is all perfectly white.

Mr. CANNON. I am willing to take the assurance of the gentleman on that point.

The report (by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 5687 in the Forty-eighth Congress, considered the facts in this case, and made report thereon, which your committee adopt as their report, as follows:

"From the papers filed in this case it appears that on the night of the 2d day of May, 1882, the post-office at Oberlin, Ohio, was entered by burglars, the safe blown open, and postage-stamps of the value of $1,837.64, and money-order funds amounting to $277.25, were stolen therefrom. The Post-Office Department examined the case, and report that the loss resulted from no fault or negligence of the postmaster, E. J. Phillips, but that he seems to have exercised all the care and diligence in the premises that could be required. The said sum of $227.25 has been paid by Phillips to the Department; the said sum of $1,837.64 has not been paid to the Department, but stands as a charge against Phillips. The Department recommends that the said Phillips be allowed a credit of $2,114.89, being the aggregate of the two sums last named. The bill provides for the payment of said sum to E. J. Phillips, the postmaster; but as he has only paid $277.25, and is charged with the balance, $1,837.64, your committee report a substitute for the bill submitted, which substitute provides that the Postmaster-General be authorized to credit the accounts of E. J. Phillips with the said sum of $2,114.89 in settling his accounts.

"The committee recommend the passage of the substitute."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute reported by this committee.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PAY OF FORMER HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole now take up for consideration the bill which I send to the desk—a bill for the relief of some persons who have been employés of the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following specified sums to the persons herein named, for services rendered as laborers in the employ of the House of Representatives of the Forty-fifth Congress, namely:

To Beaufort Lee, the sum of $180.
To Alexander Thomas, the sum of $260.
To James Hall, the sum of $260.
To Charles Carter, the sum of $260.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] asks unanimous consent that this bill be taken up at the present time for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. In what Congress were these persons employés of the House?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think in the Forty-fifth. This bill is the unanimous report, I believe, of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAND. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire how it happens that these persons have not been paid heretofore.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I do not know how it has happened, but this claim has been made from time to time as I know; and it is now, I understand, reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAND. Is it for services actually rendered?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It is for services actually rendered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. DOUGHERTY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims have had under consideration the petition of Beaufort Lee and others, and report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage for the following reasons:

Said petitioners appear to have been laborers employed by the Forty-fifth Congress, and to have been paid only $1 per day for their services, while the usual rate of compensation was $2 per day. Your committee think these men ought to receive the usual compensation for such services, namely, $2 per day during the time indicated in the following statement:

Forty-fifth Congress, recess between March 4 and December 4, 1877.

Beaufort Lee worked 180 days, at $2	$360
Received, at $1 per day	180
Due	180
Alexander Thomas worked 260 days, at $2	520
Received, at $1 per day	260
Due	260

James Hall worked 260 days, at $2	520
Received, at $1 per day	260
Due	260
Charles Carter worked 260 days, at $2	520
Received, at $1 per day	260
Due	260

A discussion was had touching the employment of these men in the House of Representatives at the time they were allowed the $1 per day, which is to be found on pages 246, 247 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, second session Forty-fifth Congress, under date of December 15, 1877.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Before that motion is put I wish to say a word. I understand from the reading of the report that this is a bill from the Committee on Claims to double the pay of certain employés of the Forty-fifth Congress. I suspect from listening to the report that it is a just bill; but I can not let it pass without calling attention to the fact, which I have no doubt an examination of the discussions in that Congress will show, that these people were cut down to the rate which they actually received through the determination of the Democratic party, then controlling the House, to carry out their loudly proclaimed policy of economy and reform.

This is the Forty-ninth Congress; and, according to my recollection, since the Forty-fourth and the Forty-fifth Congresses, when this magnificent party under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was making its magnificent record of economy and reform, there has not been a Congress when bills of this kind have not come in from the Committee on Claims to pay the employés of the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses what should have been paid to them at that time. We Republicans, in the minority at that time, told you that you were not sincere, that your pretense of economy and reform was a cheat, that bills of this kind would come in for five and ten years afterward, appealing for justice in behalf of these people whose pay had been refused under your then policy, and that, as the years rolled round, you would give them this pay which had been denied them.

Now, I do not make these remarks to antagonize this bill; but having sat in this House through the Forty-fourth and the Forty-fifth Congresses and seen these tricks played year after year, having heard the statesmanlike professions of economy on the other side of the House and seen you vote substantially as a unit under the lead of the gentlemen I have indicated, I can not now, in this Forty-ninth Congress, when years have passed and the prophecies we then made have come true, let this bill become a law without calling attention to the fact that our prophecies are now being verified and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the gentleman from Indiana, and my colleagues from Illinois sit here and allow their injustice of eight and ten years ago to be rectified after they have postured before the country as economists by withholding a just compensation for services rendered the Government.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not know what the exact facts may be as to the items of expenditure about which my colleague [Mr. CANNON] has just spoken. He was always apparently in entire accord with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], with whom he has served on the Committee on Appropriations during many successive Congresses.

Mr. CANNON. I had not the honor to be a member of that committee at that time.

Mr. MORRISON. I am now, or was a moment ago, talking of what happened when you were on the committee helping to economize. It is true that only two days ago my colleague did support an increase of appropriation—a very small one—on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; that is to say, he opposed it in a speech and voted for it afterward. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I said I would vote for it, as the gentleman will see if he will do me the honor to read my remarks.

Mr. MORRISON. I had the pleasure of listening to him, and now do the gentleman the honor to cause to be read a paragraph from his remarks.

Mr. CANNON. It is good reading.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; very good reading. Better than the facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON. And you Democrats say that it is an economical administration. Yet I find a very clever gentleman appointed to Constantinople—you all understand who; he has had long years of service on the floor of the House, and the first thing that is done when this administration comes into power is to pay him a salary as minister at Constantinople of $10,000 a year, whereas under the Republican administration the minister at Constantinople only received $7,500 per annum.

Mr. MORRISON. Now, my colleague, in these remarks conveyed, perhaps unintentionally, to the House and to the country the impression that since this administration came into power and since Mr. Cox had gone to Constantinople we had increased his salary and were paying him $2,500 more than was paid under the former administration to the Republican representative at that court. But the gentleman must have known that that increase was made under the last administration. I think the increase of salary had its inception at the other end of the Capitol. It was made by the last Congress and had the approval of President Arthur.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whom my colleague so sharply criticised, and who, with him, were on the committee when this increase was made, happened to be out of their seats when he was making his criticism of this item of appropriation; I therefore had this paragraph read.

It may be my colleague, with whom I seldom disagree because he is always economical and nearly always just, is again giving out a wrong impression. I thought it barely possible he might have been as far off from the facts in what he has just said of the items of this bill, their origin and the reasons why they are here, as he was when he was giving out or leaving the impression on the country that $2,500 was added to this salary under this administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, I have to say I stand by the remarks I made and which he heard. If he wants the facts, as I understand them, touching the increase of the salary of our minister to Constantinople I will say to him that the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill passed through the House last March, if I recollect aright, for $7,500. By some means, I know not what, but I certainly suspect what the means were, that salary was taken out from among all the others and increased by an amendment of the Senate to $10,000 a year. It came back to a Democratic House, and finally when the bill passed with the salary, $10,000, for the minister at Constantinople, it received the vote of that side of the House as well as of this side of the House, and it was so written into the law. That was about three days before President Cleveland was inaugurated. After his inauguration the present minister was appointed to Constantinople at $10,000 a year, where he has been from that time to now.

Again, you come in and recommend in this Democratic House, when you have full possession of the administration, of the House, and the President, that same increase of $10,000, thus putting the stamp of your approval on it. [Applause.] And more than that, you added $800 increase for a steam-launch.

Mr. MORRISON. And you voted for it.

Mr. CANNON. I said I would find no fault with the committee if it were needed; and a Democratic Secretary of State said it was needed, and you said on that side of the House by your votes that it was needed. I am always ready to make any proper increase for service to the Government, and this to whoever may be President. Can our Democratic friends say as much? This is all I have to say.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman be good enough to tell us how much the bill passed the other day carries more than the bill for the current year?

Mr. CANNON. I think the increase for the coming year in the consular and diplomatic bill beyond that for the current year is in round numbers $50,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Over the law of last year?

Mr. CANNON. Over the law for the present year.

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. But I make no point about that. I am glad the gentleman from New York called attention to the fact; and I repeat that this particular bill now pending is to double the salary of certain employés of the Democratic House in the Forty-fifth Congress, a Congress my friends on that side will recollect.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say for the benefit of the committee and my colleague from Illinois, that in the Forty-fifth Congress Mr. BLAIR from New Hampshire, now a Senator in Congress from the same State, submitted from the Committee on Accounts a resolution providing for the payment of certain persons therein named specific amounts, as stated in the resolution, for services they had rendered during the vacation of that session of Congress. Mr. BLAIR, in introducing the resolution from the Committee on Accounts, said, after an objection had been made:

I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. White] will withdraw his objection when I say this resolution provides only for paying several common labors and atthachés around the Capitol who have done this service and have not received what is due them.

These were colored men who had been in the employ of the House for years preceding the time when the Democratic party obtained control. They were employés that the Democractic House had inherited from their predecesors; and they were still hanging on as employés or seeking employment of the House. They had not been on the pay-roll, but had been performing service.

Now, when that question was under debate in the House Mr. Garfield said:

I have no doubt that this resolution should pass, and the only reason I asked the question was that I might know whether this was a case where the force had been increased by indirection, which is a thing that we should guard against. If these men have performed services they should be paid.

Mr. BLAIR said:

These men rendered services not in accordance with any specified law, but the services were made necessary by the necessities of the House of Representatives. Most of these services were rendered during the last vacation. The first two named in the resolution, Mr. Bell and Mr. Stewart, have been for many years paid under resolutions similar to this: they have never been upon any roll. I presume both of them are known to the old members of the House. They have hitherto been paid at the rate of $2 per day, and we have cut them down to $1.50 a day. The others named in the resolution are, with perhaps one exception, common laborers, and the services they have rendered have been chiefly in repairs of the Capitol.

Instead of paying them at the usual rate of $2 per day, we cut them down to $1 per day. We have reduced them to starvation prices, and it is my belief that every one of them is hungry at this moment.

And it seems that they have got hungry again, for they are here asking for another appropriation.

I think there is nothing in this resolution to which any gentleman in this House would have the slightest objection if he knew the merits of the case.

It seems that the persons who participated in that debate in favor of the resolution were the present Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. BLAIR, and the late President of the United States, Mr. Garfield. I see no reference to any Democrat having taken part in the debate except Mr. Roberts, of Maryland, then the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, who favored the payment on the ground that the services had been rendered.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported from the Committee on Claims at a time when the chairman happened to be absent, and was not advised of the merits of the case when it was called up out of its usual order by unanimous consent. But the point involved is simply this: Whether we should increase now the compensation of these persons, which compensation was allowed in the Forty-fifth Congress as a matter of grace, when that was fixed and accepted at the time as the compensation, and it occurs to me it would be a mistake to increase——

Mr. KING. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

The gentleman from Illinois appears to be familiar with the facts of the case, and I will be glad to know from him why this account has been so long standing? It has been standing some eight years.

Mr. EDEN. Who reported the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY], whom I do not now see in his seat, reported the bill to the House.

I was saying, when interrupted, that I think the action in the Forty-fifth Congress ought to regulate this compensation.

Mr. EDEN. I think so too.

Mr. SPRINGER. That compensation was fixed then with all of the facts before the House, and was accepted by the employés in full satisfaction for their services.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me a moment, the Committee on Claims, I understand, had no doubt that the parties had rendered the services. They had been employed as they thought by competent authority having power to employ them, and the committee believed that the men, having rendered the services to the Government in that way, should not be kept out of the pay upon a technicality, or upon party principles, or upon any question of economy on either side of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. These men were paid by the resolution I have indicated, and the amount to which they were entitled was then fixed, in some cases at $1.50 per day and in others at $1 per day. They were paid for the services then actually performed. This bill proposes to pay the difference between what was then adjudged to be a fair value for the service, that is to say, $1.50 in one case and $1 in the other, and $2, which they now think they ought to have.

I am opposed to the bill for that reason.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This, as I understand it, then, is to go back and readjust the amounts which were paid and accepted as the compensation?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And is to allow more than was allowed by the Congress having all the facts before it?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the effect.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not remember the particulars of this claim, but I do know that all of these men—I think all of them—were colored men, and not in harmony politically with the present majority of this House. But I leave that subject altogether.

I was not present when the gentleman from Illinois assailed the Democratic economy of former Congresses, and I want to say that that question, more than anything else, in my judgment, gave the Forty-fourth Congress to the Democrats. The Republican party had become extravagant, and the people came to think that a new party would better clean out the excrescences, and they did clean them out. The appropriations of the first year were enormously reduced, that is to say, at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress. There was preceding that a system of making provision for the payment of deficiencies which should never be allowed.

Their own Secretary of the Treasury himself stated that the reductions by that Congress could have been ten millions more. That was stated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury laid before Congress at the very next session.

I have heard often about the policy of the Democratic party being for economy, and have heard it condemned by that side of the House. I am not surprised at it. It is only once that they have been able to carry a Congress since, because of their tendency to extravagance.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Has this side condemned the real economy of the Democratic party, or only its pretense to economy?

Mr. RANDALL. Real economy means reducing the expenses; and that is what the Democratic party has done.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman think anybody condemns real economy? Is not what we have condemned that talk of economy which does not mean it?

Mr. BLAND. The side of the House of the gentleman from Maine condemned the Democratic party of that time for attempting to destroy the Government by insufficient appropriations. That has been what you have always complained of.

Mr. MILLIKEN. We have contended that the Democratic party has endeavored to destroy the Government by other means than by withholding appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh! I am not on that subject. What I want to say is this: The Republican party at that time in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses resisted every sort of economy that was suggested, and charged the Democratic party with cheese-paring, and the like. Yet the people have approved of that policy. I am sorry to say the appropriations have not been as much reduced as I would have desired to have them reduced. But they have always been dealt with by the Committee on Appropriations with intelligence and judgment, in my opinion. And when this House had its celebrated conflict with the Senate as to reductions the economy of this side of the House was made apparent. I have no doubt the House regrets to hear these constant allusions, and the constant necessity of these explanations in defense of those Congresses.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not think anybody in this country belonging to either party—for politics do not change men's natures—desire to have extravagance in appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I do say this: that the Republican party en masse resisted the economies of that day.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to say to the gentleman if he will go back and look over the financial policy of the Government under Republican administration for twenty-five years he will in his calm judgment approve it.

Mr. RANDALL. I repeat, a Republican Secretary of the Treasury stated that the reductions of the Forty-fourth Congress might have been made ten millions more.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the Democratic party has done anything good, I would be the last man to rob them of their laurels.

Mr. RANDALL. I think all men have good in them.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to recall the attention of the committee to the pending bill. I regret that political questions have been injected into this debate at the expense, perhaps, of these colored men who in the Forty-fifth Congress, upon claims coming over from the Forty-second, had been then adjudicated as entitled to payment for some services which they had insisted on rendering to Congress. At that time the House in deference to the wishes of the Republicans, among them General Garfield and Mr. BLAIR, now Senator, took up the appeals of these poor colored men who had rendered services at the Capitol—in deference to the wishes of that side of the House we allowed them to be paid for services rendered irregularly and without warrant of law. And because we did that at a price satisfactory to them, and because they now want to be paid a higher price, my colleague [Mr. CANNON] insists we are now setting aside the economies we practiced in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses. That argument does not apply in this case. We granted it then at the instance of Republicans, who thought we should pay these persons whom they had had in employment and who still remained about the building rendering some services. They were, therefore, put on the roll at $1 and $1.50 per day, and they accepted that amount as satisfactory, and with that the account closed. But they came forward again and ask now to be paid a higher rate.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say just one word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois. He says these were Republican employés. Does not my friend remember that the Democratic majority ran up to I think over sixty, or between fifty and sixty, in that Congress? You organized all the committees. You controlled the Committee on Accounts. That committee unanimously made the report referred to by the gentleman from Illinois. These people were employed about the business of the House and received this pay which you say now is inadequate; and now in the Forty-ninth Congress the Democratic House, through my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], the chairman of the Committee on Claims, comes in with this report and proposes to do the tardy justice to these people of paying them what they ought to have been paid eight years ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman misunderstands the fact. I said this was reported when the chairman of the committee was absent and that I thought this bill ought not to pass. The parties had received what was considered a proper rate for their services, and ought to be satisfied with it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, when the attention of the House is called to the facts—not for the purpose of defeating this bill, because I have no desire to defeat it after the report of the committee, from which it appears that the compensation these men received as employés of a former Democratic House was really insufficient—when the attention of this

Democratic House is called to the facts, and when my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Claims, is brought face to face with the facts in the case, he gets up and, with that extraordinary power of his, greater than that which belongs to any other man upon this floor, he proceeds like a cuttle-fish to muddy the water and then to swim away. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The waters were muddied by my colleague from Illinois, and I was trying to clear them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly the course which the debate on this bill has taken, and I will say to the committee that I would not have asked its indulgence if I had supposed that the time would have been occupied as it has been. It appears that these men received a dollar a day. The Committee on Claims reported that they were entitled to $2 a day. I knew nothing myself as to the facts, but the committee had made its report, and I took the precaution to ask my colleague, the chairman of the committee [Mr. SPRINGER], before I stated that the report of the committee was unanimous, whether such was not the fact, and I understood him to say that it was, or that he supposed it was.

Mr. SPRINGER. There was no adverse report.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. It was upon that information that I made the statement I did make. I believed myself that the amount allowed these men was inadequate, and inasmuch as the Committee on Claims had reported in favor of the passage of this bill, I, in behalf of the persons concerned, asked unanimous consent to take the bill up out of its order, and I hope now that nothing that has been said here for political effect either on the one side or the other will really affect the merits of the bill and that it will now be permitted to pass.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, there are some of us here who were members of the Forty-fourth Congress, and when I hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and other gentlemen upon that side taunting the Democratic party upon the subject of economy, I am reminded of the scenes in that Congress which I happened to witness. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and when that House—the first Democratic House that had assembled here since the war—undertook to institute some economy in the appropriations for the support of this Government, and when, in a long contest with the Republican Senate, extending far into the dog days of August, that House did reduce the appropriations to the tune of $30,000,000, the Republicans, standing by their leaders on the other side of the House, declared that the Democratic party were undertaking to starve the Government to death, to destroy it in that way, and went on the hustings throughout the country denouncing the Democratic party for its economy and its efforts to "starve" out the Government.

Tell me they did not complain of economy! When the Forty-fifth Congress met, a Democratic Congress also, it continued these reductions, or at least there was no increase in the appropriations, and so in the Forty-sixth Congress, until at last the Republicans themselves began to see that after all the Government was not being starved and that it was able to get along with these reduced appropriations. And yet, sir, we are expected to sit silent here under the taunts which are now flung at the Democratic party about "economy" and the reduction of expenses. Whenever such taunts are indulged in I think it is well enough to go back a few years, and remind gentlemen upon the other side of their speeches and their conduct upon this subject at that time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I was not here in the Forty-fourth nor the Forty-fifth Congress, the economical spirit of which has been the subject of the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], but, sir, I am here now and am still fully imbued with the spirit of economy [laughter], and before this vote is taken I want the committee to understand the proposition on which we are about to vote, and I desire to give my reasons for the vote I will cast. The record read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] discloses this sort of a case.

During the vacation of the Forty-fifth Congress the proposed beneficiaries of this bill whose names were not borne on the rolls of the House and for whose employment there was no authority of law insisted, doubtless out of a spirit of pure patriotism or from force of long habit [laughter] on serving the Government here. They seem, some of them at least, to have been serving about the House for years, and, strange to say, like most other Government employés, were reluctant to quit. They seem to have performed some vague sort of service, just what we are not informed, but it was no doubt very laborious and onerous, performed doubtless of their own volition, as there was no authority of law for their employment.

It seems, then, Mr. Chairman, that certain benevolent and humane gentlemen, members of the Congress at the time, who knew of the value of the patriotic labors performed by these men, passed a bill and fixed the compensation to be paid them, which was no doubt satisfactory to them at the time, and was accepted by them in full satisfaction for their services. And now this bill proposes to go back and readjust those claims, and pay them double what was adjudged by the House, for which the services were performed, to be reasonable and just. It is true, sir, that the money involved here is not much in dollars and cents as compared with amounts in most bills passing this House, but, sir, there are questions of policy and precedent involved that I am not willing to permit to pass without challenge.

Sir, is it wise or statesmanlike for this House to sit here and fritter away its time in endeavoring to go back and hunt out and give additional compensation to some person who has served the Government in some capacity at some time since its foundation, who, in the estimation of some philanthropic and liberal-minded man (I mean liberal-minded with Government money), did not get all he thinks he ought to have had, though it was doubtless much more than the employés of private interests similarly employed at the time got and what the party was anxious at the time to accept? In the language of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], is this what you call attending to the public business?

Mr. Chairman, if there is any one disposition that has developed itself over and above all other traits of the American citizen it is a willingness to serve the Government. [Laughter.] Sir, this willingness on the part of the people to accept Government employment at the compensation already fixed is so unanimous and universal as to have banished all fears that republican institutions would ever fail here for the want of men to hold the offices. [Laughter.] Sir, laborers are striking all over the country, but I hear of no threatened strike on the part of the employés of the Government. [Laughter.] And yet one would think they were about to strike, for scarcely a day passes but that some proposition is made on this floor to better their condition at the expense of the toiling masses of the country, by giving them more pay and less work, shorter time to work in and longer furloughs or leaves of absence with pay going on; and reference is often made to them as the poorly paid and overworked Government employés.

Mr. Chairman, if I have been impressed with one thing more than another since I came to Washington it has been the vast difference in condition between the vast mass of the people whom we came here to represent and their rulers and servants in the public service about Washington, so far as the salaries they receive and spend and the comforts and luxuries with which they are surrounded are concerned. Sir, in the midst of all this splendor and show and extravagance do not let us forget those who have to foot the bills and who sent us here to represent them.

When their crops fail or prices fail or disasters overtake them, as they have thousands of honest and hardworking men and women in my country, until they can scarcely provide food and clothing for themselves and their families, there is no one to readjust their claims and double their compensation or give them back pay.

Sir, there is not one of us on this floor who could not from among our own constituents fill all the vacancies that will occur within the next two years in the Government service with people who would be glad to take the places without an increase of salary.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If we could get the chance.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Now, sir, gentlemen may say what they please about the action of past Congresses, but for myself I am more interested in correcting the abuses of the present than I am about fixing responsibility for the past. If the Forth-fifth Congress was economical let us imitate its example, and not attempt to squander in profligate extravagance what they saved by their economy. I say to gentlemen on this floor I do not care to what political party you belong; those of you who are willing to do what you can to show to the people that the Forty-ninth Congress is anxious to give the country an economical administration, and to eradicate extravagance in all of its forms, will have my cordial co-operation in all such endeavors. Then leave these parties where the Congress they served left them, and do not set a precedent by which a thousand like bills will be invited from persons who come to realize years after the services are performed that they worked for the Government too cheap. Sir, I desire, in the name of an overtaxed constituency, to enter my protest against any and all such legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 68, noes 59.

Mr. COWLES. No quorum.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The report in this case was made by a gentleman on the other side, a Representative from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY], who is not present to-day. He had no expectation that the bill would be called up at this time; and if there is to be any controversy, if the point of no quorum is to be raised, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over until he appears.

Mr. EDEN. Let us have tellers. I think this bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. COWLES. I insist on the point that no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, and Mr. COWLES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 47.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

JOHN ELLIS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] makes the motion that the committee rise I wish to ask a special favor of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up at this time a very small bill for the benefit of a colored employé of the House, the case being of the same class as that just acted on, except that in this instance no payment at all was made. I am satisfied there has been continuous injustice in not making this payment. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3908) for the relief of John Ellis.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John Ellis the sum of $210, in full for services rendered as messenger to the Forty-fifth Congress from October 15, 1877, to February 1, 1878.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report in this case is very brief, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. NEAL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3908) for the relief of John Ellis, submit the following report:

Bills seeking the same object as the present bill were favorably reported by the Committee on Claims of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses. The Committee on Claims in the Forty-seventh Congress made the following report, which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the present bill:

"That John Ellis, by the appointment of the Doorkeeper, acted as messenger to the House and its committees, in the Forty-fifth Congress, for the period of three months and a half, from October 15, 1877, to the 1st day of February, 1878, for which he has received no pay, because, for some reason unknown to your committee, his name was not put upon the proper rolls. Your committee, therefore, report a bill herewith, and recommend its passage."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX. I do not understand why the name of this man was not borne on the roll if he was actually in the employ of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say to my friend from North Carolina that for many years Mr. Ellis has been claiming that this money was due him. I brought the subject to the attention of the Forty-seventh Congress, and a report was made in his favor by the Committee on Claims and again in the Forty-eighth Congress. How it happened that he was employed without his name being on the roll I am not able to say; but it occurred in regard to these other four men just as it did in regard to him. The only trouble was that this claim was not adjusted at the same time the other four claims were adjusted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana object?

Mr. KING. Before unanimous consent is given I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana why this measure has not been brought here before. Several Congresses have elapsed since the time when these services are claimed to have been rendered.

Mr. HOLMAN. The claim has been brought in time and again. This is the third report made in its favor.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be taken up for consideration. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on ordering the bill to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. CANNON. I hope this bill will pass. It is proper and fitting that it should. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] approves and blesses it. It is for services rendered in the Forty-fifth Congress, a Democratic Congress, memorable in the annals of this country. It is peculiarly appropriate that my friend from Indiana should now come in to do this tardy justice to a man who served that Congress for nothing under their scant appropriations, because this very cutting off of the appropriation for this employé and a few others furnished the gentleman from Indiana the campaign thunder which re-elected him to Congress. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

JOHN E. WHITE.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] agrees to withhold for a moment the motion that the committee rise. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5175) extending the provisions and benefits of the pre-emption laws to John E. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions and benefits of the pre-emption law be extended and granted to John E. White, of Wilson County, Kansas, so as to permit him to pre-empt and purchase of the proper land office, and upon the conditions applicable to other lands in the same community, the north half of the northeast quarter and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section numbered 20, township numbered 27 south, of range numbered 16 east of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Kansas, notwithstanding his previous filing on a different tract of land.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands to strike out the word "of," in line 5, after the word "purchase," and insert the word "at," was read.

Mr. PERKINS. The Committee on Public Lands have unanimously reported in favor of this bill, and I have the report here; but I can briefly state that the reason that this man can not pre-empt the land upon which he has his home to-day is that formerly he filed upon 80 acres of land, after which he was taken sick and was prostrated a number of weeks. During the time of his sickness and prostration others came in and filed upon those 80 acres, and instituted a contest against him. Not having the money to prosecute that contest he abandoned it, and located upon the tract which he now occupies; but in consequence of his former filing the Land Office holds that he is now precluded from the benefits of the pre-emption act. This bill simply gives him the right to pre-empt without regard to his former filing.

Several MEMBERS. "All right."

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Public Lands was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

CHANGE OF RANK ON RETIRED-LIST.

The SPEAKER. The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar is a bill (H. R. 37) to change the rank of an officer on the retired-list of the Army.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the bill upon which a yea-and-nay vote has been demanded. The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BRAGG, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. WHEELER, both now absent, demanded a yea-and-nay vote. The Committee of the Whole reported adversely on the bill. There is some dispute about it.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been demanded, but not ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to select, from among the colonels now on the retired-list of the Army of the United States, one person who has served in the late civil war as chief of artillery of one of the principal armies of the United States, and to place him on said retired-list with the rank and pay of major-general from the date of his retirement: Provided, That the officer so selected has been borne on the active-list of the Army for more than forty years as a commissioned officer of artillery: And provided further, That he held at the date of his retirement the brevet rank of major-general, conferred by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for distinguished services in said war.

Mr. SPRINGER. I made a statement which may be misunderstood by the House. The bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs and put on the Private Calendar. When the bill was up to be considered by the Committee of the Whole tellers were ordered. A quorum failed to vote. The gentleman having charge of the bill submitted to an adverse report for the purpose of getting it into the House, the tellers having reported a majority voting against the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I want the yeas and nays on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Not on the third reading and engrossment of the bill?

Mr. PRICE. No; but on the passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 111, not voting 135; as follows:

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. WAKEFIELD.
Mr. JONES, of Texas, with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. MCADOO with Mr. LOUTTIT.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. BUTTERWORTH, Mr. BAYNE, and Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, to extend their remarks, made to-day, in the RECORD.

EUNICE E. CLARK.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the committee of conference on House bill No. 6429, granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate agree to amend the Senate amendment by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting "twelve;" so that the Senate amendment will read: "At the rate of $12 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws."

And that the House recede from its disagreement, and agree to the Senate amendment as amended.

WM. H. NEECE,
JOHN S. PINDAR,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. W. BLAIR,
A. H. COLQUITT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The committee submit the following statement to accompany the report:

The effect of this report, if adopted, is to reduce the Senate amendment from $20 per month to $12. The husband of this claimant was a private soldier, and this report puts her on the pension-roll at the same rate as soldiers' widows of the same rank.

WM. H. NEECE,
JOHN S. PINDAR,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. NEECE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

M'MINNVILLE AND MANCHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5194) directing the Quartermaster-General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a yea-and-nay vote to be taken on that bill in the House, and as there are several other bills upon the Calendar, upon the passage of which there will be, I think, no objection, and which can not be disposed of to-day if a yea-and-nay vote is ordered on this bill, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. COWLES. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will mention in particular that there is a bill for the relief of John S. Kendrick, which is to be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from North Carolina has objected to the postponing the unfinished business.

The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the merits of this bill. It has been already discussed in Committee of the Whole on two separate occasions, and I do not desire now, as I have intimated, to extend that debate. I want to say simply that by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-eighth Congress this bill was unanimously reported.

By the Committee on War Claims of the present House it has been again favorably reported. When it was first considered and discussed in Committee of the Whole, and the question being taken upon laying it aside the committee found itself without a quorum. The vote upon the bill at that time, as I now recollect it, was 70 in favor of the passage of the bill and 55 against it.

When it was again called up——

Mr. EDEN. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is. The previous question has not been ordered upon the bill. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to an hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When it was again called up and the vote was taken after debate, I think, as I now remember, the vote was about 75 to 65.

I have said that I did not care to discuss the question upon its merits any further. I want to yield, however, a few minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who I understand desires to submit some remarks in the House upon the bill. I do not know that I am correct, but if I am I shall yield to the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Five minutes, or so much time as the gentleman may desire—longer if he wishes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have always felt some interest in the claims arising from the war, because I believe that while justice ought to be done in all proper cases, there would be very grave danger in undertaking to pay what might properly be called the losses of the war. I believe that those losses which arose in the prosecution of the war directly ought to rest where they fell and that we ought not to disturb them in any manner.

Since this matter was first brought up for debate in the committee it occurred to me, on hearing a part of the discussion that then took place, that this was one of those cases which ought to be resisted. I therefore examined the report, and became satisfied that if the report was true I was mistaken in that regard; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], in some of his remarks upon the floor, induced me to think that I ought to investigate the record in order that I might at least be consistent in the principles which I have always supported. I found upon an examination of the record that it was right and just for me to say, on investigation of the documents, that in my judgment this is not one of the cases which were the direct results of damage ensuing from the prosecution of the war. Wherever the armies of the United States tore up a railroad or took possession of it in the enemy's country, whatever loss happened is like a loss occurring from a cyclone, not to be investigated, not paid for by the government of either belligerent which was successful; but in 1864 I find, while war was not prevalent in the country where this railroad was situated, the United States, under a statute made for that purpose, took possession of this road, and the United States, having taken possession of it, took away the iron and sold it to another corporation and received pay for it.

The Quartermaster's Department investigated that subject by a commissioner, and that commissioner reported the price which this House is to-day asked to pay. Now, the only reason why this is not a strictly legal determination is because the act of 1862, under which the railroad must have been taken, if it was taken by law, requires that the appointment of a commissioner to assess damages shall be made by the President. It was made by the Quartermaster's Department and the documents show it, and show also the figures at which this iron was estimated. The next question is how did the railroad company, which to-day asks that this shall be allowed on their account—how did they get possession of the road? The answer is to be found in a contract which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has just shown me—the original document—which contains a full and complete transfer of the right of the railroad whose iron the United States have taken. That completes the circuit. That shows the damage, the amount of damage, the legality of its payment, and the party to whom it ought to be paid. For my part I can see nothing wanting to make it a proper and suitable claim against the Government.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How does the estimate of the commissioner compare with the amount claimed?

Mr. REED, of Maine. It compares exactly. It is the same amount with this exception, that the commissioner estimated for damaged bridges, and such matters, which the committee and this bill do not propose to pay.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Those are expressly stricken out?

Mr. REED, of Maine. They are expressly stricken out. The bill is confined solely to railroad iron taken by the Government of the United States and sold by it, the proceeds of which the United States has received.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You have examined this act of 1862. Will you explain something with regard to its provisions? I understand it was an act not for war purposes, but for getting possession of railroads.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It was for getting possession of railroads not in the enemy's territory.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. What was the object of the act?

Mr. REED, of Maine. To enable the authorities of the United States to take railroads near the scene of conflict. Of course army operations extended away back to the base, and it was necessary to have the power of taking railroads along the border. Am I right in that statement?

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is exactly correct.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. When taken possession of was the railroad being used by the confederate army?

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, sir; the confederate army had not been there for a long time. That is a point which is not disputed.

I do not know that I need add anything further, but I thought I should say this much because, having taken a decided stand on these claims, I deemed it proper to state this in order to justify my judgment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hold in my hand the original contract referred to by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield a portion of the time to this side?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to debate the question. I hold in my hand the original contract entered into between the Nashville and Chattanooga, and the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Companies. The gentleman from Maine has stated it correctly. It transfers all the rights of the Manchester road to the Nashville and Chattanooga road.

I move the previous question.

Mr HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not make a speech, then yield to the gentleman from Maine for a speech on the same side, and then move the previous question so as to cut off debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not debated the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; you have debated the question, and now you call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be voted down.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 62.

Mr. BYNUM. No quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it will obviate any trouble I will concede five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BYNUM, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The only difficulty about discussion arises from the fact that 5 o'clock is so near. If it is considered desirable that gentlemen on the other side should talk upon this question we can by unanimous consent extend the sitting a quarter of an hour. I think there is no desire to cut off debate. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 20.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is a motion to take a recess until half-past seven in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is it in order to take a recess before 5 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House requires an adjournment at 5 o'clock, but the House has always the power to take a recess or to adjourn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I withdraw the motion for a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew it.

The motion for a recess was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House at half past 7 p. m. resumed its session.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills under the special order for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that members present may be allowed to call up such bills as they desire. I think it is only just to those who attend these Friday evening sessions that they should have that preference, and in my judgment after the bills so called up are disposed of we ought to stop.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. MARIA WALKER.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up House bill No. 6311, granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Maria Walker, widow of John H. Walker, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, arrears of pension from the 4th of March, 1860, the date at which she was dropped from the pension-roll; and that the said Maria Walker be, and is hereby, restored to her rights as a pensioner of the Revolutionary war.

The Committee on Pensions recommend an amendment striking out all of the bill after the word "sixty," in line 7, and inserting the words "to March 9, 1878, at the rate of $8 per month."

Mr. MILLS. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman. I would like to hear the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. WOLFORD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker, submit the following report:

Mrs. Maria Walker is the widow of John H. Walker, who was a private soldier in Captain Henry's company, Colonel Alexander's regiment, Georgia militia, in the war for American independence. Mrs. Walker became his wife on March 14, 1815. Her husband died in 1836, and she has never remarried. Under the act of February 3, 1853, which provided for the pensioning of the widows of Revolutionary soldiers who were married after the year 1800, she was placed on the pension-roll from the date of that act, and continued to draw a pension up to March 4, 1860, at which time she was dropped from the rolls. She was restored to the rolls under the act of March 9, 1878, at the rate of $8 per month.

Mrs. Walker has made several applications to the Pension Office to be allowed payment of her pension for the time during which she was suspended from the rolls, but is and has been unable to comply with the requirement of that office as to proof of loyalty to the United States during the period of the late civil war, as, being a native and always a resident of the South, she naturally sympathized with her people, to whom only, at her then advanced age, could she look for counsel and relief.

Mrs. Walker is now over ninety years of age, is in straitened circumstances, and largely dependent upon relatives and friends for a home and support, her only income being the $8 per month she now receives since she was restored to the rolls.

Mrs. Walker is one of the very few, perhaps the only widow of a soldier of the Revolutionary war now living; and in view of the facts it would seem eminently proper for the American Congress to pay to this old lady the small sum which the bill will allow, and thereby place her for the remainder of her days, which must be very short at best, beyond the reach of want.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out all after the word "sixty," in line 7 of the bill, and insert the words "to March 9, 1878, at the rate of $8 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill, as amended, will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I know of no instance where we have voted arrears to these pensioners, and I know of many cases where the parties were really suffering and where arrears should have been granted if we are to depart from the rule at all. I do not know why we should make an exception in this instance.

Mr. MILLS. I did not hear distinctly the remark of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PRICE. I say that this is in direct conflict with the rule that has guided us here in dealing with these cases.

Mr. MILLS. This lady had been receiving a pension for a number of years.

Mr. PRICE. I know it, and I would give her a pension again.

Mr. MILLS. She has had her pension restored since 1878. This is simply to give it to her from 1860 to 1878, the period during which it was suspended.

Mr. PRICE. I know; but why should that be done in this case, when there are so many other cases where we refuse to do it?

Mr. MILLS. So many other Revolutionary pensioners, the widows of Revolutionary soldiers?

Mr. PRICE. No; but so many widows of soldiers who served you and me and the country.

Mr. MILLS. Do you know of any other case just like this?

Mr. PRICE. Oh, no. I presume there are no two cases on the pension rolls entirely alike.

Mr. OSBORNE. This lady was entitled to the pension all these years.

Mr. PRICE. The constituted authorities decided otherwise.

Mr. MILLS. She was simply dropped from the roll. She was living in the South, within the fire-circle at that time, and, I suppose, without knowing anything about her, or knowing whether she was loyal or disloyal, they simply dropped her from the roll; and then in 1878, I presume, upon proper proofs they restored her, and she has been drawing her pension again ever since that time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand that this case was dropped from the roll in 1860?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; in 1860.

Mr. DOCKERY. There were many cases of that kind.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, let me inquire whether this report is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill comes from the Committee on Pensions. As to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I will say that in cases similar to this that have come before that committee where parties were improperly dropped from the roll we have recommended restoring them and placing them back as they were before they were dropped. I remember one case last winter where a man got $2,800 arrears. If this lady was entitled to be restored to the pension-roll at all she is entitled to receive a pension for all the time that she was dropped from the roll, and the Pension Office by restoring her admit that they did wrong in dropping her. I think she ought to receive the arrears.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I will not take up the time of the committee in arguing the question, but will content myself by voting against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLARK BOON.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 7931, increasing the pension of Clark Boon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Clark Boon, late a member of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to the sum of $24 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment striking out in the last line of the bill the words "twenty-four dollars per month" and inserting "twelve dollars per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY HOWARD FARQUHAR.

Mr. MAYBURY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 1201 for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Howard Farquhar, widow of the late Maj. and Bvt. Lieut. Col. Francis V. Farquhar, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and daughter of the late Maj. Gen. Alpheus S. Williams, United States volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out, in line 9 of the bill, the word "fifty" and inserting the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. There is objection, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAYBURY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

LYDIA HADLOCK.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up House bill 1142, granting a pension to Lydia Hadlock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of Congress approved March 9, 1878 (20 Statutes at Large, page 27), the name of Lydia Hadlock, of Lexington, Mass., widow of Colburn Hadlock, who served three months in the war of 1812.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GERIAH COLLINS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call up the bill (S. 891) granting a pension to Geriah Collins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted &c, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Geriah Collins, formerly of Company D, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DUNCAN FORBES.

Mr. ROWELL. I call up the bill (H. R. 8336) granting an increase of pension to Duncan Forbes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow Duncan Forbes, late a private in Company F, Sixteenth United States Infantry, a pension on account of wound of right breast, in addition to that now received by him for wound of right ankle.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

REBECCA ROBERTS.

Mr. RIGGS. I call up the bill (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Rebecca Roberts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Rebecca Roberts, widow of Clark Roberts, who was lately surgeon of the One hundred and first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the rate provided by the pension laws for widows of surgeons in volunteer regiments.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC FOSSETT.

Mr. PETERS. I call up the bill (H. R. 5261) granting a pension to Isaac Fossett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Isaac Fossett, late a private in Company K, First Minnesota Cavalry, on the pension-roll, and pay him a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, from the date of the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA M'ILWAIN.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 7162) granting a pension to Martha McIlwain.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha McIlwain, widow of Robert J. McIlwain, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN SMITH.

Mr. BURROWS. I call up the bill (H. R. 4552) for the relief of Susan Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan Smith, widow of ——, late first lieutenant of Company I, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment —— Infantry.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "of," in line 6, insert "Michael Smith," and after the word "regiment," in line 7, insert the word "Pennsylvania."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN E. DOGGETT.

Mr. MATSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 8372) granting a pension to John E. Doggett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of John E. Doggett, son of George R. Doggett, late a private in Company L, Eighth Indiana Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "cavalry," in line 6, insert "as a dependent child of said soldier, and pay him a pension of $12 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA A. PROBERT.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the bill (H. R. 7703) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Anna A. Probert, widow of George C. Probert, late a first lieutenant in the Third Ohio Cavalry, and to pay her a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN CORCORAN.

Mr. ELLSBERRY. I call up the bill (H. R. 1815) granting a pension to Ellen Corcoran.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Ellen Corcoran, sister of Eugene Corcoran, late chaplain of the Fiftieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend this bill by striking out the clause which fixes the rate of pension.

Mr. ELLSBERRY. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 1815 having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Eugene P. Corcoran was chaplain of the Sixty-first Ohio Infantry Regiment and served faithfully from December 4, 1861, to January 25, 1863. When he entered said service he was sound, healthy, and vigorous. In the winter of 1862-'63 he was captured, and subjected to exposure and severe weather without proper clothing or food, and thereby contracted disease of throat and lungs, which resulted in his death after a continuous illness of three years. He returned from the Army a physical wreck, and never afterward grew better.

He was ordained a priest of the Catholic Church about March or April, 1856, at the city of Cincinnati, Ohio.

By the well-known discipline of that church he was not, of course, permitted to marry, and by the equally well-known care exercised by the ecclesiastical authorities of that church to prevent scandals and immoral conduct among its clergy, it became necessary to provide for him a housekeeper whose relations to him would be such as to preclude any and all fears on that head. The applicant, Ellen Corcoran, was his sister. In 1856 this brother and sister entered into an agreement, with the consent of their parents, and at the earnest request of the late Archbishop Purcell, who was Chaplain Corcoran's ecclesiastical superior. By the terms of this agreement the sister was to take entire charge of all the domestic affairs of the brother during their mutual lives, and to abandon all other vocations and pursuits, to live a life of celibacy, and devote herself wholly and solely to the service of her brother as his housekeeper. In return he was to maintain her, and, if she survived him, to leave her such property as he might own at his death.

This agreement was carried out to the letter. The sister refused many advantageous offers of marriage, and other offers to change her condition, and nursed and cared for her brother during his long illness as devotedly as any wife could have done, and at serious injury to her health, as well as great expense to herself. He made her his sole legatee by will, but left no property. It was all consumed, and mostly, too, by his long illness. Since his death she has remained single, and has had no means of support except her own labor. She is now in advanced years and feeble health.

This brave soldier gave his life to his native country, and performed services as necessary in the eyes of those who received them as were the services of the greatest heroes and commanders of that unhappy war; and his services contributed as much to that perfect discipline, undaunted courage, and consequent victory as any other element of success, the fruits of which are being now enjoyed by a united people. Were the applicant for a nation's gratitude and bounty the wife of such a man, no one would question her right to demand what she now asks as a favor owing to the peculiar circumstances surrounding the matter. It is unique in its facts, and it is doubtful if another such case can be found in the whole United States.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PRICE'S amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "twenty," and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. MATSON. That would make the bill inoperative. There is no law providing a pension for a dependent sister of a soldier over sixteen years of age, and this one is over that age. To amend the bill so as to provide for a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws would be in effect to make it inoperative. To make it operative a rate must be fixed.

This man was a chaplain; and the bill as reported puts this dependent sister upon the pension-roll at the same rate as the widow of a chaplain, which is $20 a month. If the bill is to be passed the rate ought to remain as it is.

Mr. PRICE. I had no idea of destroying the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. The rate provided in the bill is the same as that allowed the widow of a chaplain.

Mr. PRICE. I have learned something, and as I had no intention of destroying the bill I will withdraw my amendment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

H. R. DUKE.

Mr. PRICE. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1098) granting a pension to H. R. Duke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of H. R. Duke, late a member of Company K, Seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

K. G. BILLINGS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2242) restoring to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of K. G. Billings, of Lancaster County, South Carolina, formerly a soldier in the Mexican war, the pension to begin at and run from the date of the last payment to the said K. G. Billings.

The amendment of the committee strikes out the following words:

The pension to begin at and run from the date of the last payment to the said K. G. Billings.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will not be adopted, as it deprives this old gentleman of the back pension he is entitled to for the time he was dropped from the pension-roll. If the amendment be adopted he will be restored to the pension-roll from this date only, while if the amendment be rejected his pension will date back to the time when he was dropped. Unless some good reason is shown why he should be deprived of his back pension I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY. In these cases I believe it is the uniform practice to apply such a restriction.

Mr. MATSON. If this man has been wrongfully dropped from the pension-roll he ought to be restored as others have been. I do not understand it is the practice to restore them from and after the passage of the act, but on the contrary that where a man is restored to the pension-roll he is restored without limitation.

The proposition to restore to the pension-roll proceeds upon the idea the man has been wrongfully dropped, and justice is to be done to him. It is not the granting of a pension de novo, but doing justice where wrong has been committed. I do not understand this bill, therefore, without the amendment contravenes the well-established practice of the House.

Mr. BYNUM. What was the cause of his being dropped from the pension-roll?

Mr. MATSON. That is what I would like to know; and I therefore call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LANDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Kennedy G. Billings, asking to be restored to the pension-rolls, and for back pension, submit the following report:

The committee, after examination, find that at the outbreak of the war with Mexico Kennedy G. Billings enlisted as a lieutenant in Captain Canty's company of the regiment of South Carolina Volunteers, and served with distinction during the entire war, and, as is shown by the affidavit of T. J. Mackey, filed in this case, he fought with great bravery, doing honor to himself and his country, and at the time when his company became reduced, by casualties in battle, from one hundred and fifteen to but nine or ten men fit for duty, he voluntarily entered the ranks with a musket and fought at the battles of Chapultepec and at the Garita de Belen in the capacity of a private soldier.

That on the 10th day of January, 1854, a pension was granted said Billings, for services rendered his country in said war, at the rate of $17 per month, payable semi-annually on the 4th of March and the 4th of September, at the Charleston agency. That the pension so granted him was paid regularly up to the 4th day of September, 1860, when, without assigning any reason, the agent declined to pay him anything more, and he has received no payment on account of said pension since said last-mentioned date.

Your committee are of the opinion that said Billings should be restored to the pension-rolls at the rate of $17 per month, and to that end report the accompanying bill, with recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the words "Mexican war," in the seventh line.

Mr. BYNUM. I should like to hear some explanation from the gentleman who made the report why this man was dropped from the pension-roll?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I was informed by the gentleman who made the report he had sent to the Pension Office for the papers connected with the case, and I presume if any reason had been given why this old gentleman was dropped it would have been reported to the House. But so far as the committee is concerned they seemed to have obtained no reason why he was dropped.

Mr. STEELE. Do you know this man yourself?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do.

Mr. STEELE. Was he loyal during the war?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think not.

Mr. ROWELL. If he was in the confederate army he certainly should not be paid during that time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The whole matter is in the report, and it is for the House to decide upon the amendment submitted.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. It seems to me there ought to be some reason given why this man was dropped from the pension-roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment striking out that part of the bill has been agreed to, so that it now restores him to the pension-roll from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. That is all right, but it is not sufficient.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The report does not show why he was dropped from the pension-roll, and surely we can not cast reflection upon the Pension Office which examined this case as it has all others, and it has not been shown so far that the Pension Office was mistaken. Until that is shown we certainly should not give this man back pension. The bill, I believe, should be recommitted, or at least it should not pass until we know why he was dropped. I move its recommittal to the Committee on Pensions for further consideration.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a question of order. This matter has been disposed of in the committee; and the motion of the gentleman is not proper in committee. It can only be made in the House.

Mr. PETTIBONE. This bill has not been disposed of. The motion I am aware can not be made in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the House was dividing upon the question of laying the bill aside at the time the gentleman addressed the Chair. The Chair had already taken the affirmative vote on the bill as amended, and at that stage the gentleman from Tennessee addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAYNE. The proper time to make the motion is when the bill comes up in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is within the province of any member to make the motion in the House when the bill is reached.

The Chair will again submit the motion on laying the bill aside.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CYRUS DUBBS.

Mr. BOUND. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7407) granting a pension to Cyrus Dubbs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cyrus Dubbs, the poor blind brother of Hiram N. Dubbs, late of Company F, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out line 5, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and insert "at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY F. BLAKE.

Mr. PINDAR. I ask to call up House bill No. 1520, granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Blake.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mary F. Blake, widow of the late Commodore Homer Crane Blake, United States Navy, from $30 to $50 per month, said increase to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BYNUM. I should like to have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Homer C. Blake, late commodore in the United States Navy, who died from disease contracted in the service, in the year 1880, after an active and efficient service to his country for forty years. His widow is in circumstances requiring aid and without means of adequate support. She is now receiving pension as such widow of $30 per month, and asks to have it increased to $50 per month, and that she be allowed an amount equal to that received by widows of other officers of the rank of commodore. The facts upon which she bases her claim are fully set forth in her petition and affidavits hereto attached and made part of this report, and are sufficient, in the opinion of your committee, to entitle claimant to the increase asked, and we recommend that the bill do pass.

Petition and affidavits are as follows:

Mr. BYNUM. I do not ask to have the petition accompanying the report read, but I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions if it has been usual to grant to the widows of officers of this grade such increased pensions.

Mr. MATSON. I will say to my colleague that it has been the practice, although I think it is a bad one, but nevertheless it has been the practice for many years. I have never favored this legislation, but it has been steadily carried on for ten years past, granting this increase of pension to the widows of general officers both of the Army and Navy.

The question was taken on laying the bill aside; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 8.

So (no further count being demanded) the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELIZABETH COLLINS.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I desire to call up House bill No. 7728, granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Collins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Collins, widow of William H. Collins, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. DELP.

Mr. NEECE. I call up the bill (H. R. 4460) to pension John W. Delp.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of John W. Delp, late of Company F, First Kansas Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was lad aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS A. ROWLEY.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I call up House bill 6250 to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act Thomas A. Rowley, late a brigadier-general of volunteers, shall be entitled to receive an increase of pension of $10 per month in addition to the allowance heretofore paid to him, the same to be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws:

Mr. WATSON. I would like to have the report read in this case.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) is as follows:

Thomas A. Rowley was colonel of the One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; promoted to be brigadier-general. He is now in receipt of $15 per month for injuries received at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., which disabilities are described as follows by the examining surgeons:

"There is a cicatrix one inch to the left of crest of occipital bone over inferior curved line. The cicatrix is tender, with considerable thickening of periosteum. He complains of pain radiating from cicatrix over left side of head. He states that seven pieces of bone have been removed and discharged from site of wound. He also states that since receipt of injury he has had frequent attacks of hemicrania. We think the present rating too low—disability one-half."

General Rowley's disabilities have very considerably increased since the above examination. He is now seventy-seven years of age, is partially paralyzed, and in indigent circumstances.

Your committee, considering the serious nature of the wound received in the battle, his helpless condition at present time, which is clearly shown, together with his extreme age and poverty, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will ask if this applicant has not his remedy before the Department for an increase of pension? And I ask this because I understand it has been the rule of this Committee on Invalid Pensions to report no bills here as long as there is a remedy in the Department. I have had some such rulings made against me, and want it to be carried out if it is to be the principle on which these bills are reported.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose this man can be rated higher than $15, which amount he is getting now by the Department; and, I presume, the rating is correct, according to the nature of the wound. But the committee undoubtedly favored the increase because of certain circumstances surrounding the case. This man was a worthy and distinguished officer in the Mexican war, and he also served with gallentry and distinction in the late war. He is an old man, seventy-six years of age and upward, and in reduced circumstances. He has been quite unfortunate in business matters, and for these reasons I presume the increase was made.

There is one portion of the bill which I think ought to be stricken from it, and that is the provision which makes it subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws. I therefore move to strike out in the sixth and seventh lines the words:

The same to be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

I do this because I think the increase from $15, which he is now receiving, to $25 per month with that incumbrance upon it would probably make some difficulty in interpreting the bill.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to quibble about an increase of $10 to a man who had been severely wounded, but the position the Committee on Invalid Pensions have uniformly taken on such questions has been correctly stated by my colleague, that is to refuse Congressional aid where the applicant has a perfect remedy in the Department. If this bill is to be taken upon the question purely of the man's disability he has a perfect remedy in the office, because if he was entirely disabled from the performance of manual labor and holding the rank of colonel or brigadier-general, he would be entitled to $30 a month. But the surgeons who have examined him fix the disability at one-half hard labor, and rated him accordingly at $15 per month; so that those who were competent to determine the character of the disability fix the rate at that amount. Congress, of course, if it thinks proper can with or without reason increase the pension ten or fifteen or any other sum of dollars per month; but the question is whether we can afford to increase a man's pension on our own motion, as against the examination of competent surgeons who have investigated the case and fixed the degree of the disability.

If we undertake that, we are undertaking to do a thing where we must necessarially do great injustice; because no one is as competent as the physicians who make a personal examination of the applicant. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] stated the rule correctly, and that was the reason why I asked for the reading of the report, because I was struck at once by the language of the bill, "to increase the pension $10 a month."

I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that the words in the bill "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" would not defeat the increase, because the language of the bill is absolute. The bill provides the pension shall be increased $10 a month, and after that I apprehend the construction would be that the pension would be subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BAYNE. If that is the interpretation of the language of the bill I would have no objection to have these words left in and would not press the amendment.

There are some considerations which make this case exceptional. General Rowley is a man well advanced in life; he is seventy-seven years of age, and he has been very unfortunate. He is in very poor circumstances. He is a man who fought all through the Mexican war. He went into the late war for the Union, and fought all through that war. He is certainly deserving of this consideration. He was a brave and gallant soldier, and is well liked by all his people around him at home; and they would all like to have this consideration extended to him.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not think if these words are left in he would only get the $15?

Mr. BAYNE. After the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] I think the proposition is absolute; the $10 would be added, and then in the event of his disability being increased he might be rated even higher than the $25 which he will get if the bill becomes law. I withdraw the amendment.

The bill was laide aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ARLANTA T. TAYLOR.

Mr. BYNUM. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Mrs. Arlanta T. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Arlanta T. Taylor, widow of John T. Taylor, who was a private in Company B, First Engineers Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. VAN ETTEN.

Mr. BAKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6170) granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of Mary A. Van Etten, widow of James F. Van Etten, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. ANNIE C. OWEN.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1850) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie C. Owen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, and subject to the limitations of the law, the name of Annie C. Owen, widow of Capt. Mortimer B. Owen, late of Company G, Fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA S. JOHNSON.

Mr. SAWYER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8078) for the relief of Lydia S. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lydia S. Johnson, of Yates, Orleans County, New York, and a nurse in the Army during the late civil war, and to pay her the sum of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY MARSH.

Mr. HAYNES. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 685) granting a pension to Mary Marsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Marsh, daughter of the late Charles Marsh, of Company A, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

After the word "pension-roll," in line 4, strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

After the word "volunteers," in line 7, insert the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 dollars per month."

Mr. DUNHAM. I should like to hear the report in that case read. This seems to be an exception to the general rule.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 685) granting a pension to Mary Marsh, have had the same under consideration, and report:

This is a bill for the relief of a soldier's orphaned daughter—one who, from her physical deformities, is totally incapacitated for self-support. The case is set forth as follows in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions:

"The claimant is the daughter of Charles T. Marsh, late a private in Company A, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers. The soldier presented his claim to the Pension Office and it was allowed. He soon after died, and his widow made application to the same office. Her application was rejected, on the ground that the disease of the bowels, from which the soldier and husband died, originated after discharge from the service. An examination of the evidence shows clearly to your committee that the said disease originated from the kick of a horse received by the soldier while in the line of duty. This disease is shown to be clearly traceable to and to have existed continuously from the time of the injury received in the service until his death.

"It is the popular impression that in cases of doubt it is well to give the soldier the benefit of the doubt. This is not, however, a case of reasonable doubt. No jury of his countrymen would hesitate for a moment upon the evidence in this case to find that the cause of death originated in the service, and to give to the widow of the soldier the benefit of the pension laws.

"The widow is now also dead, and the bill is for the relief of a deformed and helpless child."

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all from word "subject," in line 4, to word "laws," in line 5, inclusive; also, insert after word "volunteers," in line 7, the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EVELINE HUNT.

Mr. COWLES. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1539) granting a pension to Eveline Hunt, widow, and the minor children of Lewis Hunt, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Eveline Hunt, as the widow of Lewis Hunt, deceased, late of Company C, Seventy-sixth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and the minor children and heirs of the said Lewis Hunt, deceased.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 5, strike out the word "names" and insert "name:" after the word "militia," in line 8, strike out the words "and the minor children and heirs of the said Lewis Hunt, deceased."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

C. K. HUGHES.

Mr. OSBORNE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2144) granting a pension to C. K. Hughes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of C. K. Hughes, late major of the One hundred and forty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID M. RENNOE.

Mr. HALSELL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7914) to increase the pension of David M. Rennoe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of David M. Rennoe, late a private in Company H of the Twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension now received.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7, strike out "$40" and insert "$30."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCY G. DUTCHER.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call up the bill (H. R. 6430) granting a pension to Lucy G. Dutcher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucy G. Dutcher, widow of Nathaniel Dutcher, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACKSON STEWARD.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7979) granting a pension to Jackson Steward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jackson Steward, late a member of Companies C and E of the Sixth Kansas Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. D. HAWORTH.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairmain, I move to take up Senate bill No. 1253 granting a pension to J. D. Haworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. D. Haworth, late a member of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and who was transferred, on account of disability, to Company H, Twenty-first Veteran Reserve Corps.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM POWELL.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to take up Senate bill 1420, granting a pension to William Powell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitation of the pension laws, the name of William Powell, late a private in Company D, Sixth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. C. A. BAILEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I call up Senate bill 1830, granting a pension to Mrs. C. A. Bailey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. C. A. Bailey, widow of Albert Bailey, deceased, late a private in Company H, Forty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CECELIA C. M'KENNA.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to take up House bill 7509, granting a pension to Cecelia C. McKenna.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cecelia C. McKenna, mother of John H. McKenna, late a private in the United States Marine Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month from and after the passage of this act, the same to be in lieu of the pension now received by her.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, striking out, in line 8, before the word "dollars," the word "thirty-five" and inserting "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES L. MILLER.

Mr. HANBACK. Mr. Chairman, I call up House bill 8332, increasing the pension of James L. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James L. Miller, late of Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry, to $72 per month.

Mr. BYNUM. I think we had better have the report in that case read.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the report is very long, and if it will be satisfactory to the gentleman, I will ask my colleague [Mr. HANBACK] to make a statement of the case.

Mr. HANBACK. Mr. Chairman, I can state the case just as it is. This soldier, James L. Miller, lives in the town of Gaylord, in my State. I visited him there last November. He is totally helpless and has been for six years; he is paralyzed. He is now drawing $50 a month. He requires constant attendance, day and night. He has neuralgia and has to be relieved by the use of morphine; and I can state from personal observation that around his body there is a broad band of cauterized flesh where the injections of morphine have been made. It is the most pitiful sight I ever saw in my life, and the case is just as it is stated in the report and as I have stated it. I do not think the man has long to live; indeed, the wonder is that he has lived so long.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What family has he?

Mr. HANBACK. He has three or four children. He was a member of Company C, First Kentucky Cavalry.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is he the only sick member of his family?

Mr. HANBACK. Yes; but he is sick enough for the whole family. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The proposition now is to give him $72 a month?

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will allow me to make a suggestion, I will state that under the existing law a man who has lost both arms or both feet or both eyes receives $72 a month; but a man who is absolutely paralyzed and helpless, needing constant attendance, as seems to be the case here, can not get under the existing law a higher pension than $50 a month. Now this bill proposes to give this man the same pension that would be granted under the law to a man who had lost both arms or both feet or both eyes.

Mr. HANBACK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state also that I presented this case to the Commissioner of Pensions, and he said that he would be entirely willing, under the evidence before him, to allow this pension at the rate of $72 a month if he had authority under the law. There is no question at all about the justice of this bill, and I hope the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will not oppose it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, let it go.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. HUNTER.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to take up House bill 5324, granting a pension to John H. Hunter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John H. Hunter, late a private in Company B, One hundred and forty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIHU JONES.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up Senate bill 823, granting a pension to Capt. Elihu Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elihu Jones, late captain of Company G, Eighth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY SULLIVAN.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 308, granting a pension to Mary Sullivan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Sullivan, widow of Michael Sullivan, late a private in Company K, Ninety-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NIRA D. GWYNNE.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 1361, giving a pension to Nira D. Gwynne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Nira D. Gwynne, widow of the late N. M. L. Gwynne, a private in Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, and that she be allowed a pension of $50 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment by the Senate was read, as follows:

After the word "cavalry" strike out all to the end of the bill and insert the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month."

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendment be concurred in and that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

M. ROMAHN.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call up the bill (S. 1441) granting a pension to M. Romahn.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will yield to me I will move to take up these Senate bills in their order. There are about a dozen of them.

Mr. MATSON. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill called up by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of M. Romahn, late a private in Company K, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JANE CARR.

Mr. SPOONER. I call up the bill (S. 1431) granting a pension to Jane Carr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jane Carr, widow of Colwell Carr, late a private in Company F, Thirtieth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company E, Twentieth Regiment of the Veteran Reserve Corps, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1431) granting a pension to Jane Carr, having examined the same, concur in the Senate printed report hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The petitioner is the widow of Calwell Carr, late a private in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and who, during his lifetime, received a pension for disabilities incurred while in the service. The petitioner claims that his death, which occurred October 14, 1884, was the result of the disabilities for which he was pensioned.

The widow's claim for pension was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions for the reason that the mortality certificate, given by Donnel Hughes, M. D., of Philadelphia, attributed the cause of death to cancer of the stomach.

In a subsequent affidavit the same physician testifies as follows:

"Previous to making post-mortem examination affiant gave certificate of death, stating cause to be cancer in the stomach. First saw Calwell Carr about two weeks before his death; found him to be suffering from a severe abdominal inflammation of a chronic character. After death made an examination and found he had chronic inflammation of the peritoneum and enlarged and typical malarial liver. From a history of the case and from what was seen during life and from results of post-mortem examination, affiant believes all his ill health and early death were caused from exposure during his service in the Army."

In a subsequent affidavit he says:

"My opinion is that the man died from effects of peritonitis caused by the gunshot wound or from exposure at the time of the injury."

There is other medical testimony to the same effect.

Your committee report the bill favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. MOORE.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up the bill (S. 1509) granting a pension to William H. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Moore, late of Company F, Thirtieth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1509) granting a pension to William H. Moore, submit the following report:

Your committee adopt the report of the Senate committee, which is as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"That the claimant, William H. Moore, enlisted August 13, 1862, in Company F, Thirtieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and that he was discharged June 5, 1865. Made application for pension April 18, 1881, alleging in his declaration—

"'That on or about August 25, 1862, while in the United States service, and in the line of duty at Keokuk, Iowa, he contracted measles.'

"The claim was rejected by the Department on the ground that the "disabilities from which claimant is disabled do not result from the cause alleged, namely, measles, with the exception of nasal catarrh, which is susceptible of proof as having so resulted.'

"The claimant testifies—

"'That five years prior to his enlistment he followed the occupation of a farmer. That for three years after the war was a medical student, and has practiced medicine since. That at Camp Lincoln, Keokuk, Iowa, in 1862, was taken with measles, received a fall while convalescing from same, and while being removed from hospital to camp under the direction of Dr. Hughes (now dead), in which fall he received injuries to his back (lumbar region) from which he never recovered; that after the incurrence of said injury he was kept at headquarters as clerk. Was treated by regimental surgeon, whose whereabouts is unknown. After discharge was treated by Dr. Quigley (now dead); has since taken counsel, but has treated himself. No other disease. Claims that said injuries affect his spinal column; was treated at the medical college hospital, Keokuk, Iowa.'

"The soundness of the claimant prior to enlistment is clearly shown by the affidavits of a number of witnesses. Captain Woodson and Lieutenant Miller testify:

"'That claimant contracted measles about October, 1862, at Camp Lincoln, Keokuk, Iowa; that he was in the hospital about a month before his health would permit of his return to his company, and while being transferred received injuries to his back (lumbar region) from which he has never recovered.'

"Dr. D. B. Allen, surgeon, testifies that he did not keep a record, and can not call to mind any individual cases.

"Dr. Price testifies—

"'That he was sound prior to enlistment; that he prescribed for him August 28, 1862, for measles. Affiant was then acting as hospital steward. Remembers conversing with him at his home about his still suffering with pain in his back, result of army service during the summer of 1865. Has not treated him since service; has an impression of treating him at different times while in the service, but can't fix dates; has an indistinct recollection that the claimant reported at sick call at Helena, Ark., in December, 1862.'

"Dr. C. G. Lewis testifies—

"'That he kept no record and can not call to mind individual cases. That he treated claimant on the steamer Stephen Decatur on the way from Saint Louis, Mo., to Vicksburg, Miss., about December, 1862, for lame back, supposed to be the result of measles, from which he was just recovering.'

"Dr. Greenleaf testifies—

"'That he was claimant's physician prior to enlistment; saw him at Woodville, Ala., about February, 1864; conversed with him, and he complained of his back hurting him.'

"Dr. J. A. Maggood, examining surgeon at Wellington, March 31, 1882, certifies to his belief that the disability originated in the service and rates him at one-fourth total.

"The board at Harper, Kans., under date of April 1, 1885, rates him at $12 per month, and in addition says:

"'We find him suffering from nasal catarrh to such an extent as to completely destroy sense of smell; has also couple of pile tumors, which he says become much aggravated when he is suffering from retention of urine.'

"Reports from the Adjutant-General verify presence of all comrades who testify, and letters from postmasters substantiate the credibility of all affiants.

"Your committee are of the opinion that the claim is clearly established, and recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What amount of pension does this bill propose to grant?

Mr. PERKINS. It simply places the man upon the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. The rate will be fixed at the Pension Office, as in the case of other pensioners.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MICHAEL DALY.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call up the bill (S. 983) granting a pension to Michael Daly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Daly, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 983) granting a pension to Michael Daly, have examined the same, and adopt the Senate report thereon, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The facts in this case are fully stated in the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, during the Forty-eighth Congress (H. R. Report No. 1598), which we adopt as follows, and recommend the passage of the bill:

Soldier enlisted October 4, 1864, and served in Company B, Eleventh Wisconsin Infantry, until discharged, September 4, 1865.

Declaration for pension was filed July 1, 1881, claimant alleging that he was taken with chills and fever at Montgomery, Ala., about June, 1865, for which he was given large quantities of quinine and other drugs, which so affected him that he was taken with chorea.

Claim was rejected April 21, 1882, upon the ground that alleged disability was incurred since discharged from the service.

James M. Kelly (affidavit filed March 11, 1882), William Charlton (affidavit filed March 11, 1882), and Thomas Kelly (affidavit filed March 11, 1882), testify to soundness at and prior to enlistment.

Lieut. William Charlton, in affidavit filed March 11, 1882, testifies that claimant was a faithful soldier, and contracted his alleged disease (chorea) within one year after his discharge.

Comrade Thomas Mannion, in affidavit filed March 11, 1882, testifies that claimant was taken with fever and ague in June, 1865, while near Montgomery, Ala., and was treated by Surgeon Wilson, deceased. Claimant was sick with ague when he came home and since has been taken with chorea.

Comrade Thomas Kelly corroborates the above.

William Charlton, a resident of Madison, Dane County, Wisconsin, in an affidavit filed March 11, 1882, states that ever since their return from the service he has lived in the same town with claimant, and that claimant has steadily grown worse, and is at present unfitted for manual labor.

James M. Kelly, a resident of Madison, Wis., in an affidavit filed March 11, 1882, states that claimant has suffered from the disease of which he now complains ever since his return from the Army, and that he is now totally disabled.

Dr. William Fox, a resident of Milwaukee, Wis., in an affidavit filed March 11, 1882, states that he prescribed for claimant in 1872, for shaking palsy.

Dr. T. W. Evans, a resident of Madison, Wis., in an affidavit filed March 11, 1882, states that he has repeatedly prescribed for claimant during the past three years for pain in back, cramps, and spasmodic pain in the muscles. He has suffered from chorea during the period of affiant's acquaintance and has been totally disabled.

Although this claimant has no hospital record, still his lieutenant and two comrades testify to contraction of alleged disease in the service, and he has good evidence as to continuance of same ever since up to the present time.

The board of examining surgeons who examined claimant February 15, 1882, state that claimant, in their opinion, is totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from the cause stated—chorea, resulting from chills and fever. They also state that the disability is permanent, and in their opinion that said disability originated in the service and in line of duty. They state his disability as total.

Burr W. Jones, M. C., third Congressional district, Wisconsin, states that claimant is a resident of his city, Madison, Wis., and is in a helpless condition from progressive paralysis. The family are very poor and suffering, and they have no income except from the earnings of one daughter as a servant.

Taking into consideration all the evidence filed and the surgeon's certificate, the committee feel it their duty to report in favor of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON], or any other gentleman who may have charge of this bill, why the Pension Bureau here, upon the certificate of the board of surgeons, which is cited in the report, did not grant this man a pension. I do not profess to be familiar with the pension laws. I suppose very few members of the House are so. Hence I seek this information.

Mr. MATSON. All I know of this case I learn from the report, which was prepared by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS], who is not now present. If I remember the report correctly it states that the claim in this case was rejected at the Pension Bureau on the ground that the disability had been contracted since the expiration of the soldier's term of service.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But it appears in the report that since that rejection a board of physicians or surgeons convened, perhaps in Madison, Wis.—an examining board, I suppose, such as we are familiar with—delivered an opinion that the disability of the claimant was the result of sickness contracted during the war. Now, what is the defect in our pension laws that prevents this man from getting a pension, in view of that certification?

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, the board of pension examining surgeons are furnished with blanks upon which they make their certificates; and in one place the blank calls for a statement of opinion on their part as to whether the disease is likely to have resulted from military service. The opinion which the members of the board express is not based upon any hearing of evidence. It amounts to nothing more than an opinion from a physical examination of the applicant.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Which is subject to revision here?

Mr. MATSON. Oh, certainly. There is nothing conclusive about it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And that is accepted here only as an opinion, not as direct evidence.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will urge no objection to granting a pension in this case, though it was refused by the Pension Bureau in 1882. The man is, I have no doubt, a very worthy and a very suffering citizen, though as a soldier he entered the Army as late as October, 1864, and was never in battle, his only service consisting, perhaps, in being subjected to attacks of chills down in the cotton-belt. Notwithstanding the reflection cast upon the opinion of the examining board by the Pension Bureau, where their opinion is revised by competent surgeons, I do not dispute this man's claim to a pension. At the same time I do not believe he has rendered any measure of service that places the country under any particular obligation to him, for he never fought a battle or fired a gun.

But it is a strange thing for a man from the South, who lived on chills and fever part of his life, to say a few chills produced all these disastrous effects. I have known many cases of people who had chills, and never yet knew one who had the experience this applicant has had or who received such permanent and far-reaching effects.

I have no doubt the Pension Bureau was correct; but here is a case where there is undoubtedly a state of suffering. I dissent from these proceedings, and believe very many of these cases are impositions upon the honest pensioners. I will let this pass without further objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM P. SQUIRES.

Mr. SYMES. I call up bill (S. 1227) granting an increase of pension to William P. Squires.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitation of the pension laws, the name of William P. Squires, late of Company C, Seventy-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five" dollars per month.

The report of the committee (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1227) granting an increase of pension to William P. Squires, submit the following report:

The claimant enlisted August 9, 1862, and was discharged March 6, 1865. At battle of Stone River he received a gunshot wound in hand, destroying the usefulness of that member. Afterward, at Lovejoy Station, he was wounded in the left leg, making an amputation necessary. Gangrene set in, rendering it necessary to perform three subsequent amputations. He refused to receive a discharge and served until the close of the war.

Under the general law he can only receive a pension for the loss of the leg. This bill proposes to give claimant a pension of $50 per month. It is not shown that he required the personal attention of another person.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-five."

[Senate Report No. 261, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

We find that claimant enlisted August 9, 1862, and was discharged March 6, 1865; that he received a gunshot wound in his hand at the battle of Stone River, and afterward, at Lovejoy Station, he was wounded in the left leg, making necessary an amputation of that limb. Gangrene set in, rendering it necessary to perform three subsequent amputations. He is now receiving the pension allowed for the loss of that limb. The man refused to receive the discharge offered him after his first wound, and bravely continued in the service. He is clearly entitled to pension for both disabilities and we recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much pension is this man receiving now?

Mr. MORRILL. He is receiving $30 a month for the loss of a leg above the knee. He also lost a hand, but is not receiving anything therefor, because the Pension Office can not under existing law pension for both disabilities.

His leg was amputated, but gangrene set in and he was compelled to have it amputated twice more, destroying his physical health completely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He is a very gallant and meritorious man so far as the report is given of him. He is receiving now $30 a month?

Mr. MORRILL. There is no rate between $30 a month and $50 a month. The man who lost a leg above the knee or an arm above the elbow is pensioned at $30 a month. For total disability—total inability to perform manual labor—the pension is $50 a month. There is no rate between $30 and $50. This man does not require the attention of one person all the time, and therefore we have fixed the rate at $45 a month, the law allowing where the attention of one person is required all the time $50 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Has this man a family?

Mr. MORRILL. He has.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How many children?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know; two or three.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Are they dependent upon him?

Mr. MORRILL. He is a poor man and has nothing to live upon but his pension.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much did he make when in full health?

Mr. MORRILL. He is a bright, intelligent man, who would make a living anywhere if he was able to perform any duty.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What was his rank during the war?

Mr. MORRILL. I saw the man when he was here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the law is liberal enough.

Mr. MORRILL. This man lost not only a leg, but he lost a hand. The man who lost a leg by amputation gets $30 a month.

Mr. MATSON. I agree with the gentleman from Arkansas, the law is liberal for a man who lost a leg. This case is another thing, and the law is deficient in not providing for it. He has not only lost a leg, but he has also lost a hand. The bill has not granted him a total disability pension, such as is granted in cases requiring the aid and assistance of another person, but only $45 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Why does not the law make provision of the kind suggested?

Mr. MATSON. I have had a bill prepared, and have had for some time, to remedy the defect in the law.

I think it is manifestly unjust that a man who has a leg off and other wounds should only receive the same pension as one who has only lost a leg; but such is the law, and we have been passing these special cases for relief. It seems when a man who has lost a leg and hand he is more deserving than the man who has merely lost a leg.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Do you uniformly fix the amount at $45 when you pass such bills?

Mr. MATSON. We have graded them according to the degree of disability, as shown by the medical examination. Sometimes $45. This evening, for instance, we passed a bill raising a pension from $24 to $30 a month in the case of a soldier who had one leg wounded and the ball passed through the other foot, practically disabling him completely. In each case, however, we try to regulate the pension by the degree of disability shown in the medical testimony. In this case this man has had not only the wound in his foot which required amputation, and the subsequent additional amputations owing to the improper healing of the stump, three amputations in all, which completely shattered his general health, but he had the gunshot wound in his hand, completely disabling that, and so we fixed the amount at $45—not quite up to the standard of entire disability.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I understand this to be a Senate bill fixing the amount of the pension in this case at $50 a month, and the committee here propose to amend it by reducing the amount to $45.

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am opposed to the amendment under the circumstances. This is a case where the soldier lost a leg and one arm.

Mr. MORRILL. No; lost a hand.
